Down, down towards the ocean,
With ceaseless commotion,
It starts on its mission of woe to each home.

Mr. Moore was born in Kentucky in 1832 and has been actively engaged in the ministry and Christian publishing work for over fifty years. He was a resident of England for eighteen years, having been sent there on missionary work. For a number of years he has been a resident of Columbia, Mo., where he is dean emeritus of the Bible College. He is the author of several books and has been a contributor all his life, as he is at the present time, to religious publications.

His book, "At Seventy-Five and Other Poems," will, no doubt, be well received, as is deserving of a good work. The typographical work on the volume is a tribute to the printer's and publisher's art. The book is illustrated with pictures of the author from 18 years of age to the present time.

Heroes and Heroism in Common Life. By N. McGee Waters. New York. Thomas Y. Crowell & Company, publishers. 350 pages. 12 mo. Cloth. Price $1.25.

This book indicates a healthful reaction from the rush and bustle of city life to the quiet retreat of the country and the farm. The author in a very happy way conducts us back to "The Abandoned Farm," to "A Garden of Old-Fashioned Flowers," and to many a scene familiar to those who were raised in the country. The book is wholly healthful in tone and sentiment and its thoughtful reading will make any man or woman better.

The Year of Grace. By George Hodges, Dean of the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, Mass. Thomas Whittaker, publisher. New York. Price $1 net.

This volume is a series of sermons by Dean Hodges on such themes as "Knowing the Time"; "The Inspired Book"; "The Call to the Ministry"; "Faith and Salvation"; "Hope and Progress"; "The Kingdom of God"; "The Spirit of Truth," etc. These sermons are conceived in the light of modern scholarship, but are reverent in tone, evangelical in spirit and quickening in their fine thought. The average reader will not endorse all that Dean Hodges says, but he will find much to stimulate him to better thinking.

This Mystical Life of Ours. By Ralph Waldo Trine. Thomas Y. Crowell & Company, publishers, New York. $1 net. 190 pages.

It is, perhaps, enough to say of this book that it is by the author of "In Tune With the Infinite," "What All the World's A-Seeking" and others in his series of "Life Books." This volume, indeed, is made up of extracts from his former works, and is prepared for a gift book, containing a chapter for each week in the year. It is the garnered grain of the author's best writing, and that is only to say that it is a moral and spiritual tonic to any thoughtful reader. The age needs emphasis on the spiritual and the invisible, as the real and the enduring. Such emphasis is given in this volume, as indeed in all the writings of the author. It is thought, he tells us, that builds character and moulds destiny. What we think in our hearts, that we are. If the author carries this idea to what some may think an unwarranted degree, it will at least serve to bring into prominence a truth that has been too much neglected in our methods of training and education.

To-day in the Land of To-morrow. A Study of Mexico. By Jasper T. Moses. Christian Publishing Company. $1.

To the immediate south of the United States lies one of the most interesting countries in the world. Mexico, the land of Cortez and Aztecs, of Hidalgo and Santa Ana, of poor Carlotta and Maximillian, is now the new land of Diaz. It is a land of history, and a land of great contrasts in class distinction, but little race hatred. But it is a land of infinite possibilities. This is what impresses the American who has watched the course of events during the past ten years, especially. American capital has been poured into the country, and to-morrow is really to be great day for Mexico.

Jasper T. Moses, who dictates this book to his mother, the President of our C. W. B. M., and to Thomas M. Westrupp, our pioneer missionary to Mexico, gives us an admirable picture of the country and its people. There is an account of Protestant missions in Mexico and a special chapter on the work of the Disciples of Christ. Abundant and good illustrations add to the interest of a book that should have a large circulation.

Any book reviewed in these columns (except "net" books) will be sent postpaid by The Christian Publishing Company, St. Louis, on receipt of the published price. For "net" books, add ten per cent for postage.

MY SOUL.

My Soul stood bared to the sight of men,
My Soul stood firm: it knew no fear,
For the blame of man could not be just,
The mind of man could not understand.

My Soul stood bare in the sight of a child,
It stood condemned: for it stood perceived,
For the blame of a child is the blame of Truth,
Tho' the heart of a child may not understand.

My Soul stood bare in the sight of God,
And my Soul rejoiced in its helplessness,
For the blame of God was forgiveness,
The Mercy of God could understand.

Chapter XVI.—A Modern Timothy's Training.

One of the most precious influences of a godly education is, not so much the knowledge of what the Bible contains, as the consent of the heart to take God's Word as the standard of good and evil, and the desire to let it decide in every choice.—Andrew Murray.

James had finished his college work at Eaton and had also gone through one of the theological seminaries of the East. At the close of his work he applied to the Board of Foreign Missions, to be sent to the field that needed him most. But upon looking up his record they found that his professors could not recommend him, because he had not shown a tendency to accept the creed of the church without a question, and had insisted upon holding the faith of his mother. He then turned his attention to the home mission field, but found the door shut against him there for the same reason.

A telegram from President Brown came to him as he was suffering deep pangs of disappointment over these rebuffs. It read:

"Come to Middleton without delay. We have work for you, looking both to home and foreign missions. Your expense money awaits you at the Boston National Bank. —Brown."

This was good news to James, the best he had ever had, it seemed. And yet he had professed to be averse to the new movement, since his training away from Dr. Brown for the past seven years had rather changed his mind toward the teachings as he had heard them at Eaton and against such movements in general. He had unconsciously imbibed, through his contact with Eastern theologians, a tendency to criticise everything that was not in line with a well-established order of their holding, and yet he had not found their creeds fully in harmony with his faith. When the test questions were put to him he was prompted by conscience to answer them in accordance with his mother's teachings and what he deemed to be the will of God, regardless of the fact that several of his answers were positively in contradiction to what he had been taught in the seminary, and to what he knew the creeds contained. In fact, he knew that some of his professors taught wide of the ancient landmarks as laid down in the established doctrines, and he did not fully agree with either. And as a matter of fact he was obliged to state plainly his own holdings and take the consequences.

An instance of his keen examination of every teaching that passed before him, and his old tendency to take a stand for the truth as he understood it, was had in a controversy with one of his professors on the question of ultimate authority. Did God act because right and truth were ultimate, or did God's act give the accomplished thing its character? James held to the latter, that God's act made right and God's word was always truth, regardless of the standards or decrees outside of the Divine will. Right was right and truth was truth, because God had willed them so, and that his will was the ultimate authority in all the universe. James was well versed in the Scriptures, and could quote scores of passages from the Word to substantiate his position, while the professor had simply his own reasonings and the citations of other theologians to appeal to. So the class was divided as to their opinions. If the Scripture was reliable and to be taken as ultimate reference, then James had the best of the position. But the teachings of the forefathers and the smooth logic of the professor seemed to them to bear great weight upon the question, and so James was again left in the minority. From that time the professor held a feeling not just cordial, and yet it could not be called unfriendly; yet when the question of being sent to the foreign field was presented to him as one of the Prudential committee, he objected without giving any clear reason other than that he did not consider him well grounded in the faith nor exactly well balanced, although a very good fellow of keen observation, yet not a safe man to entrust with such vital interests as a mission would involve.

In scriptural criticism James had uncertain standing also with his teachers, since he took the firm position of a verbal inspiration and challenged his fellows to stand by the word of God as a product of the Divine mind, which inbreathed men by the Holy Spirit had faithfully transmitted to us as the will of God. This did not conduce to harmony, since the teacher was strongly inclined to what is known as "Higher Criticism" views along the line of scriptural inspiration.

One day the professor was making some facetious remarks about the "big fish story," ending his lecture by saying: "Without doubt Jonah was a mythological character, chosen to teach a moral lesson in that time; for it is preposterous to believe that a fish really did swallow a man and then belched him out three days after, alive and able to continue his journey."

"Is it not still a harder thing to believe," asked James, "that a man who was actually killed, his blood spilled and he put into a sepulchre and a great stone rolled against the door, sealed and guarded by soldiers, should rise the third day and show himself by many infallible proofs to the faithful witnesses who were chosen by him to tell the story?"

A pause ensued and James began again: "Is it not remarkable that Christ, who thus was declared to be the Son of God, should have taken the Jonah myth to have foretold his own humiliation and exaltation through the tomb? Can it be, professor, that Jesus Christ, the Son of God, did not know that Jonah was only a mythical character when he said: 'As Jonah was three days and three nights in the belly of the sea monster, so shall the Son of man be in the heart of the earth?' Perhaps if the type is only a myth the antitype is also a myth. But Jesus said that it was a sign, and called the character whom you have just pronounced mythical Jonah the Prophet. By what rule are we to judge, professor, as to whether anything is reliable or not? If the Son of God did not know what he was talking about, how are we to trust that you know?"

Some were amused and some were indignant at James' apparent discourtesy to his professor. But the earnest and steadfast gaze of his pupil led the professor to understand that he was not trifling, nor could the questions be answered without a retraction of what he had said. Just then a call of some distinguished visitors broke the spell, and the class was dismissed without an attempt at an explanation. The professor never brought the question up again, and was more careful not to tread rashly over such subjects in his future discourses. It was evident that his lectures after that were stripped of many such things, for they appeared to be disconnected and "rather thin," as the other students noted.

James had one year's experience in what was called at the seminary "a calf pasture pastorate." Such were the churches where students were permitted to preach during their last year of study.

Jennings was a small town of about 400 people, which could be reached by train in less than a day's ride. Here he spent his Sunday vacations, earnestly seeking to lead them into the deeper things and to rescue the lost from sin. He found that the town was actually over-churched and proselyted into many haggard sets of sects, and that the sincere milk of the Word was not desired, but rather, having been accustomed to sensational and clap-trap methods, they continued to look for them, and so were kept in a constant unsettled expectation. Such a community could not be reached with the gospel, but was a prey to every vulture-like organization and traveling show that came along, from the emissaries of Brigham Young to the latest fraternity insurance company that had not gone the way of its predecessors. In all there were some nineteen secret fraternity lodges and seven church organizations, with six buildings dedicated to their use. But there was not an organized church in the place that was self-supporting, nor one that kept up regular prayer-meetings and Sunday services, with other activities such as live churches should.

The men spent their time in the saloons, upon the streets, at horse racing, curling matches and other sports in their season, while the women played progressive euchre, gossiped from house to house and attended the sports with the rest of the element.

James was moved to desperate methods when he saw the town given up to such idolatry, and he began to preach against it. For a time large congregations flocked to hear his flaming messages, but jealousy actuated some in the other churches, and also some being nettled by his plain language, began a campaign of underhanded work to turn his congregations away from him. Taking some of his statements apart from their connection, they peddled them about in an unfavorable light. The saloons were also stirred up against him, because he protested against their accursed work. If he preached the severe side of the gospel and insisted upon Christians observing the plain requirements of the Word, some other pastor was sure to use the same subject in palliating the evils of the community, and bid for his congregations by advertising that they would do so.

Strange that it is so, but the children of this world are wiser than the professed children of light. Instead of co-operation and concerted action, there was separation, strife and jealousy amongst the churches almost constantly, and the evil one loved to have it so; no doubt he planned it himself.

During a winter's vacation James began a series of meetings, and invited his contemporary pastor, the only one then living in the place, to unite with him. But his brother minister claimed the right of way, and sent for an evangelist to hold a series of meetings in his own church. James saw the situation, but did not think best to give way until his church voted it down and closed his meetings, just as some of the young people were becoming seriously interested in his presentation of the gospel. He went over to the other church and offered to assist in leading souls to Christ there, but they snubbed him at every opportunity. The evangelist, being prompted by the pastor, took occasion to drive at him by making reference to certain extreme positions which he had taken, and then showing them up in a most unfavorable light. After this he was not called upon to pray or take any part whatever. While the tough element did not respect James for his severe arraignment of their sins, yet they did not approve of such methods, and they began to do all kinds of devilish things to detract from the meetings and to keep the young people from being led to Christ. They organized a dancing party to meet every night near by, and by the saloon men's help put in every attraction possible to draw away the serious minded from the meetings, until the company at the church grew so small that it became well-nigh impossible to conduct the singing, and so they closed. Thus the town became more dead than ever to things spiritual, but very much alive to sin.

He then began to write some articles in which he showed up the sick spots in their municipal and social life. Many more were offended, even his own church members refusing to hear him preach any more.

Finally his time was up and he bade adieu to the town and its unsavory conditions, with less than half of the salary upon which they had agreed having been paid to him. They had arranged the minutes of his call to correspond to the minimum subscription list, but the spokesman of the meeting had given him to understand that he was called upon the maximum estimate of what they expected to raise; but as it was never raised he was presented with the minimum amount and referred to the minutes, which he had known nothing of before, but had to abide by it as he did not wish to make trouble. The church reported the pastor paid in full, and referred to their minutes as proof of the same at their annual meeting, and so went on record as being a covenant-keeping church. But they gave their young pastor a poor recommendation, upon which he was measured by the missionary committees with the rest of his failings.

The call to Middleton came just in the nick of time, when he was best prepared to appreciate it and put away his critical disposition and enter into the plans of President Brown, for he was positively at the end of everything so far as he could see, being out of money and friends as well.

Charcoal Stops Gas On Your Stomach.

Wonderful Absorbing Power of Charcoal When Taken in the Form of Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges.

Trial Package Sent Free.

Charcoal, pure, simple charcoal, absorbs 100 times its own volume of gas. Where does the gas go to? It is just absorbed by the charcoal,—the gas disappears and there is left a pure, fresh, sweet atmosphere, free from all impurities and germs.

That's what happens in your stomach when you take one or two of Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges, the most powerful purifiers science has yet discovered.

You belch gas in company, sometimes, by accident, greatly to your own humiliation. That is because there is a great amount of gas being formed in your stomach by fermenting food. Your stomach is not digesting your food properly. Gas is inevitable. Whenever this happens, just take one or two of Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges right after eating, and you will be surprised how quickly they will act. No more belchings; no more sour risings. Eat all you want and what you want, and then if there is any gas going to be formed, one of these wonderful little absorbers, a Stuart Charcoal Lozenge, will take care of all the gas.

And it will do more than that. Every particle of impurity in your stomach and intestines is going to be carried away by the charcoal. No one seems to know why it does this, but it does, and does it wonderfully. You notice the difference in your appetite, general good feeling, and in the purity of your blood, right away.

You'll have no more bad taste in your mouth or bad breath, either from drinking, eating or smoking. Other people will notice your bad breath quicker than you will yourself. Make your breath pure, so when you talk to others you won't disgust them. Just one or two Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges will make your breath sweet, and make you feel better all over for it. You can eat all the onions and odorous foods you want, and no one can tell the difference.

Besides, charcoal is the best laxative made. You can take a whole boxful and no harm will result. It is a wonderfully easy regulator.

And then, too, it filters your blood—every particle of poison or impurity in your blood is destroyed, and you begin to notice the difference in your face first thing,—your clear complexion.

Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges are made from pure willow charcoal, and just a little honey is put in to make them palatable, but not too sweet.

They will work wonders in your stomach, and make you feel fine and fresh. Your blood and breath will be purified.

We want to prove all this to you, so just send for a free sample today. Then after you get it and use it, you will like them so well that you will go to your druggist and get a 25c box of these Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges.

Send us your name and address today, and we will at once send you by mail a sample package free. Address F. A. Stuart Co., 200 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

The Backwards Road.

I know that somewhere there must be A Backwards Road,
A road like this,
Leading to all old lovely times,
Picnics last year, forgotten rhymes,
And dolls I used to kiss.

But every road beneath my feet
Leads farther off
From yesterday;
And when I creep into my bed
I feel it rock beneath my head
Like ships upon their way.

If I could only find that Road,
The Backwards Road,
How quick I'd walk,
And change the naughty things I've done,
Pick up my playthings one by one,
And hear the baby talk.

Old Sweet Springs.

In the mountains of West Virginia, which are not as well known to the country at large as they deserve to be, are many lovely spots, that are summer resorts as well as beautiful resting places in spring and fall. Old Sweet Springs is such a place. It is far above the sea level, and there has been a hotel there ever since 1792. George and Martha Washington spent the summer of 1797 there, and there Jerome Bonaparte met Elizabeth Patterson. There, too, is still standing the "Lewis Cottage," said to have been the first house erected west of the Alleghanies. There is a golf course at Old Sweet Springs, which is said to be very fine; anyway, there is a mint patch by the brook. The springs themselves are believed to cure nearly everything, including dandruff! Without vouching for this latter fact, doubtless if you play golf every day without a hat, they will help.—The Travel Magazine.

Terrible Candor.

A parent standing with her child outside the church said, "I didn't think much of that sermon." To which the intelligent child replied, "Well, but, mother you only paid a penny for it, and for the whole service as well."

"When Nellie Makes Fifteen a Week."

In days gone by, mothers planning for the future would say: "When Nellie is married we will do so and so." To-day they say. "When Nellie has a good position or makes fifteen a week I will do this or that." The old-fashioned mother pointed with pride to the daughter happily married, mistress of her own well-managed home. To-day the power in the household to whom all bow is the daughter who earns the largest salary.

Many mothers frankly admit that it does not pay to train daughters in housewifely habits. The girl who is to be in business should not be troubled with domestic matters. Instead of teaching the girl how to dust, mend or cook, before and after school hours, the mother dictates shorthand exercises.

Is it remarkable that the girl accepts her mother's view? Surely this mother, drudging more or less patiently at home while the daughter is preparing for business, must know whereof she speaks when she says her child shall never lead the narrow life that has been hers? Is it strange that the girl sees the domestic life through distorted lenses, and decides in favor of a life of individual and absolute independence?

Not until the wage-earning women of the present generation have married and reckoned the full measure of their loss will a second, or perhaps a third, generation of daughters be taught to choose intelligently between the domestic and the business life. Not until thousands of women have scored either failure or deadening mediocrity in wage earning will girls be taught that there is drudgery in the factory, store or office as well as in the kitchen. Until mothers learn this by actual experience daughters will continue to fling themselves recklessly, unadvisedly into the maelstrom of business life.—Woman's Home Companion.

Reminders.

Appreciation is itself a sort of inspiration.

The soul's homesickness is a sign of sanity.

Yesterday must ever be the teacher of to-day.

Many of the world's pains are "growing pains."

This is not a "fallen world;" it is a rising world.

Obedience is a key-word to all progress and growth.

Jesus was awarded a cross for lifting his voice against the evils of his day.

No man finds his rightful place in life until he finds the place God meant for him.

To love the beauty of another soul is the beginning of beauty in one's own soul.

Character, like a cube, is a thing of three dimensions—length, breadth and height.

The only part of a man's career to be finally remembered will be the part which he lives to God.

Pocahontas.

Some historians have said that the little Indian Princess Pocahontas did more to influence the fate of the western continent than any other woman in the world except Queen Isabella. The life of this Indian girl makes a strange appeal to the imagination. Her unselfish devotion, superhuman courage, womanly compassion, youth, sincerity, love and self-control go to make a character which is romantic beyond any ideal creation of the poet or romancer, and illustrate the truth of the old saying that fact is stranger than fiction. The dramatic moment the sculptor has seized upon is that which represents Pocahontas as she stands before Captain John Smith and his heroic band, and, with outstretched hands and trembling lips, bids them save themselves from the danger which threatens them.

The savages, after a trial and powwow, had dragged Smith to two great stones which had been placed before Powhatan, being ready with their clubs to beat out his brains; but Pocahontas, "when no entreaty could prevail, got his head in her arms and laid her own upon his to save him from his death." At this date Pocahontas was not more than twelve years of age. She repeatedly stood between her father's savage nature and the white man at the risk of her own life.

Such is the picture which the sculptor has endeavored to place before the mind and eye of the beholder who visits Jamestown, Va., and beholds the new bronze statue which the daughters of the Pocahontas Association and the Daughters of the Revolution have placed there.—The Circle.

THE BEST ICE-CREAM

Companionable People.

By Emily Huntington Miller.

The very word, companionable, commends itself to the ear with a sort of resonant harmony that carries the assurance of what the old divines called "excellent meanings."

One may be good company through the ability to amuse, to divert, or to instruct, yet be no more than a retailer of good stories; or a fluent after-dinner talker; but to be companionable is not so much dole for others as riches for one's self. It is the ability to come into sympathetic touch with any environment; to establish instantaneous communication with man or nature, animate or inanimate, without any clumsy machinery of wires and batteries.

For true companionableness look at Robert Louis Stevenson, at home with the light-hearted artists at Fontainebleau, and with the squalid emigrants in the steerage of the steamship, in the rush and reek of city streets, and the silence of the mountains and unmarred forests; enjoying the complacent stupidity of the commissary who arrests his inland voyage, and moved to inextinguishable laughter by the appeals of a small white donkey tied by the roadside; in close touch with the deepest philosophy and the highest thought, yet with an intuitive comprehension of the South Sea Islander in his ghost-haunted world of superstitious terrors and childish delights. He carried the key of the universe in his bosom and all doors opened before him.

To be companionable is probably less gift than acquirement, though one must have been born with the capacity to make the acquirement possible; yet it is not a single quality, like a good memory, or a bad temper. Rather is it the happy result of a number of excellencies combined in fortunate proportions.

Would not the first be a certain keenness of the senses, an alertness of eye and ear that lets nothing flash by unnoted, a sensitiveness to small signals and atmospheric changes, and a skill at interpreting tongues not amenable to classical translation? A man thus equipped would never be beyond the possibility of new revelation, or of fresh insight to some familiar one. A clairvoyant reading of things expressed, an intuitive grasp of things unexplained, enables him to add the quickness of instinct to the subtlety of reason, making him the comrade of bird, beast and flower, no less than of man.

Perhaps a sympathetic nature should come next in an elemental analysis—not the ability to weep or rejoice as your neighbor sets the tune, which usually means no more than that your own emotions lie near the surface and are easily stirred by your environment—but the fixed habit of taking your neighbor's view of things by looking at them from his standpoint. You may not share his feelings, but you share his point of view, and from that position his frame of mind is understandable. The mother who kisses and soothes the doll with a bumped head, does not share her child's distress at the accident; she is sympathetic enough to take for the moment the baby's point of view without attempting to bring the baby to hers—the fatal mistake with too many of us.

"She's reasonable," says one of the dwellers in idyllic Oldfield—"she will have her own way, but she's willing you should have yours—most folks want their own way and yours too." This is too much to pay even for sympathy.

Next I would name a sense of humor; so many dull and dreadful things may be changed beyond recognition by its luminous atmosphere. And certainly one must be an optimist. I question if a pessimist can really possess a sense of humor unless it be of that grim sort, built upon the satisfaction of arriving at a conclusion before fate herself, and greeting her as an expected guest where she had planned a surprise.

For a persistent optimist, fairly reveling in his ability to come up smiling from the ugliest blows, to see hope beyond the blackest horizon, to wrest content out of the most grudging fortune, and at the worst to fall back undaunted upon a sense of humor that could never be dulled, commend me to Stevenson, most companionable of men.

And since he has spoken of "the companionable silence of the trees," let us add to our analysis one more element—the grace of silence—to be satisfied without saying all one means.

A book may easily be too garrulous, explaining and accounting for everything, instead of tempting one by delicate suggestion to discover another aspect of an idea, or, forsaking the main road altogether, to strike into an alluring by-path leading to some unexplored region. The too talkative book may be closed and laid upon the table or tossed into a convenient thicket; the friend who perpetually offers an opinion or a sentiment and adds insult to injury by demanding, "Don't you think so?" can not be dealt with in the same fashion, and is a device of the adversary to rid you, at one swoop, of all the Christian virtues.

Companionable silence! Words eloquent of meaning to all who find rest and healing in that great Mother Nature who goes on her way without noticing you, or taking you into account—pouring out her sunshine, moving the tides of her sweet air, shifting her panoramas of morning and evening without a care for you or your pretty moods, yet with a silence that does not shut you out but folds you in—a happy atom, basking in the warm spaciousness of the universe.

Would you take a friend with you into this domain of the blessed? Choose Stevenson to share your camp-fire or your forest bivouac. Let David, and Alan, and Prince Otto and all the motley host of his creation stay at home to wait your leisure in the library, but invite to your solitude the man himself in his reminiscences of travel by land and sea, in his delightful philosophizing concerning reading of that book of books, the heart of a child, and, best of all, his companionable silence.—Interior.

The Little Voyager.

O, the ways are many to Drowsy Land,
Some one, I know, would try them all.
'Tis hey, to-night for a big balloon;
Big and round, like a silver ball.
Up through the dark it swings along.
Blown by the night wind's rustling song.

Slowly it sways and swings this way,
Poising at last, just overhead
When down drops a glimmering rope of light,
And anchors it safe to a tiny bed;
And climbing the ladder of silver beams,
Some one embarks for the Land of Dreams.

All through the night, in the shining thing,
Silent they float through the cool, sweet dark.
Reeds they dip in the foamy clouds,
Where the summer lightnings glint and spark;
And east and west, o'er the wind-swept sky,
The twinkling, golden bubbles fly.

Do you ask me how Some One comes home again?
When deep in the West dips the silver sphere?
O, never a thought do I give to that,
Perhaps the sun is the charioteer.
I only know that the tiny bed
Pillows each morning a golden head.

A Bulgarian Shepherd Boy.

A little hut in Bulgaria, made of mud and stone, was Pluck's home, and his father was so poor that he could hardly get food enough for his large family. Their clothes cost little, as they all wore sheepskins, made up with the wool outside.

Pluck was a bright, ambitious boy, with a great desire for study, and, when he heard of Roberts College at Constantinople, he determined to go there. He told his father one day, when they were away together tending sheep, that he had decided to go to college.

The poor shepherd looked at his son in amazement, and said: "You can't go to college; it's all I can do to feed you children. I can't give you a piaster."

"I don't want a piaster," Pluck replied; "but I do want to go to college."

"Besides," she shepherd continued, "you can't go to college in sheepskins."

But Pluck had made up his mind, and he went—in sheepskins and without a piaster.

He trudged sturdily on day by day, until he reached Constantinople. He soon found his way to the college and inquired for the president.

Pluck asked for work, but the president kindly told him he must go away.

"Oh, no," said Pluck; "I can't do that. I didn't come here to go away."

When the president insisted, Pluck's answer was the same, "I didn't come here to go away."

He had no idea of giving up. "The king of France, with 40,000 men, went up a hill, and then came down again," but it was no part of Pluck's plan to go marching home again; and three hours later the president saw him in the yard, patiently waiting.

Some of the students advised Pluck to see Prof. Long. "He knows all about you Bulgarian fellows," they said.

The professor, like the president, said there was no work for him and he had better go away. But Pluck bravely stuck to his text, "I didn't come here to go away."

The boy's courage and perseverance pleased the professor so much that he urged the president to give Pluck a trial. So it was decided that he should take care of the fires. This meant carrying wood, and a great deal of it, up three or four flights of stairs, taking away the ashes, and keeping all things neat and in order.

After a few days, as Pluck showed no signs of weakening, the president went to him and said: "My poor boy, you can not stay here this winter. The room is not comfortable, and I have no other to give you." "Oh, I'm perfectly satisfied," Pluck replied. "It's the best room I ever had in my life. I didn't come here to go away."

Evidently there was no getting rid of Pluck, and he was allowed to stay. After he had gained his point, he settled down to business, and asked some of the students to help him with his lessons in the evenings. They formed a party of six, so none of the boys found it a burden to help Pluck one evening a week.

After some weeks he asked to be examined to enter the preparatory class.

"Do you expect," asked the president, "to compete with those boys who have many weeks the start of you? And," he continued, "you can't go into class in sheepskins—all the boys would cry 'Baa'!"

"Yes, sir, I know," Pluck said, "but the boys have promised to help me out. One will give me a coat, another a pair of trousers, and so on."

Although Pluck had passed the examination, he had no money, and the rules of the college required each student to pay $200 a year.

"I wish," said Prof. Long, "that this college would hire Pluck to help me in the laboratory and give him a hundred dollars a year."

Pluck became the professor's assistant. But where was the other hundred coming from?

President Washburn sent an account of Pluck's poverty and great desire for an education to Dr. Hamlin, the ex-president of Roberts College, who was in America. The doctor told the story to a friend one day, and she was so interested that she said: "I would like to give the other hundred."

A boy who had so strong a will was sure to find a way.—Child's Companion.

Married Folks, Keep House.

Furnished rooms, boarding-houses and hotels can never be true "homes" for married people. At their best they are but substitutes, not equivalents. They lack the sense of possession, of privacy, of permanency and of personality that gives an atmosphere of peace and sacredness to a home of one's own, no matter how small, how modest and plain it may be. They bear the same relation to real homes that an incubator does to a hen,—a mechanical imitation of a living reality.—The Delineator.

Union Gospel Songs

With the assistance of singing Evangelist Leonard Daugherty and J. H. Rosecrans we have prepared a new song book that constitutes one of the best offerings we have yet made to the psalmody of the church.

It is called Union Gospel Songs because it unites in itself the best of the best old songs, as well as the most helpful and popular of the newer candidates for popular favor—234 in all; and also because it unites features making it equally valuable for regular church work as well as for the Bible school, prayer-meeting and evangelistic services.

No expense has been spared in securing copyrights of desirable music and in sending forth strongly and handsomely bound volumes.

Limp Cloth—25 cts. per copy, postpaid; $16 per 100, not prepaid.
Board—30 cts. per copy, postpaid; $20 per 100 not prepaid.
Cloth—35 cts. per copy, postpaid; $3.50 per doz. not prepaid; $25 per 100, not prepaid.

The space usually accorded a self-laudatory preface, the Editors have modestly given to the Doxology and The Lord Is In His Temple.

The merits of this book predict it will quickly come into widespread usefulness. We wish to accelerate this movement. Samples will be sent on application, on condition they be returned if order does not follow.

"I'll Pay You for That."

This little parable by an unknown author teaches its own lesson:

A hen trod on a duck's foot. She did not mean to do it, and it did not hurt the duck much; but the duck said, "I'll pay you for that." So the duck flew at the old hen, but as she did so her wings struck an old goose, who stood close by.

"I'll pay you for that!" cried the goose, and she flew at the duck; but as she did so her foot tore the fur of a cat who was just then in the yard.

"I'll pay you for that!" cried the cat, and she started for the goose; but as she did so her foot caught in the wool of a sheep.

"I'll pay you for that!" cried the sheep, and she ran at the cat; but as she did so her foot hit the foot of a dog who lay in the sun.

"I'll pay you for that!" cried he, and jumped at the sheep; but as he did so his leg struck an old cow who stood by the gate.

"I'll pay you for that!" cried she, and she ran at the dog; but as she did so her horn grazed the skin of a horse who stood by a tree.

"I'll pay you for that!" cried he, and he rushed at the cow.

What a noise there was! The horse flew at the cow, and the cow at the dog, and the dog at the sheep, and the sheep at the cat, and the cat at the goose, and the goose at the duck, and the duck at the hen. What a fuss there was! And all because the hen accidentally stepped on the duck's toes.

"Hi! Hi! What's all this?" cried the man who had the care of them. "You may stay here," he said to the hen; but he drove the duck to the pond, the goose to the field, the cat to the barn, the sheep to her fold, the dog to the house, the cow to her yard, and the horse to his stall. And so all their good times were over because the duck would not overlook a little hurt which was not intended.

"A little explained,
A little endured,
A little forgiven,
The quarrel is cured."

A New Scheme for Raising Money.

A new scheme has recently been devised for raising money in a Sunday-school. It is a "Foot of Pennies." Strips of paper are covered with glue on one side. You moisten the glue and stick pennies on until they measure a foot. Then you bring your "Foot of Pennies" to the treasurer of the school, and get another glued strip of paper. The aim is for all to keep at it until the united efforts make a strip a mile long, 5,280 feet.

Quietness comes from a lot of doing all taken together, I guess. Maybe no person alone can have it. It's like a river. The more water there is, the stiller every drop rolls along, and it's only the little brook that makes such a fuss and clatter.—Selected.

If—; Then

IF the new pastor
- Goes to his charge immediately and cheerfully;
- Refrains from an immediate attempt to unnaturally boost the salary;
- Has nothing but kind words for his predecessor and his family;
- Makes no disparaging comparisons about the parsonage and town;
- Immediately launches out among the people;
- Gets acquainted with the children;
- Puts himself in touch with the community's civic life;
- Prayerfully plans for a revival;
- And sticks manfully to his job.

IF the congregation
- Willingly lays aside all unpleasantness of the year;
- Receives their pastor with a glad hand and a cheering welcome,
- Refrains from telling him how their former pastor did things;
- Backs him up with their presence at the appointed means of grace;
- Believes he is sent of God to minister to them in things spiritual;
- Prays for him, and stands ready to co-operate with him in revival effort;

THEN
- Nothing can keep the year which both are now facing from being a success, for God's blessing will be in it.

ST. LOUIS, OCTOBER 17, 1907.

A PRAYER.

By Thomas Curtis Clark.

GIVE Thou, O Lord, more joy, more pain,
Thy will shall sov'reign be;
But let life be a blended strain
Of varied harmony.

With darker threads weave too, we pray,
The silver and the gold;
Life's pattern, then, in that last Day,
Shall richest beauties hold.

Let every cloud be pierc'ed through
With some bright rays of light;
If Thou canst not give heaven's blue,
Let some stars cheer the night.

And yet 'tis not for us to mete
Our share of joy, of pain;
If 'tis Thy will, fit us to greet
Less sunshine and more rain.

Beautiful Joe. By Marshall Saunders. Price $1.25. Five hundred thousand copies of this classic animal story have been sold. Do you want any further testimony as to its worth? WHAT FRIENDS ARE SAYING.

Have just finished reading "Christian Union," by Bro. J. H. Garrison, and wish to thank your company for the service it has rendered our brotherhood in publishing this book. It is the most helpful one on the subject I have ever read. To my mind it presents the error of denominationalism while keeping clear of sectarian seclusiveness. I wish it were possible to place this book in the hands of every denominational minister. It would hasten the day when the church would be found in world-wide visible fellowship. Ernest J. Friends With God

By Frank Waller Allen

"Who shall ascend into the hill of Jehovah?
He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart."

The very sublimest type of religious life is to be upon congenial terms with God. To believe only is not necessarily to be at all religious. There be many men of vile hearts and vicious habits who have never doubted Jesus as being the Christ. Neither is proving the sincerity of our belief by the good work of our hands the final test of our Christianity. One may have faith in the virtues of a man, serve him even after the example of the good Samaritan, and yet find companionship impossible because of a lack of common interests, like ambitions and similar ideals. For this reason one's most sympathetic friends are not always in one's family, and those with whom we are nearest in harmony frequently enter our lives as passing strangers. We meet a new personality with expectant minds, look into his heart and discover that we love the same things in life, in death, in the afterwhile, and straightway there is born a friendship that the intimacies of the years can but strengthen.

Just as we are ambitious to make friendships with the men and women who are doing things in the world's work that are after our own heart's desire, so, as followers of Jesus, should we be inspired with an aspiration to walk with God, enjoying an intimate and sympathetic relationship. And instinctively the questions come: Who shall be the companion of God? What makes congeniality between man and his Maker? How shall we get in harmony with the Infinite? "Who shall ascend into the hill of Jehovah? And who shall stand in his holy place?"

I. "He that hath clean hands."

The hand, next to the eye, is the most ready and willing servant of the mind. There is scarcely an act of the brain that is not immediately followed by a service of the hand. So much do we use our hands that the mind is generally unconscious of the thought which wills their movements. And especially do the hands play a most active part in the labor of the world. Therefore, when the good King David speaks of the hands he makes use of a term which stands for the calculating and more logical part of the mind given to dealing with the various business, social and religious affairs a man must needs meet between the cradle and the grave.

As a consequence, clean hands mean honest hands in conducting the world's business. And it would be well to remember that hands which are merely business and nothing more, can not be clean hands. They have the rust and tarnish of gold upon them. They may never cheat, they may never lie, but they do not love home, family and God. Blessed is the man whose mind is served by hands of love! . . . Clean hands are fair hands in friendship. That is, instead of always asking if their friends love them enough, they question themselves to see if their service of love is as great as the goodness of life requires. They do not find themselves considering what the world owes them, but rather do they remember that probably the only reason for their existence is not what they are going to "get out of life, but what they are going to give to life." . . . Clean hands are honorable hands in social life. The social state of mind in a community is a mirror of its religious life. The worldly refuse to differentiate the churchman and the Christian. It is true they should be one and the same, but the fact remains that they are often widely separated. However, a carping non-Christian finds many things in the back-fence social life of a church community over which to make merry and blasphemous jests when their attention is called to their need of Christ. One of the very greatest sins in our average churchman is the lack of ambition and aspiration for anything more in life than to feed, sleep and make money, and then, some-how-or-other—God knows it would be a miracle—after death to go to heaven. As if anything or anybody could go to heaven after having been dead all their lives. Christianity is a bigger thing than merely a church religion. Our lives will be larger when we learn that the education and culture of the mind, the harmony and beauty of the home-life and its surroundings, the development of our love and appreciation of the beautiful, and the art of living pleasantly with all men who seek us, is also a part of the teaching of the Master. Clean hands, then, are friendly, kindly, merciful, just and ministering hands toward all mankind. In a word:

A clean hand is a hand that you would place fearlessly and unafraid in the hand of God.

II. "And a pure heart." . . . .

"Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God." Matt. 5:8.

The heart has ever stood for the part of our mind that is given to the affections, the passions, the deeper loves of our natures. It is of a love that is closely akin to the physical. Hence the ancients thought our organ called the heart the seat of passion, for the reason that certain impulses and emotions cause it to beat more rapidly than when in its normal state. Therefore, by the word "heart," David means that within our being with which we love, tenderly and passionately; with which we feel emotionally; with which we hate; with which we bind ourselves without questioning, and often illogically, to father, mother, sweetheart, wife, husband, friend, brother, sister, Jesus Christ, God.

A pure heart is a heart that, while not ignorant of the world's evil, sees all of the goodness there is in this great business of life. It sees enough of virtue in the worst of men to sympathize with them in their weaknesses. It is a heart which sees so much of honor, of sympathy and of love even amid the wreck and ruin of wickedness that it never becomes for long hopeless or discouraged in its work of helping, serving and teaching. To keep sweetly simple amid the world's confusion; to be honorable in all its fitful deceit; to find goodness and mercy and virtue in the lust-filled, sensual existence of the feverish slaves to passions; to see in the work and the play of the varied life about you much of God; to meet the eyes of Jesus in the eyes of your fellowmen, to feel his touch in their hands, his joy in their gladness, his suffering in their sorrow, his Gethsemane, his cross his immortal love in their long, bitter struggle to be better, to do good, to be like him—this is to be pure in heart.

III. "He shall receive . . . righteousness from the God of his salvation."

Thus the Psalmist concludes that he that hath a pure heart and clean hands shall receive righteousness from God himself. He shall become like unto God. And that is the point: We must have life in common with God to be on intimate, understanding, friendly, sympathetic terms with him. And we must become like God through Jesus Christ. Love the great principles that Christ loves; love men and women, as near as it is possible, as Jesus loved them. Don't you see that we love God just as much as we love the things he loves—that much, no more?

So we may justly conclude that as we are like Jesus in hand, in heart, in mind, loving as Jesus loved, being merciful as he was merciful, working as he worked, just so near are we like unto God, and have a kinship with him. This is to be friends with God.

John Mitchell.

Press reports state that John Mitchell will retire from the position of president of the United Mine Workers of America. Mr. Mitchell's retirement is not only voluntary, but will be made against the general protest of the members of the organization and of the public generally. The years during which he has been at the head of the miners' union have been exceptionally trying. The situation has bristled with difficulties most of the time. But through them all the fairness and sanity of this wise young leader have been conceded by the employers, and his devotion to the cause of union labor has not been questioned by the miners. He has devoted to his important but ill-paid office, for a salary of $1,800, talents which would be worth many times that amount in the conduct of any large private business. He has served well, and if he retires from this office he will doubtless continue to serve well in some other capacity.

The Growth of High Schools.

One characteristic feature of the educational development of the past decade has been the great growth of high schools. The report of the United States Commissioner of Education shows that in the fifteen years from 1890 to 1905 the number of public high schools in the entire country has increased three-fold, and the number of pupils in them increased somewhat more than three-fold. In the latter year there were 7,576 high schools, with 679,702 pupils. During the same period there has been a decrease in the number of private secondary schools and in the number of students attending them. Of students who are enrolled for some part of a high school course, only about one in eight is graduated. The development has affected the character as well as the number of high schools. The next decade will see a much wider introduction of subjects and methods which are not traditionally suitable as preparation for college, but which are highly appropriate as preparation for life. As there are agricultural colleges, so there will be agricultural high schools, thousands of them, throughout the country. As there are technical schools, so there will be trades high schools in the cities, where the boys who are destined to spend their lives in handwork may learn to do their work under better conditions than the old apprentice system made possible and at the same time be getting some general education. The state supports schools for the training of doctors, lawyers and civil engineers. Why should they not support schools for the intelligent training of carpenters, plumbers and masons? We think it will. Perhaps the labor unions will do something of the same sort. The Typographical Union has already decided to establish a series of trade schools for the training of apprentices. When the unions devote some of their great power to training men to earn the wages which they receive, instead of spending all of it in forcing the employer to pay the wages which are earned, they will come nearer to fulfilling their whole duty.

Trial by Torture.

Our somewhat remote ancestors had a curious notion that the truth could be squeezed out of a reluctant witness by the use of thumb-screws, somewhat as cider is squeezed out of apples by a cider-press. Having found by long experience that no amount of compression can extract pure truth from an unveracious or uninformed witness, we have slightly varied the application of the principle. We now thumb-screw the jury to get a true verdict according to the law and the evidence. The jury is cooped up in cramped and uncomfortable quarters and kept there till it gives a verdict. There are all-night sessions, during which the jurors doze uneasily in their chairs or take turns trying to sleep on the table. If so be they sleep at all, they awake stiff, heavy-eyed and unreasonable. What man can be wholly rational after spending a night in a chair? All this provision of studied discomfort for the jury is for the avowed purpose of forcing a verdict. It does put a premium upon promptness. So did the thumb-screw. But it fails, as that ancient instrument of justice failed, to put a premium upon wisdom and truth. A comfortable jury is more likely to be a reasonable jury than one that is being urged by physical discomfort to give any sort of a verdict in order to get free and go home. One thing needed is that every court house should have not a jury cell, but a respectable jury room, with comfortable overnight accommodations for cases requiring that the jury be held over night. The jury system is imperfect enough at best, without adding to it the torture system.

A Hero of Esperanto.

Peace has its heroes, and the field of scholarship shows cases of self-sacrifice as splendid as those of the battlefield. The "universal language," Esperanto, has a hero in the person of Professor Beaufort, of Louviers, France. This scholarly man had for many years studied the question of an artificial universal language. After years of work he had himself worked out such a language, which he called Adjuvanto. He had just published it and was very proud of it, and happy in the hope of its success. Then he heard of Esperanto, the language which had been devised by Dr. Zamenhof and then newly published by him. He studied it and compared it with his own system. His conclusion was that his was inferior. Without delay he put his loved Adjuvanto in the stove and became an ardent promoter of Esperanto. Few men are large enough to separate their own personal interests so completely from the interest of the cause to which they are devoted. A large proportion of the men who do so are found among the workers in the field of science.

Trust Conference.

An important conference on the trust question is to be held in Chicago, beginning October 22, under the direction of the National Civic Federation. It will be non-political, and most of the men who will participate in it are economists of high standing and men of large affairs. President Nicholas Murray Butler, of Columbia University, is chairman of the conference. The various methods of state and federal control of large corporations will be discussed.

International Balloon Races.

Following closely on the heels of carnival week and the President's visit in the interest of a deep waterway from the lakes to the gulf, St. Louis is preparing for the international balloon races to be held during the week commencing October 21. There will be contestants from foreign countries, and the result of the races will be quite significant. Army officials are taking special interest in the affair, and much valuable information and experience is anticipated. The races will be held from Forest Park, near the World's Fair site.

The secret of why so many school teachers are spinsters is out and is made public by one of the spinsters herself. Miss Catherine Goggin, secretary of the Chicago Teachers' Federation, says men are afraid to marry teachers for the reason that they have ruled imperiously so long that they are not amenable to domestic discipline, and will not brook dictation from their husbands. The habit of "bossing" which the men fear is not laid aside at the altar. There is another side to the story, as well. Miss Goggin says women teachers hesitate to marry because they see in the children before them every day so many wretched examples of matrimonial misery.

Six hundred and twenty-five saloons will go out of business when the new state government becomes effective in Oklahoma. The canvass of the election returns shows that state-wide prohibition carried by a majority of over 18,000. There is but one brewery in Oklahoma, and it will quit business at the same time as the saloons.

Manila dispatches tell of the great interest in the opening of the first Filipino Assembly, which will take place this week. Secretary Taft will be present. At a preliminary caucus, a motion to have the assembly meetings opened with prayer was defeated by one vote.

Vancouver will send back 179 of a recent arrival of 518 Hindoos on account of lack of funds and physical defects. The remainder will probably be shipped to the Canadian capital, with the suggestion that they be passed on to London.

The docket which confronted the United States Supreme Court, which convened in Washington on October 14, was a record breaker—a total of 450 cases confronting that body.

Some First Principles.

X.—Signs of Development in Christian Character.

Having dealt now with the great verities which are fundamental to citizenship in the kingdom of God, we may appropriately close this series of articles by indicating some of the things which mark the development of the spiritual life of the believer who, under the leadership of the Spirit, is seeking to perfect his Christian character.

1. As one's faith increases, as it is certain to do in the daily study of God's word, and in the daily effort to do the will of God, there comes to the soul a sense of satisfaction, which can be found nowhere else than in Christ. Such an one realizes the truth of what Jesus said to the woman at the well of Samaria, that the water of life which he gives satisfies the soul's immortal thirst, and he is content to abide in Christ. Others may run hither and thither after this or that new religious fad or philosophy, but these things offer no attractions to one who has tested the truthfulness of God's promises. The reason why so many professed Christians follow off after these modern devices, which are often old errors revamped and repolished, is that they are not rooted and grounded in the faith, and their souls have never been brought in vital contact with the life-giving water which Christ supplies. As windstorms reveal the defective trees in the forest, so these modern substitutes for Christianity reveal the defective faith and spiritual life of many professed Christians. Christian stability is a virtue that comes from the consciousness of finding in Christ the daily supply of our daily spiritual needs. One who relies upon an experience that dates back in the past, in which God touched his life, who has no continuity of religious experiences, soon finds his faith waning and his spiritual life declining, until he is ready to take up with anything that comes along that offers a new sensation. Whoever has come to really understand that Christ is all in all to him, and that he need not go elsewhere to find every spiritual want supplied, may be sure that he is on the way to the city whose shining portals will open to receive him into the company of the redeemed.

2. But to be satisfied with Christ is very different from being satisfied with ourselves and with our attainments in Him. To "hunger and thirst after righteousness" is not inconsistent with the deepest soul-satisfaction, and is another mark of real citizenship in the kingdom of God. The soul's capacity for God is beyond all our present dreams and imaginings. To be content with what we are, and with our meager spiritual attainments, is the sure mark of spiritual decline, while the hunger and thirst after a deeper and truer righteousness is the unfailing mark of a soul that is developing into the likeness of Christ. What greater blight rests upon the Church to-day than the prevailing low standard of spiritual attainment, and the self-satisfaction that is content therewith?

3. The growing sense of freedom from the letter of Scripture, and a clearer apprehension of its spirit and meaning is the natural and legitimate result of a deepening spiritual life under the guidance of the indwelling Spirit of God. The mind which may have been perplexed at one time with varying forms and figures of speech, comes to see that all language is but an imperfect expression of truth, and that the truth itself is higher and deeper and broader than any mold of human speech into which it may be run. Spiritual discernment, which is able to see the essential truth embodied in different, and sometimes apparently conflicting figures of speech, comes as the result of Christian growth under the tuition of the Spirit. But this freedom of the Spirit involves no disloyalty to the meaning of the Scripture, and it ignores no accepted rule of interpretation. It is rather that anointing of the Spirit, of which John speaks, without which all rules of interpretation are useless in leading one into the very heart and deepest meaning of God's word.

4. As one advances in the knowledge of Christ, he is less concerned about the issues of some future judgment day, and vastly more concerned about the daily issues at the bar of his own conscience, as God reveals himself there as "a consuming fire" against all evil, hidden or open, and as a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. One who has daily personal relations with God, who forgiveth his iniquities and comforteth him in all his sorrows, has no anxieties as to what the "Judge of all the earth" will do in some future judgment day. Not only is he relieved from the fear of judgment, but from bondage to the fear of death. Having within him already the life which is eternal, he sees that death is only a transition from a lower to a higher sphere in a life that is bound up with the life of God, and that is to continue forever. He may love life, and may long to live that he may accomplish certain plans and purposes; but he does not fear death and what lies beyond.

5. It would be impossible for one to grow in the image of Christ without coming into closer fellowship with his great plans looking to the world's redemption. An increasing love for God carries with it an increasing love for mankind, and a deepening interest in all the great world movements that have for their object the blessing of the race, and especially the evangelization of the world. One who in the earlier stages of his Christian life was especially concerned about himself, and his own salvation, who found it difficult to be interested in anything outside of his local church and immediate vicinity, becomes at last so widened in his sympathies and in his vision of the world's needs that he earnestly desires, prays for, and contributes to, the salvation of the whole world. One may well doubt his advancement in Christian character who does not experience this widening interest in the kingdom of God.

6. In a word, following the line of growth marked out by the Apostle Peter, the believing soul, through his faith in Christ, supplies courage, and in his courage knowledge, and in his knowledge self-control, and in his self-control godliness, and in his godliness brotherly kindness, and in his brotherly kindness love—the culminating grace in Christianity. It is this grace that enables us to judge ourselves alone severely, and all others charitably, and is the crowning beauty of Christian life.

Here we end this series of studies in some of the first principles which have to do with the beginning and progress of our Christian life. We are grateful for many expressions of appreciation, and are glad if they have contributed, in some small degree, to the elevation of our standard of Christian living, and to the development of a longing for a deeper spiritual life—a consummation that is essential to the accomplishment of the great tasks and purposes we have in view.

Now Hear the Call of the States.

On the heels of one of our great national conventions, when missionary zeal is at its highest mark, ought to be a good time to secure a liberal offering for state mission work, which is an important branch of home missions and is the foundation of the work both at home and abroad. If our enthusiasm generated by the national convention does not help the churches and ministers to do their best for state missions, it would argue that the national convention itself lacked the power to exact the right kind of enthusiasm, or that it has been allowed to evaporate without producing practical results.

We are writing this article on the way to the convention, and do not know what action will be taken to change the date of State Mission day, but nothing will be done, we are sure, that will change the time for the offering the present year. We trust, therefore, our ministers everywhere will call attention to this offering on the first Lord's day in November, and emphasize its fundamental importance to all our interests, local and general, home and foreign, educational and benevolent. If the preachers will be as loyal to this offering as they are to our general home and foreign mission days, a new impetus will be given to the work of evangelizing the neglected cities and neighborhoods, which our state board have been hindered from doing for lack of funds.

Let our churches more and more accustom themselves to an all-around, impartial, symmetrical development of our liberality toward all missionary interests. A lop-sided missionary zeal is no better than a lop-sided theology. Let us have a full-orbed Christianity and a full-orbed interest in all the enterprises of the kingdom of God. Remember State Missions, November 3.

Concerning "Destructive Criticism."

Last week we attempted to clear the atmosphere on the subject of "the new theology." Another one of the phrases much affected by religious journals which assume the function of being special guardians of the faith is "destructive criticism." Almost any view that antagonizes the views held by these champions of the faith is dubbed "destructive criticism," and preachers who are reported as having set forth some modern view of Bible doctrine are classified as "destructive critics." We have before us a letter just received from a brother out West, who confesses that he has had his mind poisoned against THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for years by having seen so much in other papers "concerning the destructive criticism of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST." Having read the paper for a few months, he writes: "I am much pleased with it, and infinitely prefer any higher criticism that may develop, to the spirit that I have seen growing stronger for several years," in other quarters, "of division, hate, malice," etc.

Now there is such a thing as "destructive criticism," and there are two kinds of it. One kind is wholesome and necessary, and the other unwholesome and pernicious in its influence. All reformers have a certain amount of destructive criticism to do in order to clear the ground for the new truths which they are to inculcate, and to embody in law and in institutions, civil and religious. A part of the work of Christ himself was destructive criticism. He came not only to "destroy the works of the devil," but to destroy the false, materialistic and legalistic conceptions of religion, which he found in the minds of the people. As long as there is error in the world which is cherished as truth, there will be room for that sort of destructive criticism. The other kind of destructive criticism proceeds, as a rule at least, from the lack of faith, and from certain presuppositions which render a large part of the Bible incredible. Let a critic, for instance, start out in his investigations with the presupposition firmly fixed in his mind that there is no supernatural element in the Bible, and that all that happened, or that is reported as having happened, must be accounted for on purely naturalistic principles, and his criticism is sure to be destructive to the credibility and historicity of the Bible. Faith is always constructive in its purpose even when its method is temporarily destructive, while skepticism or rationalism contents itself very largely with tearing down and concerns itself very little with building up. That it may accomplish some good in a negative way, is possible, but its influence, on the whole, in every field where it operates, is pernicious.

In the light of this explanation of "destructive criticism" how absurd appear the statements to which our correspondent refers, charging THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST with "destructive criticism" in its evil sense! THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has not, and never has had, in the course of its existence, the slightest sympathy with any theory or effort to destroy the Bible, or to lessen men's faith in its spiritual power and authority. It seems preposterous for us to have to make such a declaration. Why, in the name of reason and conscience, have we been engaged all our lifetime in teaching the Bible, in urging its claims upon others, and in commending it to the faith and confidence of thinking men? And yet good brethren, some of whom are wholly uninformed on the subject, believe such statements because they see them in religious journals! One of our evangelists wrote us the other day that he thought the time was propitious now for THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST "to come out square on the Bible!" And this is said of a religious journal which has no other aim or ambition, and never has had, than to propagate the religion of the Bible, and whose Editor has grown gray in his unceasing labors to extend the knowledge of the Bible throughout the world, and to bring all men to faith in the Christ of the Bible as the world's only Savior. Such statements would seem amusing if they were not also pathetic.

The "destructive critics" which we have most reason to fear are those among ourselves whose criticisms tend to destroy the confidence of the brethren in as good and true men as we have in our ranks, and who, but for such destructive criticism, might hope to exert a much wider influence for good in behalf of the Christianity of Christ than they will ever be permitted to do by this school of critics. Whatever may be said in criticism of these statements, we are willing to be judged by them at the bar of enlightened public sentiment here, and at the bar of God.

We have a real battle to fight with the real enemies of the Bible and of Evangelical Christianity, and we can not fight that battle successfully until we have learned to discriminate between things that differ—between the criticisms which are aimed at popular errors, and those which undermine men's faith in the Bible; between opinions and conclusions which may be held by men as loyal to Christ and the Bible, as ourselves, and those which proceed from unbelief and are wholly inconsistent with faith in Christ and the acceptance of the Bible as the Word of God.

The Divine Healer (Mark 6:56).

By Walter S. Whitacre.

Oh souls that are sick with sinning,
  Oh hearts that are weary and sore,
Come out of the pathways of error
  And follow its phantoms no more.
The great Physician is passing,
  The one who our sorrows can feel;
At the door of your heart he is waiting
  Your sin-sick soul to heal.

Come touch the hem of His garment,
  His precious garment of love.
He'll make you as whole and as perfect
  As the spirits that dwell above.
His power to heal is boundless,
  From none will He turn away;
Then hasten into His presence
  And touch His garment to-day.

Oh wonderful that Physician
  To heal all our sorrows and woes
By the simple touch of His garment
  As through our midst he goes!
How deep and how wide the mercy
  That brought Him down from above
To heal the sin-sick nations
  With the balm of His boundless love!

SERMONETTES.

By C. F. Ladd.

If you persist in entertaining the devil, you needn't be surprised to find him hanging around.

Some men try to hold their religion in their wife's name, but it's no use. They can not do business with God in that way.

When you hear a man describing himself as a good deal of a saint, just watch his wife and see if she says "Amen!"

Some people call themselves Christians and are quite indignant if their veracity is questioned. Well, some folks do have a queer idea of Christianity.

The devil himself sometimes sits in a front pew and looks religious.

You can't always tell what a man is by what he says or the way he looks.

If you want to test a man's religion, give him a chance to get the best of you.

About all the religion some people have is in their hymn-book.

When a man is all the while complaining that every one is trying to take advantage of him, look out. The first thing you know he will take advantage of you.

The idea some people seem to have about Christianity must make the devil laugh. They "make a profession," join the church, and then serve him to his entire satisfaction.

"Here comes that horrid Mrs. B. Ugh!" A moment later: "Well, well, Sister B., I'm so glad to see you. How do you do," etc., etc. Say, sister, is this your way? Nice Christian you are. You had better mend your ways or the devil will get you, sure.

Editor's Easy Chair.

"Coming events cast their shadows before." Yes, and rising suns make the east rosy with their foregleamings before their round discs are visible above the horizon. When "The Christian-Evangelist Special" pulled out of the Union station on Tuesday afternoon, October 8, bearing a hundred delegates from about a dozen states to the Norfolk convention, the convention had begun in its preliminary stages and the premonitory symptoms foretold a great convention. The fact is, when you get together one hundred representative readers of The Christian-Evangelist, and feel their pulse on the problems which confront the brotherhood, you have a very reliable index to the feelings and convictions of the brotherhood. The devotional service held on board the train a few hours after leaving St. Louis, led by G. L. Snively, served to bring out very distinctly the things which were uppermost in the minds and hearts of these delegates. No one listening to their songs, prayers and talks could doubt the strength of their desire for the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, and for the triumph of those principles which make for our permanent peace and progress. The sentiment of this devotional service was a prophecy of that which is to prevail at Norfolk. So we all felt. This made all hearts beat buoyant with hope, and so the train sped on through the darkness, tunneling the night with its shaft of light, made vocal with the sound of praise and prayer from a hundred happy hearts that beat as one in love and loyalty to Christ and in the purpose to promote his Kingdom. The occupants of five sleeping cars crowded into one for a religious service, filling all sitting and standing room, must necessarily get close together, but this was only typical of the blending together of kindred spirits in a common cause. J. H. Allen, of St. Louis, said it was the first time in his memory that he had been compelled to stand during a prayer-meeting, and he said it as if he wished he might have the privilege of doing so often, for the same reason. Then came sleep and daylight; "and the evening and the morning were the first day."

A daylight ride up the beautiful Kanawha Valley and through the mountains of West Virginia and Virginia on a bright October day, and in such congenial company, is an experience not soon to be erased from one's memory. The mountains, rounded into graceful forms by the forces of nature acting through the geologic ages before Usher's chronology dates the year one, and clothed with forests bearing the variegated hues of autumn, with the peaceful valleys lying between, and ever and anon a wild gorge through which rushed a foaming stream with its roaring cataracts, constituted a continuous, unfolding panorama of beauty and grandeur. At White Sulphur Springs our Special tarried an hour, while the delegates strolled through the grounds of this famous summer resort. The winding walks through the great trees, now decorated with the first touch of frost, and the great hotel and cottages, which a few weeks ago were thronged with the fashionable people of Washington and Richmond, were deserted and still, save as they echoed for an hour with the laughter and conversation of this body of delegates, who took it in as a side-show on their way to far greater attractions to which duty called them. As darkness again closed in upon us another devotional service was held, W. H. Allen, of Muncie, leading. How sweetly sounded out the old hymns above the roar of the train, "Abide with me, fast falls the eventide;" "Blest be the tie that binds," and other old favorites! Again the same great keynotes of the previous evening were sounded, while the thought of the speakers dwelt chiefly on the incident of the walk to Emmaus, in which Jesus manifested himself to two of his disciples. It was felt that Jesus had been with us in this journey, and that our hearts had burned within us by the way because of his presence. Again we laid us down to sleep in our swiftly-moving chambers of rest, to wake in safety, because the Lord had kept us. Our eyes opened in Richmond; "and the evening and the morning were the second day."

General Grant and his lieutenants had rather a difficult task to get into Richmond, but we went in asleep and unafraid. What blessed times are these compared with the dark days of the early sixties! A boat ride down the beautiful and historic James River from Richmond to Norfolk with a great company of friends and brethren is worth a trip across the continent, if there were no convention and no exposition to go to. The good steamer "Hampton" waited an hour for "The Christian-Evangelist Special," and at 8 a. m. the steamer loosed from its moorings and we were off for a memorable day's ride. And such a day! A crisp autumn breeze blew up from the ocean, and above us the bluest of October skies, and the brightest of October suns, lent their charms to the journey. As we floated down the yellow current past many a historic spot, these places were called out by a lookout stationed near the pilot. "There is the home of Pocahontas, on the left!" "Yonder is the birth-place of General Lee's mother!" "That is Harrison's Landing." "Yonder on the right at City Point was General Grant's headquarters," and above that "Dutch Gap" had been pointed out. And so on down to where Jamestown island was cited. There our historic interest culminated in downright enthusiasm. The steamer tarried a half hour to permit us to catch a mere glimpse of scenes to which we would gladly have given a whole day. Who would not look with reverence and awe upon the cradle in which his mother had been rocked? And yet here upon this historic spot, landed the first white settlers in the New World, and here in this old church the first legislature was organized and held its sessions! These old graves, one of which, that of Governor Yeardley, is the oldest marked grave in America, hold the ashes of heroes and heroines, the rich heritage of whose sacrifices we enjoy today. The island is now protected by a stone wall, against the encroachments of the river, and a majestic obelisk erected thereon marks the scene of one of the most important events in human history.

As our steamer left her moorings at this truly historic spot, the Easy Chair was moved to call first for "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," and "The Star-Spangled Banner," which were led by Brother Kendall with his cornet and sung with a will. Then "Dixie" was called for and sung. Called on for a speech, the Editor gave expression to his own sentiments awakened by the visit to Jamestown, and raised the question as to which of the two fountains of our national life, Jamestown or Plymouth, had contributed most to the stream of our Christian civilization. Without answering that question, he ventured the opinion that, differing as they did in their ideals, and often meeting in conflict in the forum and on the battle-field, had each contributed a noble and enduring part to our civil and religious liberty, and that these two erstwhile opposing influences had met and coalesced in a united effort to enlarge and to make purer and more permanent the fair structure of the Union. Brothers Moore, Richardson and an Episcopal minister on board followed in earnest and telling speeches, emphasizing the historical significance of Jamestown and drawing lessons of patriotism therefrom. Now the yellow tide of the James takes on the hue of the ocean, for we have met the incoming tide which rises as far up as Richmond. The stream has now broadened into a vast estuary wide enough to swallow up several Mississippi rivers. The white oyster fleet to our left attracts attention and admiration. Hampton Roads awakens historic memories, and yonder, blazing with electric brilliancy across the waves, is the Norfolk Exposition, and—Norfolk, where we disembark, and retire to rest in our hotels, to awaken at the scene of the Exposition and the national convention. "And the evening and the morning were the third day."

Headquarters of The Christian-Evangelist and of all the Missionary Societies, Monticello Hotel, Norfolk, Va., Friday morning, October 11, 1907.—All's well. The hosts are gathering. Faces of all are radiant with hope. No public meeting till evening. Everybody is out taking in the Exposition to-day but the Easy Chair Editor, who is chronicling these items of the journey. What a journey it has been! How charming the weather! How delightful the fellowship! How inspiring and educational the historic scenes through which we have passed, and the scenic attractions which have fed our eyes and enriched our sense of the beautiful! How much better some of us know each other than before we made this journey together! Going to conventions together on special trains is a means of grace as well as of enjoyment. The delegation thanked The Christian-Evangelist and Brother Snively for their special, but no one got more enjoyment than we did, and we thank the brethren and sisters for coming with us. And now comes the convention, with its reports, its addresses, its problems, its discussions, its thanksgiving for the past, its plans for the future. God be with us and fill us with His own Spirit and guide to His glory! Amen!

A Missionary Tour Through the Heart of Africa

By

Royal J. Dye

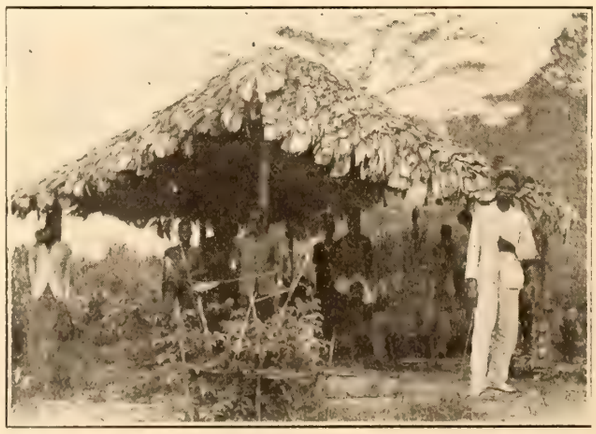
In high-water times from this village of Mpongo-Lefale, of Isaka, we usually embark in canoes and cross the Boloko, which then assumes quite riverine proportions, but now we went by the circuitous sand path to the ford of the Boloko, which was a mammoth tree felled across the stream reaching from bank to bank. Now we plunged into a jungle which was a jungle indeed—land that for most of the year round is covered with water, and consequently oozy mire. I jumped from tree root to tree root, but my porters had to labor through it knee deep. The ones who had traveled before on this path and knew the way went ahead, but the slower part of the caravan, with whom I journeyed for encouragement's sake, crept slowly along, and we soon found ourselves hopelessly lost. We hallooed and hallooed, but all to no good, for the advance had left us in the lurch, floundering in the mire of a dense jungle, and no known path out. We gathered all of the rear column together and sent out scouts to find a path. Finally one discovered the track of a single man, and we decided to follow it, trusting it to bring us out somewhere. It proved to be the path made by a native of the village to which we were going, traveled by him as he went to and from his secret fish traps in the river near by. After a weary march, during which the porters cheered each other by songs, we reached the village of Ilanga, by name "Ntaka." Here we gathered the people together for a meeting, as usual, and a large crowd gathered in the big "palaver" house. The evangelists gave short but direct gospel pleas, and I followed with a direct personal plea for a decision, summarizing the points of the evangelists, that they might see that what their own fellows told them was indeed the truth. At Ntaka there was an abundance of food, and some of the porters wished to stay all night; but I told them we could not throw away four good hours of sunlight, and so we packed on to the next one of the Ilanga villages, Bompou. We found the path through the bed of a fine stream of water, and did enjoy the change from mire and slippery logs. Before leaving this clear stream we all took a fine, refreshing bath to get the filth of the mire and swamp off of us. We found a fine open path leading to this village; in fact, all of this section was characterized by good paths. When we arrived at Bompou we found that it had paid us to make the extra exertion to get there, for not only did we have a fine, large village of intelligent people to Sunday with, but what pleased the hungry porters very much was the fact that an antelope had been killed only that morning, and I was able to buy nearly the entire animal for myself and porters. They at once said, indeed, "God is true to his word, for he has told us not to be anxious for what we are to eat or wear, and when we left Ntaka with its abundance of food in order to preach to another town, he has provided us with an abundance of food better than what we could have secured at the first place."



Bompou villagers; showing especially the odd manners of dressing their hair. The man in the foreground, with his wife, is the chief. They have four children.

Bompou is a fine village of several hundred inhabitants, situated in the Bosira half of the back country. (The Boloko river mentioned before is the dividing line between the section of the Nkundos and the section bordering on the Bosira, who speak the same language with slight dialectal differences). This village consists largely of young married people. I saw no old men or women. The chief is a middle-aged man with one wife and three children. It is a most extraordinary thing to find a whole village practically monogamists. The village swarmed with children. All of the evangelists remarked with surprise the peculiar condition. Among a polygamous race this little village of people living clean lives was indeed remarkable. They all asked at once what hindered them from becoming Christians. More interested audiences one could not ask for. After the services they stayed in crowds to ask more in detail about the "way of Life." I send a picture of a group of them showing their peculiar manner of hair dress. Our Lord's day sojourn there was most profitable, and we hope to see in days not far distant a strong body of believers there.

Starting on the forward march, we were warned of a fierce tribal war ahead of us, and that it would be dangerous for us to advance. Trusting in the Lord whom we were serving, we went ahead. We arrived at Ifuto, where we had a fine audience. Ifuto has three sections, through all of which we passed. The middle section was set aside for the degraded "Bacwa," evidently the aborigines, a race of hunters and skilled woodsmen. The Nkundos place all sorts of degrading restrictions on them, and forbid them community of food, utensils, beds, houses, and make it a rule that if a man takes a "Bacwa" wife he may never marry again; or if a Nkundo woman marries a "Bacwa" she is an outcast. When you are in a "Bacwa" village you must never expectorate, for they think you are expressing your disrespect for them and you will quickly become a living pincushion of arrows, which might hurt. The Nkundos say that a "Bacwa" can always be told by his shifty eyes, as he never looks any one squarely in the face; also that they have an odor peculiar to themselves, for they are always hunting and secluded in the woods. These "Bacwas" of Ifuto were timid but soon gained confidence and came out in numbers to listen to the native evangelists, and, when I arose to speak, their surprise was climaxed by hearing a white man speak in their own native dialect. They listened with eager attention and could hardly believe the message that God loved them, the degraded "Bacwa," and gave his son to die for them. The far end of the Ifuto towns was wild with excitement over the war between two villages farther along, and they gladly welcomed the calming influence of a white man. We preached to large crowds here and their message to us was, "Why have you not brought us this message before?" Why? Brethren, why has not the Church of Christ sent the messagers of the Gospel of Peace to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord?

Half an hour further on we reached a large village called "Bacina," where we found great excitement and crowds of refugees from the warring village beyond. They had all been smoking the fearful "hemp" called "bange," which makes them wild and in its intoxicating effects throws its victim into a stupor with most delightful dreams and exaggerates all events of time and space. It is the scourge of the land and the Congo State Government has placed very rigorous laws on its books and penalty of imprisonment, but they do not enforce it very vigorously. Village after village where we went on this journey was full of this baneful weed; their front door yards, instead of containing peanuts and native greens, were full of this bushy plant. While we were there a youth came up to me intoxicated with "bange" and attempted some familiarities but we soon noticed that he was not accountable. They get drunk with it and think they can "lick" anybody, and many of their bloody fights are quite traceable to this weed. We preached here to large crowds and, preparing to push on, the people warned us not to go forward, but we were neither for nor against either of the contesting parties, so we trusted in our neutrality and in the God whom we served and went down into the intervening swamps. After about two hours of hard travel we came out into the opening where the rubber sentries lived several years ago when they raided the villages and exacted the rubber tax. Long stretches of unoccupied territory lay about everywhere that had been the sites of large and populous villages, and the former limits of what were large villages could be easily delimited where there were but few huts now. This was all done years ago. The traders for filthy lucre and the state in its mad rush for the valuable rubber products depopulated these vast sections, while the Church of Christ has niggardly withheld the message of life.

We reached the great plaza of "Bombenga," the largest of these "Ilanga" villages and one of the warring parties. The plaza is under a great tree called "Bombanga," which it is the goal of all contests between these villages to mutilate. When this is accomplished the village is disgraced. This great tree, had it a tongue to speak, could tell a tale which would harrow the soul about the doings of these rubber sentries, who were compelled to exact the toll of rubber.

The great "Nkum," a crowned (hat) king, came and begged us to intervene in really perilous part of the journey between this fight, and after we had preached to them the message of peace and life and of God's love, we listened to his version of the fight. I arranged the best terms we could offer from him to the other side, and together with envoys we started upon the the fighting lines. I enclose two prints, one of the crowd at Bombenga and the other of myself and the "Nkum" and his retinue. The Nkum, though the victorious party, wished peace. As we went down into the intervening swamp we could see all sorts of pitfalls and ambuscades. We were compelled to travel very slowly, for the paths were full of sharpened sticks. Small saplings were broken across the path and trees were felled to impede the rapid march of an enemy. Tangled underbrush was arranged so that any one coming would have to stoop and expose himself to the arrows of a concealed sharpshooter. The customary corduroy over the miry places was removed, making progress difficult. Several times we heard the rustle of a concealed warrior as he slid through the jungle, and we always called out that we were the messengers of peace, come with the word of God to them. As we approached the belligerent village we found groups of warriors, fully armed, prepared to contest our approach, but on the sight of a white man they withdrew and slunk away into the forest. We reached the village at last and called out to them to assemble in the plaza and we would settle the palaver. After about an hour, during which we were demonstrating in various ways our mission of peace, we were able to get a gathering of the "Elders" of the village, and "talked the palaver." It appeared that a young man, in an altercation with his uncle (on his mother's side), killed him, whereupon he fled to his father's town. The men of his mother's town demanded vengeance, and several had been killed in the feud.

The Fundamental Axiom in Religion By William Durban

It may seem to be a surprising statement to many a reader that comparatively few religious people really understand the basilar principles of religion. The late C. H. Spurgeon once said to a brother minister to whom he was giving advice on preaching, "Remember always this one thing, that you can never overestimate the ignorance of your audience." That was not a very complimentary view of the collective intelligence of the people in these days of supposed culture. But so far as the vast majority of the community are concerned, the idea that they are in any worthy degree cultured is a total myth. For they have, as a rule, neither leisure nor disposition to continue their education after school days have terminated. The fault is only partially theirs, for the age is terribly strenuous. So that most persons forget much of what they ever knew. Here is one use of the pulpit, to refresh the knowledge of the hearer by many allusions to facts bearing on the highest and deepest interests of humanity.

The Conservation of Value.

Last year was published by Professor Hoeffding, of the University of Copenhagen, one of the greatest works ever written on "The Philosophy of Religion." That was the most valuable book of 1906. Now, in 1907 the literary gem in the same line is Dr. Rudolf Otto's work on "Naturalism and Religion." The student who will master these two volumes, one by a German, the other by a Dane, will find himself equipped with metaphysical panoply of the very kind needed by the minister of religion who wishes not to be as ignorant as the majority of his people must be, not entirely, as I have just said, through any fault of their own. Dr. Otto in his charmingly written and profoundly thoughtful treatise has aimed a deadly blow at Rationalism. Dr. Harald Hoeffding deals largely with actual root ideas and fundamental principles, and he does so more efficiently than any writer before him. I am not writing extravagantly in thus eulogizing his "Philosophy of Religion." The book is held in exactly the same estimation by the best critics I am acquainted with, and I know some of the most competent in this land.

Hoeffding takes up pertinaciously the position that the conservation of value is the characteristic axiom of religion. He attempts to prove that this axiom is the fundamental thought of all religion. And he maintains that the hypothesis that the conservation of value is thus fundamental in the axiomatic sense will not be shaken by the fact that different religions and different religious standpoints differ from one another to a very wide extent with regard to the nature and the extent of the valuable in the conservation of which they believe. Value denotes the property possessed by a thing either of conferring immediate satisfaction or serving as a means of procuring it. Value, therefore, may be either mediate or immediate. Where immediate value is given we seek to preserve it; where not given, to produce it.

The Essence of Religion.

Now, the essence of religion consists in the conviction that value will be preserved. We must never fail to keep this conviction in mind. For as religion and the religious life are constantly undergoing change, the question must periodically arise, in various perplexing and even distracting forms, "Was there anything in primitive Christianity, in terms of value as well as of energy, which has maintained itself in the Christianity of to-day?" Through all the bewildering, labyrinthine mutations recorded by history since the early age of the Church, is there anything imperishable because it is of everlasting value? Now, this is the real, cardinal question of religious philosophy. Here is the problem of problems. Compared with such a question all the speculations of criticism are of little significance, though they may be of absorbing interest.

The Great Discovery of Mankind.

Religion presupposes that men have discovered by experience that there is something valuable. The content of religion is always dependent on the experience of man, and more especially on what he has found valuable. And what is the supreme discovery of mankind? Is it not this, that humanity is of infinite value? Certain great struggles are before society which will have relation to this subject of values. An insidious attempt is being plotted in medical circles to bring about legislation of the most hideous kind. Great doctors are eager to see it decreed by Parliament that medical practitioners may secretly shorten the lives of patients suffering from incurable maladies. And in another sociological direction certain schools of Socialists are equally eager to do away with marriage and the family, to institute systematic and legalized free love, and to reduce ethics to the morals of the farm yard and the swine sty. Society will have ere long to fight for two things—the sanctity of human life and the sanctity of the family.

It is well, therefore, is it not, that the Christian Church, by which I mean especially the Protestant Church, has rediscovered humanity. Jesus Christ was the original discoverer of the value of man. He discovered the individual. Till He came mankind was but a herd, an inchoate mob, at the mercy of many demon-deposits in succession. Then the apostasy darkened the truth that had been discovered and revealed and during that Devil's Millenium, called the Dark Ages, the thousand years bracketed between the rise of Popery and Islam simultaneously near the beginning of the seventh century (for the Eastern and Western Little Horns sprang up together) the masses were again crushed down as of no worth by a new tyranny, the scarlet clad Pseudo-Catholicism. Of what value was any individual human being to Torquemada, or Borgia, or Philip IV. of Spain, or Leo X., or Alva? But the reformers sanctified once again the meanest man or woman, or the poorest little child. Yes, the Christian Church has it for its function to achieve the conservation of the highest values, and highest of all values is the value of man.

The Personality of this Principle.

We now come to the holy ground where we have to worship. This topic lifts us up to ascension summits. The principle of the conservation of value is a principle, but it is something far more

EASY FOOD

Ready for Instant Use Without Cooking.

Almost every one likes a cereal food of some kind at breakfast and supper, but the ordinary way of cooking cereals results in a pasty mass that is hard to digest, and if not properly digested, the raw mass goes down into the intestinal tract where gas is generated and trouble follows.

Everyone knows that good food properly digested keeps the body well, while poor food, or even food of good quality that is poorly prepared and not digested, is sure to bring on some kind of disease.

The easiest food to digest in this line is Grape-Nuts, made from wheat and barley, and cooked thoroughly at the factory, some 12 to 16 hours being consumed in the different processes of preparation. The food, therefore, is ready for instant service and the starch has been changed to a form of Sugar, so that it is pre-digested and ready for almost immediate absorption.

A Chicago young lady writes that she suffered for years from indigestion and dyspepsia from the use of food that was not suitable to her powers of digestion. She says:

"I began using Grape-Nuts, and I confess to having had a prejudice at first, and was repeatedly urged before I finally decided to try the food, but I have not known what indigestion is since using it, and have never been stronger or in better health. I have increased in weight from 109 to 124 pounds."

People can be well, practically without cost, if they will adopt scientific food and leave off the indigestible sort. "There's a Reason."

Grape-Nuts Food is crisp and delicious to the taste. It should be served exactly as it comes from the package, without cooking, except in cases where it is made up into puddings and other desserts.—Book of delicious recipes, and "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

than a mere principle. It is an embodied principle. It is an impersonated principle. It is God Himself. This is the point to which through elaborate chapters Dr. Harald Hoeffding leads us up. It is good to follow him. It is a divine intuition implanted in the human consciousness that impels us to cherish what is of true and everlasting value. Now, when we are misled, when we are wrongly taught, we cling to something which is worthless, but we do so because we imagine it is worth keeping. The motive is right, the action may be mistaken. This is why we need inspiration and revelation. And this is why the Bible is imperishable. What is the value of this or that sect? As a sect it is of no value, and instinctively the majority of human souls comprehend this, and they therefore indifferently chop and change their denominational affiliations or quit denominational connections altogether. But with rare exceptions all religious persons cherish reverence for the Christian Church as it subsists under all the changing forms of religious system and organization under sectarian auspices. The Church as the apostles instituted it is like the family and the home, as God ordained them, of imperishable value, and the collective consciousness of humanity is increasingly convinced of their inconceivable worth.

The Obligations of the Church to Furnish Trained Teachers*

By J. F. ROSBOROUGH

The new motto for this new day, as you have heard, is "The whole church in the Bible school." The contemplation of it thrills our hearts! As its companion we would retain the older motto, "All the school brought into the church."

We shall proceed by sane and aggressive methods to organize the hosts for effective service. We shall call out our strong men of executive ability to superintend these vast plants of industry. We shall enlist the aged and invalid through the Home department, the babies and their mothers through the Cradle Roll department. The preachers and elders and deacons who love the cause of Christ will see the open door and enter it. Verily, the spectacle of spiritual leaders indifferent to this great evangelistic and constructive movement is a travesty on sacred things and a crime against the Head of the Church. The Master said "preach" and "teach." This requires purpose, plan, push.

Primacy of Teaching.

All this vast organization of forces, indispensable as it is, is only tributary to the essential thing—the teaching of the Word. This is the vital factor. Without it we would have only the rattle of machinery and a mere performance. The lack of proper methods is a hindrance, but the lack of proper teaching is fatal. There can be no harvest without the planting of the seed. The Bible is replete in its testimony to the primacy of teaching and the important office of the teacher.

The lawyers and scribes in Israel filled a very important office until they drifted into pedantry and formalism. God appointed prophets to teach his ancient people. Schools of the prophets, or training classes, were maintained in Israel. Moses was the greatest teacher of ancient times. He attested the perpetual need of the teacher when he prophesied: "A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up like unto me. Him shall you hear in all things." The parable of the sower points the necessity of planting the seed and suggests the removal of hindrances as "stones," "thorns," etc. This is best accomplished by individual or class work or by catechetical teaching. Every preacher has been humiliated to find that his lucid deliverances are not clear to some persons. Jesus said, "They shall all be taught of God," as the condition of coming to him. Dr. Trumbull, in his "Teaching and Teachers," points out the distinction in teaching and preaching. He says: "Teaching requires attention, responsiveness. Preaching does not. Preaching is a dialogue with one part omitted. I would not depreciate the preacher, but I would appreciate the teacher."

Teachers in the Primitive Church.

The apostles were sent out to disciple the nations. The book of Acts tells how, in public assembly, in private houses, by the roadside, they taught the Word and led many to Christ. There are accounts in the Book of Acts of a few great hortatory discourses, but even here the Oriental privilege to ask questions during the discourse gave it the nature of a school. Paul went to the Jewish schoolhouses to present his message, and at Corinth he spent two years in the school of Tyrannus, teaching of Christ. A great church was the result. But his splendid oration at Athens brought small results. Faithful, persistent teaching always wins permanent results. In the development of the churches men and women were called to the specific function of teaching. In Romans, twelfth chapter, the teacher is exhorted to apply himself to teaching. In Ephesians, fourth chapter, teachers are named as a distinct and necessary factor in building up the body of Christ. In the Hebrew letter the writer rebukes the disciples who made such slow progress that, at a time when they ought to be teachers, they must be taught. (These disciples ought to have been in good training classes). These scriptures indicate the need of a trained teaching force.

The historic church at Antioch (Acts 13) had a splendid corps of preachers and teachers. It grew to be the great missionary church, and here the first disciples were called Christians. The disciples at Antioch were disciples indeed. Some Disciples are not disciples with a big "D" or a little "d."

Our Present Obligation.

In the light of our Lord's commission, the teaching of the apostles and the example of the primitive churches our duty is clear. The love of Christ, the untaught multitudes and the needs of humanity create the imperative demand that the Church train a sufficient number for the higher calling of teaching the Word.

Leadership.

Any capable person may promote the teacher-training movement. In a majority of cases the minister will need to be the leader. Our allusion to teaching and preaching does not belittle the preacher. The power of the preacher will be more manifest in the coming years, because he is learning to multiply his teaching power. If a minister have around him a great Bible school, with a corps of competent, consecrated teachers—teachers with a grasp of divine truth and a conception of the glory of such a service—it will multiply the power of his public ministrations.

The Supply of Teachers.

Where the military spirit prevails, there are many enlistments for the army. Where the missionary spirit obtains, there are volunteers for this great service. Under the leadership of the minister who "magnifies" his office, there will be "calls" to the ministry. If the teachers' work be accorded

SHE QUIT

But It Was a Hard Pull.

It is hard to believe that coffee will put a person in such a condition as it did a woman of Apple Creek, O. She tells her own story.

"I did not believe coffee caused my trouble, and frequently said I liked it so well I would not, and could not quit drinking it, but I was a miserable sufferer from heart trouble and nervous prostration for four years.

"I was scarcely able to be around, had no energy and did not care for anything. Was emaciated and had a constant pain around my heart until I thought I could not endure it. For months I never went to bed expecting to get up in the morning. I felt as though I was liable to die any time.

"Frequently I had nervous chills and the least excitement would drive sleep away, and any little noise would upset me terribly. I was gradually getting worse until finally one time it came over me and I asked myself what's the use of being sick all the time and buying medicine so that I could indulge myself in coffee?

"So I thought I would see if I could quit drinking coffee and got some Postum to help me quit. I made it strictly according to directions and I want to tell you, that change was the greatest step in my life. It was easy to quit coffee because I had the Postum which I now like better than the old coffee. One by one the old troubles left, until now I am in splendid health, nerves steady, heart all right and the pain all gone. Never have any more nervous chills, don't take any medicine, can do all my housework and have done a great deal beside.

its place of importance and dignity, and if the schools for preparation are made easily available, there will be found many consecrated Christians both willing and "apt to teach." (Marion county convention).

Magnify the teachers' function before the church. Make it a heroic thing for a busy person scrupulously to prepare fifty-two lessons in the year, to be on time, to be sweet, to wrestle with the class problems, all without compensation, in unselfish devotion to Christ and humanity. Make it a gracious privilege to be pastor of a "little flock," to live before them a clean life, to enjoy their confidence, to unfold to them the mind of the Master, to expand the life and make it glow with the image of the Father.

Make the teacher's work so important, so responsible, so sacred a privilege, so promising in eternal issues that it will appeal to the strongest and best. Thus the very flower of the church will be enlisted. Let it be understood that in any constellation no star shines with diviner radiance than the humble, faithful teacher.

The Training of Teachers.

Our Master chose twelve men and bestowed labor on them which he could not give to the world. He said: "To you it is given to know the mysteries of the Kingdom." And through this school he was preparing to teach the whole creation.

The teacher must be not only willing and apt, but trained. "Study" was the law of proficiency for Timothy; it is the law to-day. Our colleges provide for preacher-training, but with their present endowment can not provide for teacher-training. Probably it might be arranged. Our present need is a teacher-training class in every church. Helps for this may be had from any of our publishing houses. Our Centennial aim should be, 10,000 graduates in a teacher-training course.

Teachers' Meeting.

Besides this the church should arrange frequent institutes for church and school. Such institutes would co-ordinate the forces and stimulate great effort. For these institutes we have Knox P. Taylor, H. H. Moninger, Marion Stevenson and other specialists. Let us pray the Lord to send more specialists into the field, and that the churches keep them busy. High purpose, with persistent effort, is the price of progress.

In conclusion, I submit that the teachers will need spiritual as well as mental and moral qualities. To be specific, I mention:

1. The teacher must be a devout believer in Christ and the Book which reveals him. The purpose of the school is not to create doubt, but faith. This must be done by reverent believers.

2. The teacher's strong desire and prayer for the class should be that they all might be saved. John Knox said: "Give me Scotland or I die." The true teacher prays: "Give me my class for Christ." This desire becomes the heart's burden and passion, a passion that determines the whole trend of one's life; a passion that learns the status of each scholar and bears each daily to a throne of grace; a passion that speaks the tender message to each heart until Christ becomes the inception of the new life; a passion that will not be satisfied until all the lambs are safe in the fold of the Good Shepherd.

When the whole body of believers is marshalled and sent out to enlist the world through the Bible school; when this mighty host is led by trained, consecrated officers and teachers, then the Church will unsheathe her sword, unfurl her banners and march as a conquering army to a glorious victory.

THE CALL OF THE STATES

Eastern Pennsylvania.

More work in Eastern Pennsylvania is being done than ever before in our history. Not only has the state society undertaken larger things, but the A. C. M. S. is more and more recognizing the needs of our great field. Large and thickly populated districts are yet to be reached and a number of cities need the simple gospel. The above-named organizations are helping the following places, viz: Reading, Harrisburg, Wilkesbarre, Westmoor, Berwick and Bloomsburg. At two of these places new buildings have been erected during the year, namely Harrisburg and Bloomsburg. Wilkesbarre is also in need of a building and plans are laid to do this during the coming year. At Avis a building is almost completed and will be dedicated by the writer about November 1.

Our district is now seeking an evangelist and corresponding secretary and we hope that the right men may soon be secured. A number of places are in need of meetings, both where we already have organizations and some new places where we ought to have churches.

Like other states we are in need of more men who will take up work in our midst and be content to labor for a moderate salary and become interested in our organized work. Several of our best men have spent almost their whole life in our state and have become a part of our mission work as well as being known and loved by almost all our churches.

Our district is in need of men who will preach the gospel in all its power and yet preach it in its love and tenderness. Our people are conservative, and strictly denominational, being ready at all times to defend this sin for which Jesus prayed. They dare not be driven away and yet they must become acquainted with our position or they will never be aroused from their ignorance and misleading teaching. What Eastern Pennsylvania needs is teaching. Plain, definite preaching of the Word. The man who thinks that we are only called to go where the people are in need of more churches need not come to our district as the people are already supplied with churches and to spare as well as every one is under the sun. He must come with the knowledge of the God whom they ignorantly worship and ever and always call the people back to the simple worship of the New Testament.

C. A. Brady,
Canton, Pa. Cor. Sec. E. Pa.

East Washington.

The Palouse convention! It was a marvel and a model of enthusiasm and faith, of harmony and fellowship, of business energy and wisdom of plan, and in the possession of talent. George B. Ranshaw was there all the time; W. R. Warren was there; George W. Muckley was there; Ida W. Harrison was there; R. L. Russabarger was there; and so on. These would guarantee the success of any convention. Brother Ranshaw will pardon me, I hope, if I tell you that he said, both publicly and privately, that it was the best convention he ever attended anywhere, for several reasons. Now just think of that! Say, didn't you miss it though when you stayed at home?

The state work and plans are, briefly, as follows: A good report was made of work done last year, in spite of many adverse conditions. Enough pledges had been made to pay all debts, when collected. These will be gathered in as soon as possible. A general canvass of all the churches in East Washington will be made as soon as possible, in the interests of the state work. The united or co-operative evangelistic campaign among all the East Washington churches, great and small, will be pushed with energy. An earnest effort will be made to secure regular preaching in all our churches. A corresponding secretary has been employed, who, in addition to his work as such, will give all the time possible to evangelistic and missionary work. Just as soon as it is possible another evangelist will be employed to enter our new and waiting fields with all possible speed. All the pastors of the state are earnestly solicited to offer themselves to hold at last one meeting in some needy field. East Washington must be evangelized by 1909, if possible. It can be done, if every church will fall into line and every Christian will help.

In pursuance of these plans the corresponding secretary has done all he could, under the circumstances, to get the churches and good evangelists linked together. He is in touch with some good preachers and most of our preacherless churches, and hopes to have the "preacher" question settled soon. Any of our churches needing a preacher should write the corresponding secretary unless they have a good man in view. He is in a better position to help them than any one else. The work of the corresponding secretary was taken up August 16. Steps have been taken to place one of our strongest evangelists in Colfax. Evangelistic work has been begun at Colville. Preliminaries are about completed for the erection of a splendid house of worship. This should have been done two years ago. We will have a strong church in Colville in the near future, is my prediction. There is a splendid band of brethren here and a fine field. The writer will take the oversight of this work until the house is completed, a meeting held and a preacher located, if possible. Visits to the churches in the interests of pastoral and evangelistic work and the financial interests of the state work will be continued while the work is in progress here.

The officers of the E. W. C. M. S. elected for the year are as follows: President, C. F. Stevens, Spokane; first vice-president, M. H. Gregory, Walla Walla; second vice-president, E. M. Flinn, Colfax; recording secretary, A. C. Downing, Spokane; treasurer, A. K. Findley, Pullman. R. C. Sargent, of Ellensburg, was elected state Bible school superintendent. Miss Lilla Cobb, of Tekoa, was elected state superintendent of the Christian Endeavor Societies. Cobb has some splendid things planned for this year. Arrange with her for a rally. She will help you much.

And now, brethren, all together for a "long pull, a strong pull and a pull all together." Don't forget the motto. The A. C. M. S. will help us, are helping us. The church extension board will help us. We have a great, wide and promising field, our churches are united and hopeful, and the E. W. C. M. S. has sailed majestically past the breakers into the open sea. Decidedly, this is the time for a strong advance. Let no man fail to come to the help of the state work now.

Corresponding Secretary.

Florida.

Florida gladly accepts the kind offer of the Christian-Evangelist to have a good word in the State Mission number. Florida is a large state. It is more than 400 miles from Jacksonville west to Pensacola. It is 360 miles south to Miami, and yet the limits are not reached. In all this vast territory we have about 2,200 members, nominal and active. We have about 40 congregations, and about 20 preachers. Not more than 10 of these devote their time to the ministry and live of the gospel. The hope of Florida is the American Christian Missionary Society and our State Society, and the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. All of these missionary organizations are doing good work in the state. I speak for the Florida C. M. S.

It now has two evangelists in the field Sam J. White, McIntosh, Fla., and T. A. Cox, Ocoee, Fla. A third is engaged to commence after the National Convention.

Our plans are: 1. To strengthen the weak churches, rather than let them die, and organize others with no more promise of growth or permanency. 2. To give especial attention to establishing churches in growing and important towns, as centers of influence, but 3. Not to neglect the country places, because they are feeders of the towns. 4. To encourage little bands of scattered Disciples to meet on the Lord's day for breaking of bread and for Bible school work. 5. To educate the churches to want a part in mission work, and especially to help their own state. 6. To hold tent meetings in important towns, where we have a few members, but no house. We have the tent and Brother White is using it, and getting such a hearing from the people of the town where it is pitched, as we never had before. What we stand for is a revelation to many of the people.

"The freeze" in 1895 gave Florida such a setback that many churches have died since that time, so that we can not report an increase of churches like some more favored sections. But we are on the rising scale again, and hope to report the best year's work in our history for the ensuing missionary year.

T. A. Cox, Cor. Sec.

Illinois.

Indiana.

Wholesome growth characterizes all departments of state work in Indiana. A brief glance at the past will help to make plain the present situation and demonstrate the wonderful open doors for the future.

Our State Missionary Society was organized in 1839. For sixty-five years we had a money spending department with heroic service and sacrifice, but in all those years we did not have an adequate money-raising department. No man was employed as state secretary and paid a salary so that he could give his undivided time and energy to the work of raising money to support the work. The result was a great growth in number of churches and members, but so largely upon the independent basis that very many preachers and churches, seeing no necessary connection between their local work and the state society's work, have cultivated the extreme independence of our congregational form of government to the last degree, until in their relation to the state society it has become their settled habit. The baneful influence of this extreme independence is seen in the following lessons from the Year Book, 1907.

This shows that while we have, nominally, about 800 churches in Indiana, only 322 supported missions and 478 did not; that only 202 supported American missions and 598 did not, and only 155 supported Indiana missions and 645 did not. This needs no comment. We are past the day of piling up figures and boasting in Indiana. An old colored man was asked if he was an optimist, and answered, "No." Then he was asked if he was a pessimist, and he answered, "No. I want something substantial, I'm a possomist." We must face the facts in Indiana. On the one hand, wherever we have a representative preacher or teacher and a reasonably consistent membership, no religious body is growing as is the Christian Church. On the other hand we are confronted, not merely with perishing individuals but with the problem of scores of perishing churches—many of them in most strategic centers. The only society that can reach these unreached o-missionary or anti-missionary churches and convert them to missionary churches is the state society. We can take no great steps forward until these unreached churches are reached. The Foreign and American Societies can reach a few of our strong churches by holding missionary rallies in the strong centers, but they can not in any adequate sense reach these unreached churches. The only way these churches can be reached is by sending a live missionary man to them to instill the missionary spirit—in short to revive in them the spirit of Christ. The only missionary society that can do this work is the State Missionary Society. Our hands are tied for want of money and men. For three years we have been trying to establish a new system and order in Indiana missions that shall place all our work on a substantial business basis. The following facts will show the growth that has already come and the great increase that is promised:

1. We must gather and give forth information. Our people are interested and will give to support the work in proportion to the degree that they understand it and appreciate its value. "The Indiana Christian" has been revived at 25 cents subscription price per year, and made our state organ with a present circulation of nearly 3,000. A complete reporting system has been adapted which, by counties, has already given us the most accurate and complete reports in our history, and enables us to give definite information to any preacher or church that may ask concerning any church that has reported. This makes the office a bureau of information of great value to all.

2. We are rapidly completing the new system of organization by counties linked with the district and the district linked with the state. This enables us to reach every church in a county that is organized—a thing we were never able to do before. In these county organizations, churches are being grouped and preachers located with them where before they had only irregular preaching or railroad preaching with almost no pastoral work at all.

3. This enables us to co-operate as never before in locating preachers, sending evangelists and raising money to save perishing churches and enter unoccupied fields.

4. We have also unified our work. For years the various departments have been segregated. This year all departments of state work were united in one week of state convention with an articulated program at Bethany Park, and, whereas in last year's state missionary convention at Lafayette, 71 preachers and a few others attended; this year over 1,000 people attended the week of convention at Bethany Park. This is yet too small and we hope to see it grow.

This has led to the consolidation of the state Sunday-schol and Christian Endeavor departments with that of the state missionary, the officers of the Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor boards being members of the state missionary board and constituting special committees for their respective phases of work in the one board. All money from all sources will be sent to the one state corresponding secretary, J. O. Rose, at state headquarters. He will check it all over to the one state treasurer, W. S. Moffett, who will pay it out by order of the one board for any interest for which it is given. Separate bookkeeping will give due credit to each department. Thus we have simplified our machinery, economized our means, concentrated our efforts and with the new system and order believe that even greater service can be rendered than ever before.

The actual cash receipts have increased in these three years over 71 per cent, but the work has increased at a much greater rate. Last year (1907) we received (deducting a $500 loan) $4,503.89 from all sources. After paying all current expenses of the office, correspondence, publishing state papers, etc., by seven evangelists under direct pay from the state board, 42 meetings were held and 751 additions were secured. By 23 other volunteer evangelists under direction of our state evangelist, T. J. Legg, 52 other meetings were held with 1,027 accessions, 6 new churches wer organized, and 14 were reorganized and over 100 weak churches were helped. Butler College received $250,000 endowment. The C. W. B. M. of Indiana has commenced the erection of the new "Missionary Training School" at Irvington. But there are nearly 200 weak churches in Indiana that will perish unless the state society helps them. In many only a meeting is needed to revive and restore them to self-support. We have 168 towns with from 300 to 1,000 people and an aggregate population in 1900, of 83,327 in which we have no church. There are 39 cities from 1,000 population to the possibilities of the marvelous new city of Gary, aggregating 83,367 population, in which we have no church. We have 14 county seats with an aggregate population of over 32,000, in which we have no church.

Shall not these wonderful open doors in Indiana appeal to the consecrated common sense as well as to the love and pride of every Hoosier in our churches on November 3, for the greatest offering for state missions we have ever received? Are we not right in asking that Indiana shall give as much for state and American as for foreign missions this year? When from these churches started and fostered by state missions the support of all other missions must come, is it not the greatest thing we can do for world-wide missions to make November day for Indiana great? We can cite scores of churches in Indiana started 10 or 15 years ago by state work that are now giving hundreds of dollars yearly to the great fields beyond. Help us save Indiana.

J. O. Rose,
State Cor. Sec.

Indian Territory and Oklahoma.

During the year we employed 31 men, held 36 meetings, assisted 21 missions to have regular Lord's day preaching. We secured for the Indian Territory seven new living link men. Our missionaries organized 10 Sunday-schools and 16 churches—12 in the Indian Territory, one in Arkansas and three in Oklahoma. They baptized 513 and received into fellowship from other sources 465, making a total of 987. We have 75 organizations in the Indian Territory, about 45 of which are housed in buildings, the average cost of which is about $3,000. During the past year we answered every call for help and allowed all that was asked for in every case, and more than was asked for in sev-

Special to The Christian-Evangelist.

Norfolk, Va., October 13, 1907.—We are in the midst of our greatest history-making convention. The meetings of the several boards were controlled by a spirit of brotherly unity and progress. The matter of the gift of John D. Rockefeller to the Foreign Society, which has occasioned some difference of opinion and discussion, was finally settled, unanimously, on the basis proposed some weeks ago by President McLean, and endorsed by The Christian-Evangelist.

A committee composed of twenty-five members was appointed to report to the next convention on the advisability of establishing a national publication society.

Each society shows a notable advance in its work and a gratifying increase in receipts. This increase, in the case of the C. W. B. M., amounts to $70,000. Reports give promise of great things for the future.

Sunday was indeed a great day. The pulpits of the various Protestant churches were generally occupied, both morning and evening, by our preachers, who spoke to large and appreciative audiences. In the afternoon there was a great union communion service in Armory Hall.

We are having ideal weather. Norfolk is entertaining us nobly, and her hospitality will not soon be forgotten. The next convention will go to either Topeka or New Orleans. There is a hot contest between these two cities for the honor.

All signs point to high-water mark in gifts. J. H. Garrison.

—Joseph Gaylor informs us that the church at Monett, Mo., is, under the inspiration of its minister, R. W. Blount, adopting the tithing system.

—J. M. McConnell and G. A. Butler have been employed as evangelists for the southwest district of Oregon. They have held several good meetings already.

—C. L. Dean, of Woodward, Ia., after a holiday visit to Colorado, has been given a call to Loveland and will enter upon the work there November 1.

—S. A. Thomas reports a weakening of our church at Graford, Texas, but is working for reorganization and a church building to be erected within twelve months.

—Earle M. Todd is doing some excellent advertising in connection with his work at Manchester, N. H. He is being assisted by his sister with some special music.

—There is only one Christian church in Montgomery county, Texas, but some twenty-five members have just determined to build a house and have begun a protracted meeting. The next convention of Northeast Texas goes to Cookville, and the time is March 2, 1908. Six churches or more have entered during the last six months upon co-operative work for missionary purposes.

—A contract has been let for a frame church building at Abilene, Texas. This is for the South Side Christian Church, where there are now thirty-three members enrolled.

—C. F. Ladd reports that the workers at Rock Falls, Ill., are engaged in house to house visitation, giving personal invitation to people to attend church, and distributing our literature.

Opportunity for Young Men

To study for the ministry and work part time to help pay expenses. Write Pres. C. J. Burton, Ph. B., Pres. Christian College, Oskaloosa, Iowa.

—"Brick is pouring in for the new building." This is a sentence in a communication from Percy G. Cross, Sweetwater, Tex., where an excellent meeting has been in progress with J. Ross Miller as leader of the music.

—At the Northeast Iowa convention, held at Charles City, H. W. McKim, of Oelwein, was elected president and Noah Garwick, of Waterloo, secretary and treasurer. The next convention will be entertained by the church at Cedar Falls, Iowa.

—J. B. Huntley delivered the farewell sermon in the old house of worship at Canon City, Colo., and on September 22 the congregation entered their new building and an evangelistic meeting was launched under the preaching of H. O. Breeden.

—The corner stone of the South Berkeley (Cal.) Church has just been laid, and the main address was by E. W. Darst, the stone being laid by his wife. It was he who established the mission and organized the church, of which J. M. Hunter is now pastor. The building is to cost $20,000.

—Alfred Flower, one of our oldest and best known preachers, died at the home of his daughter, Elizabeth Flower Willis, in Worcester, Mass., on October 6. We are sure this announcement will bring sorrow to the hearts of many thousands who knew Brother Flower, and loved him for his work's sake and for his sweet, lovable nature.

—J. M. Horn, the new minister at Granite Park, Des Moines, seems to be giving great satisfaction to the congregation. A new parsonage is one of the goals toward which the brethren are now striving, while they have hopes of either enlarging the church or building a new one before very long. Brother Maxey, the late pastor, now evangelizing, is held in loving remembrance.

—"The Pacific Christian" has just completed one year of life since it began its regular visits after the great fire. The editor still finds the same old trouble—subscribers who read his paper are in no hurry to send in the money for paying the printers' and papermakers' bills. We admire Brother Berry's pluck, but it is hardly fair for a man to do the hard work of editing and running a newspaper and at the same time carry the debts of people who can as well, or better, afford to pay out their $1.50 than he can.

—The Castle Hall Church of Christ, which meets at 98 Weybosset street, Providence, R. I., has held a conference, at which sixteen were present. About the same number in addition have promised to work heartily for the cause of New Testament Christianity in this great city of New England. They have leased the hall for one year and began regular Lord's day services on October 6. They have arranged for an all-day special service for every third Tuesday in each month, in the course of which there will not only be social and business meetings, but some time will be given to distributing of tracts. M. L. Blaney is the minister.

MILLIONS OF WOMEN USE

Cuticura Soap, The World's Favorite Saponaceous Emollient for the Skin, Scalp and Hair.

For preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, for cleansing the scalp of crusts, scales, and dandruff, and the stopping of falling hair, for softening, whitening, and soothing red, rough, and sore hands, for baby rashes, itchings, and chafings, and many sanative, antiseptic purposes which readily suggest themselves to mothers, as well as for all the purposes of the toilet, bath, and nursery, Cuticura Soap, assisted by Cuticura Ointment, the great Skin Cure, is priceless.

—Lewis P. Kopp, whose resignation at Ivanhoe Park took effect at the end of September, goes to the church at Fort Dodge, Iowa. He has done a worthy work in Kansas City, and Brother Meador writes that both he and Sister Kopp will be greatly missed. He was especially successful in work among boys in the Ivanhoe neighborhood.

—W. F. Richardson began his fourteenth year with the First Christian Church in Kansas City, last Lord's day. The thirteen years in which he has served our cause in Kansas City, together with the thirteen years' pastorate of his predecessor, T. P. Haley, covers the most fruitful and constructive period in the history of our cause in that city.

—The twentieth annual convention of the Missouri Christian Endeavor Union will meet in Springfield, October 14-27. It promises to be the largest convention in the history of the Union, and all societies are urged to send delegates. A registration fee of $1 will be charged, which will entitle delegates to free lodging and breakfast and other privileges. For information, write Miss Roxey Cassity, 427 Grand avenue, Springfield.

—No definite date has been announced, we believe, for the dedication of the handsome new church building at Beatrice, Neb., but it has been whispered that October 29 would be the time for the interesting occasion. F. M. Rains is to be master of ceremonies. Brother Rains has dedicated, we believe, about 600 churches. We may take this occasion to say that the money he receives for this special work is not put into his own pocket independent of his salary from the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, but is credited to that account.

A CHEERFUL HOME FOR ALL

How to Give Amusement and Delight to Old and Young.

A cheerful home is the greatest of blessings. It is better to make home bright and attractive than to preach sermons to the younger members of the household about spending too much time away from it. Science and machinery have made it possible for many very remarkable contrivances that interest, instruct and amuse to be had in the humblest homes. Among the chief of these is the Edison Phonograph which is, perhaps, the favorite with the great inventor among his many truly wonderful inventions. The back page of this issue of The Christian-Evangelist is occupied by an advertisement that will, doubtless, be found quite interesting. It tells how, at a trifling expense, you can secure a genuine Edison Phonograph. It can be had for free trial without any payment, and then, if retained, can be paid for at the rate of 50 cents a week and upward. Diversion is as necessary to healthy lives as food or exercise, and surely there is no mode in which it can be obtained at less outlay than in the purchase of these wonderful instruments. It is with real pleasure, therefore, that attention of readers of this paper is called to this opportunity. W. D. Cree, Adv. Mgr.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA'S STATE-WIDE ALL-YEAR-ROUND CAMPAIGN OF EVANGELISM

In feverish impatience to get busy, our churches have entered upon the much-talked-of evangelistic campaign ahead of scheduled time. The bringing of S. M. Martin to the Long Beach convention was providential. Big would be a proper keyword for this new year in our section. The big presence of the big preacher with his big body, big voice and big sermons at the big convention proved to be the occasion of a big meeting at the beginning of a big year of big things. Preaching at Naomi Avenue Church, Los Angeles, W. S. Myers, pastor, this S. M. Martin added in four weeks 184 souls to a single congregation. This is one of the two greatest meetings in the history of our coast work, and, we trust, sets the pace in our Christian race for the year.

Directly upon the heels of this meeting O. P. Spiegel is in a meeting at the Broadway Church, ably seconded by B. F. Coulter and J. W. Utter, the pastors. It is expected that this will be followed by special meetings in the four missions tributary to that great church. H. O. Breeden, "the great general" of our brotherhood, is Westward making his progress across the continent to lead the Magnolia church, J. P. Knight, pastor, in a special campaign for souls. This meeting will begin the last of October. At the same time James Small will be leading the forces at Pomona and from there will go to Fullerton. Boyle Heights has engaged J. T. Stivers for a meeting in November, and simultaneously with these at Long Branch Victor W. Dorris will be uplifting the standard of the cross. On October 6 the Figueroa Boulevard Church, E. H. Kellar, pastor, began special meetings, E. E. Lowe, of San Bernardino doing the preaching. Then later E. H. Kellar will in return do a similar work at San Bernardino. Many such exchanges in meetings are likely to be arranged.

E. F. Henderson, in charge of the colored mission on Furlong tract, Los Angeles, is out with the announcement that Elder Preston Taylor, of Nashville, Tenn., will be present to lend his talents and presence in a forward movement among our colored brethren of Los Angeles. In this important work the heartiest co-operation will secure large and lasting results.

Already J. Cronenberger is assisting Dan Trundle at Oxnard and Ventura in an effort to enlarge the number and increase the efficiency of the Lord's forces thereabout.

Our churches at Covina and Riverside, ministered to by W. G. Conley and G. M. Anderson, are patiently awaiting the coming of the Brooks brothers in January and February, when doubtless great things will be a-doing in their fields.

But the writer is getting ahead of himself. Frequently we were reminded at the convention of "and Arizona." This great territory is manifesting her ability to receive the gospel. A short year's work by our faithful missionary at Tempe has not only built a tabernacle, but doubled the membership. During our Long Beach convention this earnest apostle of the gospel, W. H. Salyer, went to a mining camp and preached, gathering several souls into the Kingdom and setting in motion the forces will bear fruit in righteousness and add another church to our Arizona sisterhood. O. P. Spiegel is to assist him at Tempe in November. At Douglass, where A. B. Carpenter is minister, a meeting is just closing in which 45 were added to the church, greatly strengthening its membership and increasing its ability for service. Brother Jones (the one from Texas) did the preaching.

And thus the fires of a zealous evangelism are beginning to sweep "The Great Southwest." Every church and community is already interested. The men and money must be found to answer the calls for reapers in this rich harvest field. January, 1908, must not come upon us until the board has a capable evangelist to work among our small churches in Southern California and another one to enter the new fields in Arizona.

Pray ye the Lord of the Harvest to send forth reapers. Entreat ye the churches and brethren to pour forth gold and silver that these opportunities may be seized before it is too late.

Grant K. Lewis,
Secretary.

THE KANSAS CONVENTION.

The convention of the Kansas Christian Missionary Society was held in Wichita September 30-October 3.

It was the largest convention ever held in the state. More than 800 out-of-town delegates registered. W. R. Warren delivered two addresses. F. E. Hagin, of Tokyo, Japan, and F. M. Rains presented foreign missionary interests. George W. Muckley and J. H. Mohorter told of the success of their work. E. V. Zollars spoke on the importance of education. Herbert Moninger delighted the audiences with his Sunday-school addresses. The Kansas ministers on the program performed well their part in making the convention one of the most helpful. One of the pleasing features of the convention was a banquet given to the ministers by E. W. Allen, pastor of the Central Church, with 110 ministers seated at the table at one time.

The reports of the work done will be found under the head of "The Call From the States."

Plans were made for the enlargement of the work for this year. The jubilee offering for Kansas missions will be taken on Kansas day, November 3. The churches are expecting to break all past records in their liberality.

The officers elected are: F. E. Mallory, president; J. M. Kersey, vice-president; I. W. Gill, president of Bible school work; O. N. Roth, president of Christian Endeavor; Mrs. S. L. Wilson, president of C. W. B. M.; Miss Louie Bagley, superintendent of Junior work; George E. Lyon, superintendent of church work and Miss A Rosalea Pendleton, secretary; Myron C. Settle, superintendent of Bible schools.

The closing session was addressed by Mrs. Anna R. Atwater. A number of ministers made short, congratulatory speeches and E. W. Allen closed the session with prayer. The convention will be held next year at Topeka.

Topeka, Kan. Geo. E. Lyon.

A Happy Occasion.

A very delightful incident occurred on Saturday evening, October 5, at the home of one of our best beloved brethren in Kansas City, Mo., J. C. Hill, for several years deacon in the First Church, and now occupying a like position in the church on Linwood boulevard. Brother Hill had invited about a dozen of his most intimate friends to dine with him, an invitation that those who know of the hospitality of his elegant home never decline. By a little strategy on the part of the guests it was discovered that the occasion was a birthday; so at the close of the dinner, so handsomely served by Sister Hill, S. B. Robertson, an elder of the Linwood Boulevard Church, presented Brother Hill, in behalf of the guests, with a handsome loving cup, accompanying it with a brief address appropriate to the occasion. The complete surprise almost took away the power of speech from Brother Hill.. It is a good thing to testify to our love and confidence while our friends are yet with us; and the small company who were permitted to share in the joy of this occasion expressed the affection in which Brother Hill is held by thousands of Disciples in Kansas City, among whom he is known and loved for his kind and generous spirit. May he be spared yet many years to the fellowship of his friends and brethren. W. F. Richardson.

eral instances. Our churches are not disposed to impose upon our board. They glory in helping rather than in being helped. About forty of them contributed to Indian Territory missions the past year more than $2,000.

As to the future let me say that at our convention, which was a joint convention with Oklahoma, we united the two boards. We now have one board of directors, one treasurer, one convention and set of convention officers; but for the present at least we will continue the two corresponding secretaries, J. M. Monroe in Oklahoma and S. R. Hawkins in Indian Territory. But henceforth we prefer to speak of these fields of labor as the Western and Eastern Districts of Oklahoma. The name given the organization is as follows: "Oklahoma Christian Missionary Society." All mail intended for the western district should be addressed to J. M. Monroe, corresponding secretary, Oklahoma City, and all mail intended for the eastern district should be addressed to S. R. Hawkins, corresponding secretary, McAlester, I. T., box 581. W. R. Blake, of Weleetka, I. T., is treasurer, but will keep a separate account with the two secretaries. The board of directors will meet quarterly at Guthrie, Okla. The next convention will be held the first week in August, and with the church at Shawnee. T. R. Dean, of McAlester, will preside. S. R. Hawkins.

Kansas Jubilee.

The Kansas Christian Missionary Society will celebrate its fiftieth anniversary this year. The Disciples in the state organized for co-operative work before there were known to be more than three churches within the whole territory. They began co-operating in its infancy and weakness and set a fine example for the strong and weak to co-operate through all time.

The Kansas Missionary Society during its history has organized 188 churches, 175 Bible schools and added 18,500 to church membership. Last year eleven workers were employed for a part or all their time, laboring 2,586 days, visiting 188 churches, organizing and reorganizing 27 churches and departments and adding by confession and otherwise 446 members to the church. There was raised for Kansas missions $8,500, and for local work $9,754.92. The state board located 28 ministers, supplying 32 places with preaching and arranged for 16 revival meetings in addition to those held by their own evangelists.

We look forward to the jubilee year with high expectations. A new precedent is to be established and the more effective service rendered. The jubilee offering will be taken on Kansas day, Sunday, November 3. Churches are already well prepared for the largest offering of their history. In celebrating the birth of our co-operative work we are expecting a large number of people to become life-directors and life-members of the society. We are encouraged by the victories of the past fifty years, to seek for large results in this year of the Kansas jubilee.

Kentucky.

The year that culminated in the splendid convention at Latonia marked a period of unusual success. Ther were 2,502 additions, 45 men at work a part or all the time, 50 Sunday-schools organized, 50 prayer-meetings organized and eleven congregations organized. Although our receipts were affected by the local stringency of the money market—due to the fact that two or more years' product of tobacco is tied up in the movement of the society of equity for higher prices—we made an advance in the receipts for the evangelistic fund of several hundred dollars. The total receipts, including money raised by the men on the field for local work and self-support, amounted to a little more than $30,000. This is a fine showing. We have advanced every year for the past five and there is yet room for much progress. Our convention was characterized by harmony and enthusiasm. The writer is proud of the way our daughters handled this large gathering. Eight years ago we had at Latonia only about eight members; now we have 270. We had no house, now we have one large enough to house the state meeting. Even five years ago the little struggling band was about ready to give up and quit; now they feel that all things are possible. The church is full of enthusiasm. We all felt the influence of this and I am confident that the people who attended the Latonia convention think that our going there has benefited us. Some suggestions and recommendations were made that will bring about most decided changes. The most conspicuous is the appointment of committees from all interested organizations looking to the establishment of an assembly where our conventions shall be held. This committee is to report in 1908. The brethren think that we have reached a time at which it is imperative that we establish such a permanent home for our annual conventions and that we will then have opportunity to consider other interests.

During the past year 45 men were at work in our mission field a part or all the time. We hope to be able to keep up to this mark during the new year. While we may find changes necessary and some fields will assume self-support, we are already confronted by appeals from other fields. Ten thousand dollars is the least sum that our people ought to put into our state treasury for the new year's work.

"Basic Facts" is the title of a leaflet that we hope will give much information and create much interest. We are having this—with letters and coin pocket to be sent out to the people—printed in large quantities and hope that the brethren will order them freely and scatter them liberally. Let us lift our standard high for 1907 and 1908, and make an advance over the record of all past years. "November for Kentucky Missions, by Kentuckians," ought to be our ringing, rolling cry. H. W. Elliott, Sec.

Michigan.

We have in this state one of the most highly favored of all the favored states of our Union. In varied resources we are among the first, and in climate we have all kinds, from the balmy breeze of June to the fierce blasts of an Alaskan January. A recent newspaper calls the attention to the wonderful wealth of what is called the Five-State District, of which Michigan is one. The facts taken from the government reports show that this is a very important center for the coming of a mighty population in the next twenty years.

In view of this the Disciples of Christ are striving to awaken a larger conception of opportunity and duty on the part of the membership of the state. Much good work has marked the past few years. We are proud of the record of Traverse City, Kalamazoo, Grand Rapids and Detroit. In all of these places a strong advance in plans and in achievements has marked the work.

For the first time in many years the state board is out of debt and in condition to do business. We owe much to the American Board and to the C. W. B. M. for this condition, and especially to one of our sisters of the state, Mrs. E. L. Ford, of Detroit, do we owe our gratitude for her liberal assistance.

We now have secured a lot in Muskegon, a city of 25,000, on the shore of Lake Michigan, and expect to build a chapel there and have a man in the work by January 1. For the first time in years the state board is thus enabled to go into a city and fix the location and the policy of a work. It will not be easy nor are we overconfident of the results, but so far we have been blessed in every step of the proceeding.

We are looking for a record from Owasso, under the efficient management of C. M. Keene, and also in the North in the growth of several new churches. Yes, Michigan can honestly say to the brethren, "We thank God and take courage."

With a noble band of preachers who stand for service and devotion we have especial reason for hopefulness.
Grand Rapids. F. P. Arthur,
Corresponding Secretary.

Missouri.

As the helpfulness, efficiency, necessity and importance of the state missionary organization is manifested, it is coming to be more and more appreciated. Time was when many of our people, thinking only of the evangelistic side of the work, and believing that the time would come when there would no longer be necessity for this kind of work, thought they saw the time approaching when the organization must, of necessity, go out of existence. But there is no prospect now that the need for strong, persistent, evangelization of the state will not be needed; in fact, the need enlarges every year; and moreover, time and experience are demonstrating that, both to the churches and the ministry, this organization is of priceless value, and hence the work is growing in favor every year.

There is hardly a church or a minister in the state that is not under more or less obligation for the helpfulness of our state work. And they are appreciating it. Here and there we do find a minister or a church that does not recognize the value of the work being done, and are ready to exclaim, "I have no need of thee;" but the large majority of both ministers and churches are recognizing the value of the state society. No severer test of this can be made than by the receipts. People will not pay for that which they esteem of but little value. It is a far cry from the $4,500, of our Missouri receipts of six years ago and the $11,225 of the last missionary year; receipts nearly trebled in that time. And when you consider that in addition during the last three years over $20,000 has been raised for the Permanent Fund it is the strongest possible indication of the growing favor of the work.

The society could use three times its present income and then not answer all the real, actually needy calls that constantly are coming to the office. More and more is seen the necessity of a man with strong organizing ability in each one of our districts. The work of the state is so large that no one man can begin to accomplish it. Our cause in Missouri is sadly suffering for the want of these district men. What Joseph Gaylor is to Southwest Missouri we need some man to be in each of the other districts.

This is the plan of the state board, and this will we do if the brethren permit. Are you in favor of it? A large offering in November is a strong vote in favor of this move.

The state convention gave enthusiastic endorsement to this plan, but that is not enough; the real endorsement, the one that counts, is the one contained in the offering.

We have set our mark at $15,000 for this year. Can it be reached? Of course it can. Give us the means to employ these men, help us in this way to develop the undeveloped resources of our great people and the Centennial celebration shall see the "Centennial aims" all reached, and we shall Nebraska.

Nebraska has enjoyed a good year in missionary work and general church work. Our churches have been forging ahead in all ways and taking a place worthy of the cause we represent. New buildings have been built or are building that will add $100,000 to the value of church property. Our preachers are the peers of any like number among any people. The fight to possess new territory and to increase efficiency in that already held, is vigorous and aggressive. Material prosperity is still with us, and we are learning the deep lesson of Christian liberality. The Bible school work is growing rapidly. The reports from the schools show in most cases a Bible school enrollment equaling or exceeding the church membership. This ought to be, to be sure, but it has not been.

The missionary work of the state is heavy. No stupendous things have been done, but some gratifying progress is made each year, and this has been no exception. Our missionary army is not a flying column, but rather an advancing army, fortifying as we go. The new places established are few, but flourishing. One has finished its new house and another is at work and will dedicate before the first of the year. More than a half thousand were added to the church during the year. Twenty-two meetings were held. Twenty-nine different fields were assisted. Two thousand three hundred and thirty-five days' of service rendered, not including the corresponding secretary, who put in full time. Of the 112 churches giving to state missions 70 gave as much or more than we asked; 92 of 97 of Bible schools did the same. All the Christian Endeavor societies that gave, 52 in number, paid in full. Only six churches that gave the previous year failed to give last year. One hundred and thirty-nine churches were apportioned and 112 of them paid something. We had three living-link evangelists. Two supported by churches and one by an individual, at $300 each. The year culminated in a splendid state convention.

The plans for the future contemplate several new organizations, the reorganization of some disabled ones. The possible resurrection of some dead ones, and an increase of usefulness in one or two or three exceedingly important centers. We have a number of new towns building on new lines of railroads. We hope to go in with the early ones. We still continue the support of places needing a helping hand. This has been increased largely.

We need more men to preach. Good men, with character and piety and a fair ability to preach the gospel. We do not compete with the older churches of the East in salaries, but we aim to do the right thing. The man of worth never fails to get a suitable support in Nebraska.

The State Missionary Society is trying to be a big brother to the little sister churches that need a lift and to open new fields where we have a few families to begin with. There is much to do in this new, great and advancing state. Foreign influences are large. We have the best high license law in the Union (so we hear), and it is a standing bulwark for the liquor traffic. But it has received a good many bruises lately, and it looks bad.

Northern California.

In three important particulars our work during the past year established a new record. First, in the extraordinarily large number of contributing churches; second, in the amount of money actually given, and third, in the number of additions to our mission churches.

Plans for the present year look forward to the greatest year's work in our history. Over thirty different fields are to be assisted; two or more evangelists are to be kept in the field all the time; several new houses of worship are to be built, and new and important fields are to be entered and churches established.

To carry out these plans it is necessary to raise almost twice as much money as was ever raised in a single year before. This is manifestly impossible without the assistance of every minister and church in the state. We have come to our Kadesh-Barnea in California, and it is for the churches to say whether we shall go in and possess the land, or be swallowed up in the wilderness of sectarianism and irreligion.

Churches of Northern California, what is your answer? If the present plans are carried out we shall see a full thousand members added to our mission churches this year. A generous offering on the first Sunday in November will enable your state board to carry these plans out, and will give you fellowship in what promises to be the greatest achievement in the history of our work in this state. North Carolina.

When North Carolina becomes fully and keenly alive to the true situation she will bound forward and shine as brightly as any star among the galaxy of states. Rapidly becoming one of the richest states in the Union, growing and enlarging in every direction, she furnishes a glowing opportunity for the propagation of the gospel. All of her towns are extending their borders and inviting every thing that looks toward their upbuilding. While there are several churches in the state with greater financial and numerical strength than the Disciples of Christ there are none with richer opportunities for growth than they. There is scarcely a town of any importance in the state where there is not a nucleus for a church, sometimes smaller and sometimes larger. This is due to the fact that the work of the past has been confined almost altogether to the rural districts and in the great influx of the country people to the towns in seeking employment, schools for their children and place for their professions, after proper equipment, and sometimes due to the marriage of one whose interests were in town. Confining the work to the rural districts has had its advantages and disadvantages. We have lost in many ways by this influx to the cities. Many have gone back to the world, many have gone into the denominational ranks, who will never return, and the country churches have been greatly weakened, and not a few churches are dead, if not extinct, as a result of the loss of many of these livest, best and most progressive members. And yet, in spite of these losses, there remains more or less of a nucleus for a congregation in many of these towns to which Disciples of Christ have gone, and a number of these country churches are left with strength and means enough to help plant the cause in many places where there have never been churches after the New Testament pattern. To this task, those in North Carolina who are wont to be known as Christians have begun to set themselves in no uncertain way.

The writer is a Southerner and the field has been studied from the time that he began his preparation for the ministry, the work has been followed, her men in the ministry have been kept up with, the conditions prevailing in this state and that have been and are regarded and the present situation in each state, considered from the viewpoint of a field for Christian activities and missionary endeavor, on the part of the Disciples, has been fully taken into account, and the writer thinks he is not wild in his assertion, when he says that the Tarheel kingdom furnishes the greatest immediate opportunity for growth of any state in the Southeastern group mentioned above. It is true that North Carolina has no great city but she has a number of good sized, growing and flourishing towns. These are Wilmington, Charlotte and Greensboro, with about 35,000. In Wilmington alone have we an organization and that started only this year. Then, there are Ashville, Durham, Winston-Salem, Raleigh, New Bern, High Point, Elizabeth City, that figure about and above 20,000 on their population. And again there are Wilson, Washington, Rocky Mount, Goldsboro, Concord, Salisbury, Henderson, Fayettesville, Kinston and a few others that figure around and above 10,000, in some instances. Then there are perhaps 100 towns ranging from 2,000 to 8,000 in population. In only a few of these is there an organization of the primitive sort but in a large number there are Disciples and from many of them we hear the Macedonian call. To mention a few of these places and the number of Disciples in them might be wise just here. The figures to be given below are partly estimated: Greensboro, 35,000, with 60 Disciples; Charlotte, 35,000, with 25; Durham, 24,000, with 17; High Point, 20,000, with 20; Elizabeth City, 20,000, with 50; Goldsboro, 12,000, with 12; Fayetteville, 12,000, with 30; Burlington, 8,000, with 15; Tarboro, 5,000, with 30; Edin-

In addition to the above list there are a number of other towns with above 2,000 population in which no regular work is going on.

Farmer preachers have done most of the work in the past. They were a noble lot and did a noble and self-sacrificing service. But the people have not as large a vision as is necessary. Their horizon is rather limited. Many of them "see through a glass darkly," indeed, but there are hopeful signs of wider vision and a more correct view. Another condition growing out of the old regime is the contracted idea of finance in the Kingdom of God. They do not try to run their farms or their business enterprises on the small scale of the past; but many are trying to run the church and its business in the same old way they used to run it, when Farmer Brown, who raised his own meat, lard, bread, etc., in sufficient quantities and who had his own conveyance for getting back and forth at the time of his monthly appointments when they had the good old country meeting that cost them nothing, but that was so enjoyable, was the preacher of preachers, to them; not so much for what he said but for the heavenly, tearful and sometimes fearful tone in which he said it, and they gave this monumental preacher the munificent and magnificent sum of $40 a year for his regular services, protracted meeting and all. The people are beginning to get away from this effort to run the church on the copper basis. The increased liberality of the Disciples of Christ in North Carolina within the last year is very refreshing indeed.

Another condition might be mentioned. Because of blunders and failures in the past a large per cent of the people have to be convinced that things can be done in this state, as elsewhere, when they are gotten at in a businesslike way. The work of the past two years is waking some up along this line. The development of the work at Rocky Mount, Wilmington, Belhaven, Plymouth, Pinetown, Bath, Fremont and Macclesfield has verified the fact that work can be done effectively in the cities and towns of this state. A most encouraging condition is that there seems to be none of the "anti"-missionary spirit here which hinders the work so greatly in a number of the states with which this is grouped. It is true that there is a good deal of the "o"-missionary spirit, but that can be removed very easily by showing results in the work. This makes it very necessary to move very safely and cautiously in all undertakings and to have a little help from our national board, in order to make a creditable showing for the next two or three years. In this connection it might be said that the present state board is determined not to enter any place to begin a work where it has not reasonable assurances that the work can be continued to a condition of permanency and self-support.

The needs of this field, as with many others, are men and money. Men of education, ability and experience are needed; money with which to pay such men. The men are not here and seem hard to get. All the year a man has been sought for the readiest field in the state at a salary of $1,200 and yet he is not. He was almost there several times but he turned in another direction before he reached the spot. They may turn from the borders of the old North state now, but in five years or less time they will be seeking her fields for service.

This year the work has been established at Wilmington, an option taken on a $6,000 lot and the effort to pay for it well begun; the membership brought to 66; a strong man located and supported for the year. Rocky Mount has been kept up and brought forward in its work. A lot costing $1,200 has been bought and paid for, over $100 raised on the debt of Atlantic Christian College and arrangement made to build a parsonage to cost $2,500. Successful work has been done in several smaller fields. A great effort has been made to free the college of $11,000 bonded debt. It is hoped that this entire debt will be met at the state convention, during the last wek of October. In addition to all this a state paper, known as "The Carolina Evangel," was begun the first of March and has been a marked success, helping to put life into work in many ways. There have been near 3,000 letters written during the year by the president and corresponding secretary, together. So the work has continued through the year, and the foundation has been laid for a great work next year.

The plans for another year are not altogether matured or definite but some things are being shaped up. Should the present board be continued there will be a great effort made to double the state mission money, and effort will be made also to double the circulation of the paper, should it be continued by the convention; and should the debt on the college be raised additional buildings will be put up. Besides there will be some forward steps made in the mission work in the state.

The outlook is brighter and more hopeful than it has, perhaps, ever been in the history of the cause in the state. The college is flourishing. The dormitory room is taxed to its utmost capacity and class room is at a premium. There are several ministerial students in attendance and more to follow in a few weeks. The Wilson church is fortunate in having Jessie C. Caldwell as its minister and is enlarging the capacity of its Sunday-school rooms. The college feels happy in having this splendid man of God as dean to the faculty. The church is paying him $200 more than it has ever paid a preacher and a number of the churches in the state are talking on increased salary for their preachers. This the state board has tried to stimulate. Dr. J. J. Harper, who has sacrificed and worked so hard to bring the college to the front, is happy in the flattering attendance of this session and sees grander things yet to be for this much-needed institution.

The readers can see from all that has preceded that North Carolina is beginning to wake up, that her gold is beginning to glitter in the work of the Master, the dawning of a better day is on and everything is hopeful for the future. W. G. Walker,

New York.

Things of unusual moment are and have been occurring in this land of Empire. To those accustomed only to Western prairies and sparcely settled districts, this state containing one-tenth of the population of the country and producing one-sixth of her manufactured products, is inconceivable. Some verbal "thumb prints" of her work may prove of interest. On the evening of June 27 a party of twenty brethren and sisters went for a tour of Chinatown (New York) after the evening session of the New York convention.

Several had heard us speak of the "midnight mission" in Doyer street, and expressed a desire to visit this work, so thither we wended our way, arriving about 11:30 p. m. The leader was Ranney, the former "crook," and he immediately turned the service over to our party, with Joseph Keevil as master of ceremonies. A number of our party gave encouragement and advice to the 300 human derelicts present and Brother Keevil extended the invitation to which five men responded. A preacher was assigned to each seeker, for prayer and instruction, after which their confessions were taken in the Scriptural way. The effect was electrical! The people looked on in open-eyed wonder. Finally the leader, Ranney, former Bowery crook and "bad man," with eyes dimmed with tears and a voice choked with emotion, said, in the dialect of the Bowery: "Well, fellers, dis is a new one on me. I never seen no'in like dis before; but, say! I wish somebody'd a asked me dat question when I came forward." It was all so usual to us, so wonderful to them. It was probably the first time Jesus Christ had ever been confessed in the gospel way in Chinatown. It was a scene no one present will readily forget, and a recent letter from Ranney assures us that at least one of those men has remained true to his confession.

The above is merely a passing incident in the great work possible in our greatest city. That we ought to have a city missionary to carry on and follow up just such work, goes without saying. What the results of such effort might be, the reader can readily picture with the above incident to guide his imagination.

A full report of the open air campaign carried on this summer by Brothers Waugh and Keevil in the city of Brooklyn (Greater New York) appeared in The Christian-Evangelist of September 10. It was planned as an experiment but proved a valuable experience. By means of this work entrance has been gained to a large number of Christless homes and a great harvest is expected in our "follow-up" campaign in November. Here again is the call for a city missionary to aid in the evangelization of this great and needy field.

A survey of our state resources some time since established a conviction that a campaign of education would result in increased offerings for our state work. The suggestion was taken up by the finance committee and ratified by the convention at New York. Plans were made whereby the state secretary should —Faces Toward the Light. Sylvanus Stall. This is for the devotional hour. Every phase of the Christian life—its joys and sorrows, its temptations and triumphs—is treated in reverent and deeply spiritual manner that is sure to prove helpful and inspiring to every reader. $1.00.

Dependable Books

—Lectures on Preaching. By Phillips Brooks. These are stenographic reports of lectures delivered by this prince of preachers before the divinity school of Yale College. It is a beautifully bound volume. Considering the wealth of learning it contains, together with the beauty of expression and inspiration to become a useful preacher, it is cheap at $1.30.

—Huck's Synopsis of the First Three Gospels. By Ross Z. Finney. This contains an analytical outline of the parallel passages of the synoptics that has received the commendation of many able Bible scholars. The appendices are valuable. In them are listed Old Testament quotations in the synoptics, Johannine parallels to the synoptics, parallels and duplicates, etc. $1.00.

—Christianity's Storm Center. By Charles Stelzli. To the author the storm center is the city, and the problem of the city is an industrial one. He believes that if the church can be aroused to face the problem, investigate conditions and alter its own methods it will win the fight for uniting the church and the laboring masses. Through it all there prevails a contagious optimism. $1.00.

—The Evangelistic Note. By W. J. Dawson. The address on "Self-Reservation" was delivered to the students of Yale University. The remaining thirteen were given during a revival held by this truly great preacher for Newell Dwight Hillis in Plymouth Church, Brooklyn. These are all on lofty spiritual plan and will be most helpful. $1.25.

—Object Lessons for Children. By C. H. Tyndall. The eye is the first avenue to the soul. It is the shortest. It is the easiest and quickest. The author believes in using the eye as a medium for the communication of instruction in the Scriptures and in the ways of life. The book contains a great many brief but strikingly illustrated talks to children. It will be helpful to every preacher and Bible or secular school-teacher. $1.00.

—The Cyclopedic Handbook to the Bible. Agnes Green. This is one of the profoundest and most helpful introductions to the Scriptures ever offered the reading public. It treats of the language, canon, versions, transmissions, etc.; of the credentials and claims; of the inspiration and revelation; of the interpretation of the Scriptures and their practical application. The introductions of the various divisions of the work are also of deep interest. $1.50, prepaid.

visit every church and lay our work and its needs before them. This, with few exceptions, will be fulfilled before state day, and from the responses already received, it is evident that the offering of the churches will be increased by from $800 to $1,000 over last year. The state board is already making plans for an aggressive work for the current year.

A nucleus of 17 Disciples has been assembled in Lockport and within the next few weeks we hope to see a work established in this flourishing city. Utica, Binghampton, Yonkers and Schenectady all offer promising fields which we hope to enter in the near future. Watertown, which has been a drain on the state treasury for many years, at last assumes self-support and gives some promise of a future. Several other of our mission points will report their ability to stand alone by the 1908 convention. This will release some of our funds for new work, and a hundred city fields are ready for our entrance.

It has been the policy of the state society to establish a few strong churches, rather than to organize a large number to let them die of inanition. The result of this policy is shown in the strength and aggressiveness of our churches. Only two preachers in the state are serving more than one congregation, and the per capita offerings of New York have never been even approximated by any other state. While in numbers we are little more than 9,000, in offerings we stand in the forefront. Our offering for Church Extension last year excelled either Kentucky, Missouri or Ohio, and only Illinois, with more than ten times our numbers, exceeded us, and that by no flattering excess. We stood sixth in foreign and thirteenth in home offerings.

As a loyal, liberal host, New York has received full recognition. We believe we are on the verge of a great crisis in our state and wait with patience for the day when our brotherhood at large will realize our need as well as they do our liberality, and will aid the 9,000 Disciples of New York to preach the apostolic gospel to the 8,066,000 people within her borders.

South Dakota.

Every country that has been a factor in the civilization of the world has been rich in material resources. I wish to give the readers of The Christian-Evangelist a few simple facts about South Dakota—a state that is but little known except by a few who have taken the time to investigate. Lewis and Clarke explored this country in 1804; no permanent settlement was made until 1857. South Dakota was admitted as a state in 1889. Her area is 76,000 square miles. The population is 455,185 or six to the square mile. The population is mainly American. There are 33,473 Scandinavians, 17,873 Prussian Germans, 12,365 Russian Germans, 11,144 Canadians, 5,564 English and Scotch, 3,298 Irish and 1,566 Hollanders. There are 83,536 homes and 57,288 of these are owned and 37,473 are free from encumbrances. The state is free from debt and her property is worth more than one billion dollars. About 43,000,000 bushels of wheat, 51,000,000 of corn, 20,000,000 of barley and 80 tons of honey are produced annually. The mineral products last year were $10,000,000. Two of the largest orchards in America are in South Dakota. There is deposited in the banks $35,000,000, most of which belongs to the common people.

South Dakota has a splendid university, an agricultural college, a school of mines, a school for the deaf and blind, and four normal schools. Beside these there is a good public school system with two sections in every township in the state reserved for school purposes and 147,000 children in attendance.

The Presbyterians have a college at Huron, the Congregationalists one at Redfield and one at Yankton, the Methodists one at Mitchell. The state is being rapidly netted with railroads. She exceeded all other states last year in the number of miles constructed.

The national government is expending $2,000,000 in an irrigation project which will reclaim 100,000 acres of semi-arid land for settlement. There are many good homesteads yet untaken west of the Missouri river. The people are wide awake, progressive and intelligent.

The churches of the day do not meet the demands of the new age. A simple gospel that helps men to live, rather than a sort of embalming for the resurrection, appeals to the people of the Northwest generally. The real gospel preached and lived by men, not "clergymen," will win. Our great need is men and money to start the work and the people will respond liberally. The door is wide open and the call comes from all over both the Dakotas from weak churches and scattered Disciples for help and encouragement. No other home mission field requires more of the heroic spirit.

We need educated, practical men to deal with the problems that arise in the formative period of a new and vigorous civilization.

Aberdeen, S. D. Finley B. Sapp.

South Idaho.

It is a little hard for me to speak of all the work that has been done in South Idaho during the last year, as I have not been associated with the work all the year. Considering the amount of money at our disposal much work has been done. During the forepart of the year the board had in its employ George Ritchey as evangelist, and he organized several churches. After he closed his work the board was without an evangelist until about the first of April, when I was employed. My time has been divided between the evangelistic and corresponding secretary's work. Several meetings have been held with the purpose of strengthening and making self-supporting some weak points, and much more of this work remains to be done. The board has regularly supported pastors at three points. These have all done good work and have strengthened the cause where they have labored.

During the summer the corresponding secretary gave some time to visiting the few strong churches and raising funds to carry on the work for the coming year. More heroic giving has never been witnessed by us; some of our state missions and one small church about $3 per member.

South Idaho is a most wonderful mission field. I do not believe there is another such field in the United States. If the reader will take the map and trace the Salmon river and look at all south of that line he will see the field in which we have but a dozen churches, two-thirds of which are weak and must have help immediately or die. Ours is a work of building from the ground up. Many new irrigating projects are being opened up and thousands of people are coming to Idaho. They are a good class of people. A large per cent of them are members of some denominational church with a sprinkling of Disciples of Christ in every new town. Each expects that this denomination will come with a large missionary fund and establish a church. If we could meet the denominations on the field with as large an home missionary fund as they have we could plant churches in many of these new places. It is exceedingly expensive to establish a church in Idaho. Our watchword is, twenty-five churches in South Idaho by June 1, 1908. I could organize them in that many weeks if I could assure them that the Church Extension Board would build them a house and that our state or national board would support a pastor for a portion of time until they were fully established. Building materials are very high and living expenses are very high and preachers can not live on the small salaries that they used to in the new countries. The brethren that are scattered abroad think of all these things and are slow to say, "Come and organize us." Then it is exceedingly hard to raise money on the field and the evangelist must be entirely supported by the board. The reason is that the people, though a thrifty people, come here with limited means and have to pay for their land and water rights and build their houses before they begin to realize anything from the land. The land is worth the money and they will have plenty by and by. This is what makes the field look so promising for the future. We need help now. Our brethren in our older established churches realize this and that is why they are standing by our work so heroically. But with all their united gifts it is like a drop in the bucket. Frank C. Jones, Evangelist.

Caldwell.

South Kentucky.

The work for the past missionary year (ending April 30, 1907) in South Kentucky has been on the upgrade. Last year from a financial standpoint we went to our convention with all obligations met and a balance of $333.15 in the treasury with which to begin the new year. Thirteen meetings were held by the corresponding secretary at as many places.

What will be done depends largely upon the interest the brotherhood in this fertile field take in it. Our executive committee in a recent meeting decided to employ an office secretary and a singing evangelist. The living-link idea is making its way also with the work. The Owensboro church has decided to become a living-link church in South Kentucky. Mayfield church has been asked to do the same. The amount necessary is $200.

Our educational work is in fine shape. Our two colleges, South Kentucky College at Hopkinsville, and West Kentucky College at Mayfield, are practically out of debt and efforts are being made, with bright promise of success, to raise an endowment fund. Provisions are made in both colleges for the education of young men for the gospel ministry free of charge. The two colleges can take four young men to educate at one time. We are looking toward the accomplishment of greater things all the time.

W. J. Hudspeth, Cor. Sec.

Texas.

Our last annual report showed: Confessions and baptisms, 1,064; from denominations, 106; total additions, 1,996; (This did not include those uniting by commendation.) churches planted, 29; Sunday-schools planted, 27; houses built, 9; cash for the support of our Texas missionaries, $19,493.85; cash collected for mission houses, lots, repairs, $17,213.80; total cash for Texas mission work, $36,707.65. This is a gain over our report of four years ago of $23,107.

We consider this an especially good showing when we consider that our workers devoted their efforts, as never before, to the weak churches. If we have introduced any new thing in the Texas work, it is this, that we have given especial attention to such preachers as had not gained a wide reputation as preachers and successful workers. We find good men who, in many cases, have not been well supported, but who only need an opportunity and a little help and encouragement and we use these men and by this means increase our working force. There is no class of men who can more certainly find plenty of work among us and be well supported than the evangelist with a fine record. Such men are in demand, hence we sought out good men, not yet in much demand, and help them to develop. In this way we have been able to increase our workers in Texas. We have employed men from the schoolroom, lecture field, and other fields in the Texas mission work. The secretary's office has aided to some extent in "locating" eighty-one preachers in Texas in the last year. Of these forty were changes from one place to another by men already working in Texas, and forty-one were brought into the state or started in the ministry.

Our last convention instructed that we employ a first-class Sunday-school evangelist. We have a committee now looking for the right man for this work. We want a man for this work who has already shown his fitness and one who will come to stay. We were also instructed to secure the services of a competent German missionary. We are now in pursuit of such a man. We have a large German population in Texas—more than one community where the Germans have bought out the former owners of the land and where Christian Church houses are rented to German churches.

These Germans make first-class citizens, especially when they become really Disciples of Christ. Here is a fine foreign field at our doors. We are appealing to our people to double the offering of last year. We are asking all who love our Lord to join us in the prayer for this advance. The gospel in its purity, the weak churches built up substantially, larger liberality and a more permanent work, are our watchwords for the coming year's effort. J. C. Mason,

Corresponding Secretary.

Western Pennsylvania.

During the past year there has been added to our district, Phillipsburg, Center county, making 26 counties with a population of 2,252,750. Of these 26 counties seven of them have no church, or work of any kind by the Disciples of Christ, and only nine of them have more than four congregations in the county. There are about 160 towns and cities of over 1,000 population where we have no church. In a district with less area than any but eight of the smaller states of the Union, there are crowded more people than can be found in any of the states of the Union except eight of the largest. There are but two states west of the Mississippi with a larger population than Western Pennsylvania. During the past year aid has been given to twenty mission points; these are scattered in seven of the counties. It was decided at the Beaver convention that we must push the evangelistic work in opening new fields and strengthening the weak ones. To do this we must have $5,000, and $10,000 would not do all the work that can be done.

With the Centennial approaching and the eyes of the world turned toward Pittsburg in 1909, Western Pennsylvania Disciples ought to bestir themselves and accomplish great things for the work of the Master. Here on the soil sacred with early memories and hallowed by the heroic lives of the Campbells and others who originated our movement, we must do a heroic work for our day and generation. Bands of Disciples who are already meeting around the Lord's table and from house to house are discouraged because we have been so slow in coming up to their help, but we believe that the churches of Western Pennsylvania are going to rally to a great forward movement and accomplish the great work that is possible between this and 1909. Western Pennsylvania has become the home of a great number of immigrants who are constantly arriving from Southern Europe. We are most fortunate in having Brother Basil F. Keusseff, who is superintendent of a promising mission among this people, ably assisted by Miss A. Christine Vasicek. They speak to eight of the Slavonic nationality. The Bible school and the Christian Endeavor has undertaken the support of these workers.

Percy S. Wilson, pastor at Moundsville, W. Va., has accepted a call to become an evangelist of Western Pennsylvinia, supported jointly by the A. C. M. S. and the W. P. C. M. S., and will begin his work about the first of November. With new points being opened and the weak ones that are already on the board to be sustained, we must have an increase of funds. Last year a gain of about 40 per cent was made in the receipts of the society and still our work suffered.

A matter for special mention is the fund given by the Hon. T. W. Phillips, of New Castle, through the A. C. M. S. for the support of the work in the counties where we have no representation. Through this fund, work has been started and supported in Meadville, Ridgway, Johnsonburg and Butler.

November 3 is Western Pennsylvinia day. Already nearly one-half of our churches have signified their intention of taking the offering and through the rallies and correspondence we hope to interest every church in the district and secure from them an offering for Western Pennsylvania missions.

Pittsburg, Pa. J. A. Joyce, Cor. Sec.

West Virginia.

The eyes of the industrial world are on West Virginia. These are virgin fields for the investor. Here great fortunes are being made in timber, coal and gas. And best of all, we are yet in the babyhood of our development. West Virginia is a giant of wealth, just beginning to awaken from her sleep of centuries. Railroads are being thrust through our mountains bringing us into touch with the outside world. We are just beginning to sit up and take notice. And, as usual with the infant of that age, we are compelling others to take notice of us. Already we have compelled many of our big sisters to take second place to us in the industrial world.

The Churches of Christ in West Virginia are also awakening out of their sleep of indifference. This is the cradle of the Restoration movement. Here Alexander Campbell lived and wrought. From here Bethany College has sent streams of influence to make glad the thirsty souls of men. Here many of our greatest leaders have been trained. But in spite of all this the work in West Virginia has languished. The difficulty of the work in these hills and mountains caused us to be passed by while the workers moved on along the line of least resistance. West Virginia trained men for the conquest of the world, but they could not conquer their trainer. Last year we were credited with 22,000 members in the Churches of Christ. This number is not one-fourth of what we should have, but it is far in excess of the real figures. From the best information obtainable, I think we number about 15,500. We have somewhere near 190 organized congregations. Upon the large majority of these the paralysis of indifference and the chill of legalism had laid fast hold. The interior sections have been filled with ministers, so-called, born in the objective case, unlearned and unclean. This was the West Virginia of the past. A new spirit is filling the Disciples of to-day. We have just closed the very best year in all the history of our state missionary work. We begin the new year free of debt, with a new vision of service and consequent victory. Never have we had more than one evangelist sustained by our West Virginia C. M. S., and many times did he have to wait through long periods for the small salary promised him. A second evangelist was secured to begin work October 1. A third, and we hope a fourth, will be put into the field soon. A clean, consecrated, educated ministry is at the helm of all our most important churches. Students are coming out of these hills, men who love them as they love their own lives, to be trained at Bethany for effective service in their native state. The Calebs and Joshuas of our Israel are pushing to the front. The "we-can't"-ers are dying, and the "we-can"-ers are winning the land for Jesus. Our Centennial aims are: Clear our churches of all debts, increase the Bible school and double the membership of the church, at least one evangelistic meeting for each church during the year and the establishment of a mission point as a nucleus for a new congregation, a teachers' training class in each Bible school and the graded system introduced in each school, the observance of children's day for home missions in all our schools.

Only two years until the hosts meet at Pittsburg. We will be ashamed of what has been done in West Virginia during these one hundred years, but by the help of our Lord we shall not be ashamed of what we did in 1908-1909. Our watchword is: "Three thousand five hundred dollars for West Virginia missions in 1908." J. W. Yoho, Cor. Sec. W. Va. C. M. S.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

A Visit to Texas Christian University.

It was my pleasure recently to preach for the University Church at Waco, Texas. One young man made the confession and one young lady placed herself in fellowship with the congregation. They are both students of the university. There had been one confession the preceding Lord's day under Brother Jennings' preaching. Brother Dubber began a meeting there on Wednesday, October 2. The religious interests at the university are very encouraging.

My visit was indeed pleasant. President Lockhart is an old college roommate at Kentucky University. He has the confidence of his fellow-teachers and the large student body. The attendance this year is the best they have had, and under Brother Lockhart's management the future of the university seems bright. The university faculty are men and women.

The University Church has adopted the plan of filling the pulpit from other pulpits over the state. They have a new preacher every Lord's day. This brings the preachers in closer touch with the university, and enables the students to hear many of the splendid band of preachers which we have in the state. The plan is new, and may meet with some criticism, but it is worthy of trial. H. G. Fleming.

Western Canada.

At the urgent request of the brethren, I visited and preached at the following places last week: Regina, Grand Coulee, and Yellow Grass. Good congregations could be organized at all those places if we only had the men and the means. Regina is the capital city of Saskatchewan and the largest city in the province. Our people there have been working with the Baptists, but as the field is large enough to support two or three churches, they have decided to ask the American Christian Missionary Society to assist them in supporting a city evangelist for one year. Grand Coulee will co-operate with them in this work and help bear the financial burdens.——The little C. W. B. M. Society at Milestone has pledged fifty dollars to the Centennial Home Missions fund. This little band is intensely missionary and are making their influence felt throughout this western country. J. A. L. Romig, our superintendent of missions, will attend the Norfolk convention and visit Milestone on his return home. A. R. Adams.

The St. Louis Letter.

The St. Louis ministers had their opening meeting for the fall in their room at The Christian-Evangelist office, Monday, October 7. Brothers McFarland, Ireland, Philputt, Garrigues, Alexander, Chenoweth, Garrison and Calvin responded to the roll call. We had Brethren George Combs, of Kansas City, and Evangelist Violett and his singer with us.——Reports for month of September showed additions as follows: Union Avenue, two by baptism; Second, one by baptism; Hammett Place, two, with one by baptism; Fourth, twelve, with nine by baptism; Hamilton Avenue, five by baptism; Compton Heights, twenty-one, six by baptism. Brother Ireland, the city evangelist, reported five baptisms.——Brother McFarland reported two meetings held during the summer, one at Flat River with 22 additions to the church, and one at Benton, Mo., with six additions.——Brother Combs gave us a talk on the work and outlook in Kansas City, and Brother Violett told us that he was just opening a three weeks' campaign at Old Orchard.——Brother Ireland reported the opening of the new tabernacle at Denver place to be held October 24.——Brother Philputt said that they hope to be ready to dedicate the new church at Union Avenue about April 12, 1908.——C. R. Gaines, former assistant pastor at the Fourth, has entered Eureka College to better prepare for the ministry. We expect to hear good reports from him in the future.——The colored brethren had a representative present, and he told us some encouraging things about their work in this city. The colored Christian Church of St. Louis has had a varied experience, but it seems now that they have come to stay. They have some really fine, active material in their membership.——Rumor has it that Brother Brandt has resigned at the First, but we have no definite information on the subject, other than that he will evangelize or travel.——Sometimes the young minister in the small city or town has a longing for an easy pulpit in the great city. The following notices will indicate something of the influences that the city pastor has to contend with. To say nothing of the ten thousand purely worldly attractions to lead the people away from Christ and the spiritual life, we have to compete with such attractions as the following, taken from a handbill:

"Grand lawn fete and bazaar. By ladies of Mount Calvary Church, on lawn in rear of the church, Friday, September 13. Admission to the grounds free. Some of the attractions: Dancing, minstrel show, Dutch coffee klatch, play by the Dramatic Club, fish pond, gipsy fortune teller, shot at 'nigger babies.'"

Or take this one, which I copied from an "ad." in a store window the other day—"Grand progressive euchre and hop for the benefit of the New Immaculate Conception Church, at Compton Hall, September 27, 1907." Both of these attractions are within the borders of the Compton Heights diocese. But in spite of the attractions of the world outside of the church, and the world inside of the church Compton Heights goes steadily forward. We had 612 in our Bible school on rally day, September 15. We are having additions every Lord's day and the prospects for our work were never brighter.

Victory Out of Defeat. Why?

Brownwood, Texas, has long been considered a problem. It has 1,500 members of the denominations, two denominational colleges, a strong faction of "antiism" and only 75 or 100 members working with Brother Smith to establish the cause. But there have been 107 additions to date, and thousands have heard the old gospel. Why? Here are some of the reasons.

The brethren decided to win at any cost. They bought a big circus tent with a seating capacity of about 3,000, and advertised the meeting thoroughly for 20 miles around. All of the members took hold with their hands and pulled incessantly. Brother Hurlbut, one of the elders, is president of the State Fair, also president of one of the banks, has a wife and ten children, and many other charges, but still he could give $10 per week for meeting, send out thousands of dodgers through the country, walk over the town, put them in stores and houses, always be in church with wife and babies in ample time to help usher the crowd, take up the evening offering, talk to sinners, etc., etc.

Brother Morris is one of the busiest doctors in Texas, but he could drive fast all day and when evening came he could arrange for some one to attend to phones, hire a boy to run for him when he was needed and hear most of the sermons. Brother Moody runs a big machine shop, his wife and daughters keep boarders, but all are on time to pray and sing or anything else when needed. Another elder is a fine lawyer, but works and prays in the meeting like a "Trojan." All are in the spirit of work. Sister Utterback runs the hotel with scant help and seldom ever misses a service. Placards are hanging on the hotel front, over streets and all buggies owned by our people are to be used by our advertising committee at any time. Young men, old men, young women and all helped to scatter bills.

Last, but not least, Brother Smith and his wife are both fervent in spirit. A judge in this city told me Brother Smith rose early in the morning and prepared a well-written article of from 300 to 500 words for every daily paper.

For five weeks the battle has been raging. At a meeting a few days since it was unanimously decided to continue indefinitely. These are some of the human agencies that have made the meeting a success. I have gone to many places where the possibilities were far greater (if all had co-operated) than here, and had but few additions. There is not a house in the city or surrounding country where the meeting is not being talked. I wish I could stay here till Christmas, but must leave soon. J. L. Haddock.

Los Angeles Letter.

The writer observed his seventeenth anniversary as pastor of the First Church the second Lord's day in September. Within these seventeen years he has preached more than 1,300 times in the pulpit of the First Church and received more than 2,000 persons into the membership of that congregation. After seventeen years of trial service the church increased his salary $600 a year. The first month's work on the eighteenth year saw 34 persons added at the regular services, to the working force of this great church. It is granted to but few individuals to serve so long so noble a church. [Work among our own churches is reported elsewhere—Ed.] Dr. Torrey will spend the month of January in a union meeting in a great rink near the center of the city. The First Church will conduct her evangelistic services immediately thereafter.

The spirit of pastoral changes is in the hearts of our preachers again. After a wonderful pastorate of ten years with the Long Branch Church, E. W. Thornton has resigned to enter the field as a Sunday-school evangelist. This is the carrying out of a plan long on his heart and will lead him into a wide field of usefulness. M. A. Hart, of Pomona, was never fully weaned away from Missouri and has heard the siren's voice from Columbia. Before these words appear in print both these vacancies will be supplied.

A great church is nearing completion at Pasadena. This is the culmination of several years of hard work on the part of F. M. Dowling. The property will cost more than $75,000, and is undoubtedly the finest building west of the Rocky Mountains belonging to our brethren. It has all the modern facilities for church work and approaches the ideal building. All his friends will be greatly pleased to learn that F. M. Dowling is wonderfully improved in health since his trip to the Orient. A. C. Smither.

Fifty at Sweetwater, Texas.

Our gospel campaign closed last Lord's day with 50 additions—31 baptisms, one reclaimed, 12 by fellowship, 11 from other bodies. J. Ross Miller, of Gas City, Ind., had charge of the music for us and he did his work well. His life is clean and strong for Jesus and his Word. Of the 50 additions but six were under 15 years, the rest being of mature mind. Several whole households came to gladden our hearts, and to contend earnestly for the faith. Two households were baptized somewhat after the order of the jailor in Acts 16. Some of the visible results are as follows: Bible school made twice as strong, my Bible class more than trebled; more than 25 will take the teacher-training course; a Christian Endeavor organized with 20 active members and two associate, who will study Brother Power's work, "Bible Doctrine for Young Disciples." The Word of God is being read more in the city of Sweetwater than ever before. The new church house is assured now. Ground has been broken. We go to the courthouse to-morrow and will preach the Word there until the new building is ready for occupancy. The future could not be better. Percy G. Cross.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed, you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

Foreign missions began when Paul and Barnabas were ordained and sent to Cyprus, then to Asia Minor as heralds of the Cross.

Foreign missions began in Europe when Paul and Silas were compelled by the Holy Spirit seemingly against their will to approach the Ægean coast. Then by the vision of the man of Macedonia they were beckoned to Europe, the continent from which the word of God was to be carried to earth's remotest shores.

Paul established the first church in Europe at Philippi. Then, following the great Roman road, he journeyed to Thessalonica and established a church there. After preaching at Berea and Athens, he came to the rich and prosperous Corinth and established a large and flourishing church.

Paul was taken to Rome as a prisoner because of the appeal he made to Cæsar. While there he was under the surveillance of the Prætorian guard. Many of these Roman soldiers were converted by him, and they in turn would, doubtless, bring the gospel of Christ to many others. It is not improbable that Paul journeyed as far as Spain, preaching the gospel of Christ.

The conversion of Europe so auspiciously begun by Paul was completed about the year 1,000 A. D. By this time the gospel of Christ had so spread among the peoples of Europe as to make the continent nominally Christian.

One of the greatest missionaries in Europe was Ulphilas, who was made bishop in 343 A. D. He gave the Goths a written language, and translated for them a large portion of the Bible. He omitted the books of the Kings in order that his people might not have them as an additional stimulus in their warlike enterprises.

St. Patrick, who did a great missionary work for Ireland, began his missionary labors about 440 A. D. The Iona monastery, founded in 503 A. D. by Columba, trained hundreds of men and sent them forth to win the heathen of Europe to Christ. In 596 D. Augustine and his forty monks crossed the English channel, having their hearts set on winning England for Christ.

The planting of the kingdom of Christ in Europe has been of untold advantage to the world. Many questions of vital interest to Christianity have been settled there, while in Christian activity and missionary enterprise the peoples of Europe are unsurpassed in regard to the extent and success of their labors.

Europe has given to the world such devout and successful missionaries as Schwartz, Ziegenbalg, Plutschau, Hans Egede, Zinzendorf, Schmidt, John Eliot and Carey.—Young People's Quarterly.

In Spain there is one teacher for every 460 of the population, one priest for every 400, one monk or nun for every 200, and one schoolhouse for every 2,200!

In Toledo, Spain, a traveler counted 58 priests and attendants conducting a service, with only four worshipers.

Recently in Austria 47 students of the University of Vienna publicly renounced Roman Catholicism and joined the Lutheran Church. A significant sign.

The three Protestant denominations in Bohemia have wisely formed a union for the defence of their faith.

The final separation of church and state in France is one of the most important events in the history of religion, and gives great opportunities for Protestantism.

A great Moslem mosque is planned for London, and there is one already in Liverpool, supported by Moslem converts from Christianity.

France is no longer a Roman Catholic country, only one-fourth of the people belonging to that church; but, alas! it is largely an infidel country.

During the six years from 1899 to the end of 1904 the Protestant churches of Austria made a net gain of 24,238 members, nearly all being converts from Romanism.

In one hundred years Protestant church buildings in France have increased from 50 to 1,300; pastors from 120 to nearly 1,000; besides 200 evangelists.

The Lutherans have 57,033 churches, with 35,840 pastors, and 70,158,727 members.

Russia exceeds all other countries in the amount of free railway transportation given to Bibles in aid of the Protestant Bible societies.

The greatest of all missionary societies is the Church Missionary Society of England, with its 1,356 missionaries, and its yearly income of nearly two million dollars.—Endeavorer's Daily Companion.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

By Charles Blanchard.

Habits of the Heart.

Topic October 23, Prov. 4:23; 23:7-15; Eph. 3:17; 1 Pet. 3:15.

"Keep thy heart with all diligence; for out of it are the issues of life." And forevermore it is true. It was the Master that said: "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." Out of the heart come all good and all evil. As he thinketh in his heart so he is. All experience proves the wisdom of the ancient wise man and the teaching of the great Master.

The prayer of the apostle was that "Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth and length and depth and height; and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fullness of God." The heart is center of all the affections. Here faith dwells, here love abides, here hope sings, even amid the silences which hush the soul when sorrow sweeps the spirit with its terror of tears, or its grief too deep for tears. "The inner man," of which Paul writes, is the heart, whence come all noble aspirations, all lofty purposes, all unselfish good. Here the Spirit of God may dwell, in that mysterious fellowship which links us with the Divine, and assures us that we are the children of God, heirs and joint heirs with Jesus Christ, to an inheritance, incorruptible and undefiled, and which fadeth not away, reserved in the heavens for us and for all His own.

"But sanctify the Lord God in your hearts; and be ready at all times to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason for the hope that is in you, with meekness and fear, having a good conscience." The Rev. Ver. says, "Sanctify Christ as Lord in your hearts," which means to give Him the first place in our affections, first place in our plans, our lifework, our pleasures, our pastimes.

To form the habit of giving Christ the first place in our thoughts is the secret of the Christian life. The book by Charles M. Sheldon, "In His Steps, or What Would Jesus Do?" had a most remarkable sale several years ago, hundreds of thousands of copies having been issued, and since that time it has been republished in many editions and in almost every language. As a story it is interesting; but there are any number of stories that are as tempting in plot and startling in incident. The secret of its popularity is in the question which the author asks and undertakes to answer, even in theory: "What would Jesus do?" It is an interesting problem, from the viewpoint of men of the world. That men of affairs stopped long enough to read the volume, as thousands of them did, is a testimony not only to the author's power, but to the power of the Christ idea and the Christ ideal in the world of work. And if this world of busy and bothered men and women is ever brought to the high estate of Christian citizenship and Christian character and culture possible for every one of us, it will come about in our honest effort to answer, every man for himself, the question, "What would Jesus do?"

And there is no way to reach that point of contact with the Christ and with the world save as we really "sanctify Christ as Lord in our hearts," the while holding fast the faith with a good conscience.

THE DEAF CAN HEAR

Not by a miracle, but by scientific invention

If you are not totally deaf—nor born deaf—the Way Ear Drum I believe will enable you to hear perfectly—or at least will very decidedly improve your hearing.

I know because I was deaf, myself, for 25 years and now, by means of my ear drums, (which I invented) can hear faint whispers. My Ear Drums are delicate, sensitive little devices that are not only invisible, but you can not feel them in the ears. Easily placed in the ears.

Write me to-day about your deafness. One cent invested in a postal card now may be the means of restoring your hearing. GEORGE P. WAY, 1028 Majestic Building, Detroit, Mich.

Caleb's Faithfulness Rewarded.

The most wholesome and convincing type of hero is the man who, under difficulties, remains faithful to a trust. He may lack the qualities of dashing gallantry and brilliant leadership. He may be devoid of all the more spectacular virtues of character and all the more superficial graces of person. But in the long run no man is more certain to receive enduring admiration or more worthy of general imitation than the man whose heroism consists in fidelity.

Such a man was Caleb. Nothing that we know of him indicates genius or special brilliance. He was a capable scout—but the other eleven who went out with him from Kadesh-barnea were capable enough, for that matter. He surpassed them not in ability but in faith and faithfulness and courage. He excelled not in his endowments but in the way in which he used them.

The impression that we get of Caleb is that of a man brave, patient (he waited unmurmuringly forty-five years for his reward) staunch alike against the assaults of foes and entreaties of foolish friends. Stout of body as of heart, he could assert that he was as good a man at 85 as he had been at 40, and could prove it by starting out to conquer his inheritance. He was of the stuff of which all good frontiersmen are made, and deserves to be the patron saint of all stout and hardy pioneers.

His reward was in keeping with his character. It was not a gift but a task. Hebron was to be his—but first he had to take it. It lay toward the south, in the very region whose giants (Anakim) had frightened away the other scouts at the time of that first reconnoitering expedition. Even now in his old age Caleb asked nothing better than a chance to prove what he had asserted then, that the Lord's people were more than a match for any enemy, however gigantic and terrible.

Such is the divine principle of rewards. The reward of virtue is virtue. The reward of strength is the opportunity to use it in service. The highest blessing that comes with special powers or advantages is the privilege of employing them usefully. Blessedness is therefore never a state of passive enjoyment; never merely the receiving of favors; it is always connected with the active exercise of the highest powers of the personality. It is so with earthly blessedness, and doubtless it will be so of the everlasting and heavenly rewards.

People's Forum

The Country Church.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

The fact that so many preachers hesitate to take a charge in a country church is not surprising to one who has lived a number of years in the smaller towns and country. To a man of noble aspirations there is no more difficult work than the pastorate of a country church.

Many people have a distorted view of the country. They imagine that goodness goes with green fields and running brooks. They forget that vice rears its hydra head in the country as well as in the city; not so flagrantly, but just as insidiously. And they forget that the skepticism and materialism of the times has penetrated to the country even to its most secluded spots. The worldliness and animalism found in the country is appalling. And the ignorance and prejudice of the country work is hard to brook. Higher education in the pulpit is looked upon with suspicion. New ideas and reforms of any sort are tabooed. Only the old beaten path finds favor. To be sure our country churches contain many cultured people. I speak of the majority. The preacher of the country church who has the good of his people at heart very often finds himself beating against a wall of ignorance, indifference and worldliness. If he has the true fire he will scale the wall, if not he will content himself on the level, eating big dinners and becoming a jolly good fellow, patting the back of his parishioner, uttering little commonplaces, and stultifying both soul and intellect. The country preacher may become a kindly, benevolent man, and if he is spiritually minded, loving God's "great, wide, wonderful world," living apart in his inner self, yet loving his people and entering into their lives, being able to see the gold beneath the worldliness of his parish, he may be able to keep his enthusiasm and able to hold his high ideals and noble aspirations with which he entered the ministry. It is such men that are needed in the country church; not men who are making a record for themselves, only using the country church as a stepping stone to the city church.

Our country churches need unselfish men, spiritual men, and well-educated men; not that people in the country appreciate good preaching so much; they are very much like their city cousins: they wish to be entertained. But they need men who are capable of leading them into the higher walks of life; men who can show them and their children new beauties in their wide, green fields, men who are character-builders, who will not only bring their people to the Lord, but will lead them out into their inheritance, the higher realms of religious thought and feeling.

Norwalk, O. Janet Young.

Our Indebtedness to the Country Church.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

Let me thank you for your number on the country church. These churches need more thought and encouragement than they receive. The country churches formerly were the stronghold of the faith but have now, to a very great degree, lost their strength and importance. How many city churches can point to many of their strongest and best pillars that were converted in and came to them from the country church at just a critical time in their history!

Take as a fair sample the old brick church at Wythe, organized in about the year 1868 by E. J. Lampton and ministered to by E. J. Lampton, H. R. Trickett, Grissom, W. T. West, J. J. Cramer, J. H. Connoran, J. H. Carr, J. O. Walton, G. E. Williams and others. Several of these at the time they labored for this church were students yet in school, or just from school, who afterward ministered to other and larger churches.

This church grew large and influential. A few of the members died, but many of them—farmers—selling their farms and moving to other localities, some in different states of the West, others to West Point, Carthage, Hamilton, Keokuk and other cities rendered aid at the right time for the success of these churches.

These farms were in many cases sold to Germans who had their own church and in this way in time the church dwindled until now the church does not have regular services and I see by the local paper that in a great measure the Sundays there are given up to baseball and like amusements.

One great difficulty with which country churches have to contend is that their members live so far from the churches, often five to eight miles, which makes it impossible for many of them to attend in stormy weather, rough roads and during the busy work season.

BONE.

Alfred P. Bone died at his home in Greensburg, Ind., July 7, 1907, aged 70 years, leaving a wife to whom he was married December 17, 1856, and five children: Hon. Scott C. Bone, editor of the "Washington Herald;" Alfred, John, May Parrish and Sadie Morris. Brother Bone served in the Thirty-third Indiana Regiment during the Civil War and was postmaster at Shelbyville, Ind., for ten years. He served as an elder in the church there for more than twenty years and almost that long in the same capacity in the Greensburg church. He loved the church and led many souls to Christ. The funeral was held in the church, D. R. Van Buskirk and James Mailley making brief addresses. The burial was in charge of the Masonic order, in which he was a Knight Templar. L. D. B.

BUTLER.

Mrs. Ada B. Butler, of West Rupert, Vt., died on September 26 at the Samaritan Hospital, Troy, N. Y., after a severe operation, on Tuesday, from which she had not the strength to rally. Mrs. Butler was the widow of Edward Butler, of West Rupert, Vt., who died fifteen months ago. Her mother, Mrs. C. A. Brown, is the only near surviving relative. Her body was laid to rest beside her husband in the cemetery at Tully, N. Y., sincerely mourned by all who knew her.

HALE.

The members of the Mammoth Spring Church of Christ desire to offer a tribute to the memory of our former pastor, Brother W. P. Hale, who passed away September 1, 1907, at his home in this city.

Brother Hale was born in Tennessee in October, 1848, being 58 years old at the time of his death. He was educated for a lawyer, but did not practice, preferring to enter the ministry. He came to Missouri in 1893 from Illinois and since that time he has filled the pulpits of various churches in South Missouri. He has been pastor here since the organization of this church in 1900.

Brother Hale was a physical and intellectual giant, a man of commanding presence and great personal magnetism. We love to think of his high ideals of Christian manhood and his profound respect for everything uplifting and purifying the Church of Christ. We who knew him best will not soon forget the encouragement and sympathy we received from him. Our lives are not measured by years, but by the work we accomplish, and Brother Hale's influence will be felt wherever he lived, because he loved the Master and delighted in his service. Our hearts are full of sympathy for his sorrowing wife and children.

THE VOYAGE.

Out of the harbor of the Shadowy Shore
We sail into the gladness of the day;
A breath of spice from islands far away
Allures us on to where the deep seas roar.
The lightnings play about us, and before
Our cleaving prow the tempest marks its way
With broken wrecks; but still we can not stay.
A voice beyond the storm calls evermore.
We spread our sails to catch the wind and breeze,
The wandering zephyr, or the simoon's breath;
And on we sail, nor strength nor purpose fails,
Till through the sunset of alluring seas,
Through twilight splendors, do we drift toward death—
The silent Isle of Unreturning Sails.

Something all mine on this side Heaven
Something as much myself to be
As this my soul which I lift to thee;
Flesh of my flesh, bone of my bone
Life of my life whom thou didst make Two to the world for the world's work sake uut each unto each as in thy sight, one.

President Brown was at the train to meet the young man whom he had chosen as his assistant. It was one of those mild and beautiful summer days, when all nature is in its height of glory in the West. Fruit hung in tempting clusters from the trees and roses bloomed in profusion from every garden and lawn, and their fragrance filled the air with aroma on every hand.

As they rode along together James could not keep from exclaiming about the Edenic country into which he had come. Everything pleased him greatly, for he had heard of the sage brush deserts and the seas of mud and rain, which he dreaded and supposed applied to all the Pacific West alike. But here was a land of flowers and fruit; a country of plenty and prosperity, with a climate like the elysian fields of fiction, and in the midst of it all a people devoted to the cause of Christ and humanity, with a city built upon foundations that were perpetual and beneficent. Here the aged could find a home worth $500 upon which a garden, fruit, a cow and chickens could be raised, sufficient to keep the wolf from the door, for the small rent of from $10 to $25 a year; and the more progressive could find a larger sphere at a rate which would be far less than interest, taxes and other items when considered under the system of a city anywhere else in the world. And how could they afford to provide such cheap homes? was his question, as the president pointed out several of these snug cottages, where people were living in comparative ease in their declining years, and also some of the more ambitious, who had built beyond the allowance and were occupying larger tracts of garden space.

"The secret of it lies in the fact that many of these people put their money together in the beginning and bought this land, and thousands of acres beyond here also, at a figure far below its present worth; and then this was all placed in the hands of trusty men, who represent the whole congregation and who are elected directly by the people, and who serve without salary except fees for actual time spent deliberating, or for such as spend their entire time upon the business. This Assembly, as we call it, are the rulers of the people, and they are good and wise men, who seek for the best interests of all. If any here refuse to obey wholesome laws, or to live in peace and to the advantage of all within the city, they are expelled after due admonition and not allowed to return, except after due process of time and assurance that they have reformed. So we have no crime element; no strong drink sold; no taxes or expenses to pay for such things, and all pay tithes into a common treasury for the worship, poor fund and other emergencies. Now, as I was saying, this land cost us but a small amount of what it is now worth. Say it cost $10 per acre—and much of it is worth fifty times that—it will average ten times at least. We count the rents upon a basis of five per cent, and scale down at the close of the year so as to equalize the income and expenditures, and often a rebate of two and a half per cent is returned, to be deducted from each one's rent. Now you can see how that the first year we had four hundred renters, at an average income of $30,000, and the next year an increasing income, until last year we had over three hundred thousand with other incomes besides. We began with about half a million dollars in land value and cash loaned at five per cent interest by those who took security upon land and whose interest was secured to them by future rent, in a place where they have advantages that are worth more than the interest itself. When we put a thousand dollar house upon a piece of land that cost us only $100 (and our houses in reality cost less than that, but it is estimated according to actual values), we get rent upon $2,000 worth of property, for the land is now worth $1,000, so we charge $100 ren upon an investment of say $900 cash paid out. Then we scale it down to the actual expenses and needs of the community, as I have said. By this plan you can see that we have an elastic system, with no land sharks to get the benefits and no corrupt officials to take the boodle. Every man dwells beneath his own vine and fig tree, and worships God according to the dictates of his own conscience, so long as he exercises his conscience so as not to work ill to his neighbor. The rents are self-imposed through direct representatives to meet the expenses of the city and to improve the general and individual conditions alike. We are a large family, so to speak, and we buy and sell upon a large scale, and thus get things at an advantage that makes it possible for people, and the application of splendid any other city in the world. The tithe is used to help the aged and helpless to pay their rents and to support them as wards of the Christian congregation, as well as to keep up our home and foreign mission ary projects. We also have free will and thank offerings which often aggregate as much as the tithe. The tithe is not obligatory, nor are the offerings, and yet we have none within our community who give less than a tenth, and they love to do it believing, as they do, that they are prospered by it more than by withholding. Yes we have a good and prosperous and happy people, and the application of splendid families to increase our population are coming in so rapidly that we are unable to grant their petitions, except to a limited extent. We have the opportunity of selecting our families now, and yet I wish that we could receive all that come. We are now planning to start other places upon this project in good localities; and we have men out now in several states selecting land and other advantages for our use to this end. We have bought an option on all the land within seven miles of this place, and could sell it at double the cost if we would allow people to occupy it upon that condition. Options could also be sold on entrance to our community at a premium, but that is not our way. Whatever advantages we possess belong to all who have a right to be in our community alike, and hence we could not charge for that right other than according to our appointed methods, lest we should be found making a difference between rich and poor, which is a curse to the earth today. In the world the rich man can buy his way over and above the poor man to advantages in life, and often to the utter exclusion of the poor from the bare necessities of home and family comforts essential to life itself. We purpose that this shall not be so here. Any person who is worthy to be here, rich or poor, black or white, can have the same advantages of a common living at the same rate. And if any worthy poor are not able to support themselves, they still have access to a fund upon which they are supported. But we have very few, less than any other community of its size in the United States, to support thus. In fact, those that we have are nearly all persons who inhabited the land when we purchased it. Of course the rich man can live in luxury here if he chooses, but, strange to say, we have none who are not humbly economic, although we have several millionaires. In yonder fine house lives McDonald," said the president, as he drove about the city and continued their conversation, "and yonder are his great factories, which give employment to a thousand men and women. lives another man who owns a producing mine in the mountains, and he is estimated worth several million dollars. He is building that large stamp mill by the river. You remember Judge Taylor, do you not?"

"Well, I should say that I do," said James with a blush.

"He lives down here in this pretty little vine-covered cottage," continued the president. "We built this house as near like the old home in Eaton as we could, and he is right happy in it. His son, Charlie, and his bonnie Scotch bride, whom you knew in the East, of course, live just across the way there.

"Let me see. I believe the judge requested that you should be left at his house for tea this evening, and as it is now just a quarter of six, perhaps you would prefer to stop now."

James blushed again and began to look at his clothes and to dust himself in a nervous manner as the team drew near the house indicated.

"I believe that I had better be driven to my mother's house first," said James.

"But your mother and the others of your household have all been invited, with ourselves, to a reunion at the judge's house for to-night," said Mr. Brown as he gave the driver directions to let them out.

All were at the gate as they alighted, and James threw his arms about his mother's neck for a long-desired embrace. Each took their chance at a greeting from the tall, grown young man with deep-brown mustache and stately brow. But there was one who modestly stayed behind the roses until the rest had had their rights with him, whom she too had long waited to greet. As they filed up the walk James fell back and brought up the rear of the procession with Grace, whose face and form, now grown to womanhood, was perfectly charming amid the blooming rows of peonies and pinks along the path.

James thought in his heart that he had never seen any one so beautiful. And as Grace looked up at the stately young man at her side, she secretly vowed that he was a perfectly noble young man.

The reunion of Eaton people at Judge Taylor's home was an occasion long to be remembered because of its many pleasant features; and the most pleasant of all was the home-coming of James. He was the guest of honor and the center of attraction that evening. And not until the guests had taken their departure did Grace get the coveted chance to see and talk with him alone. As they walked out in the beautiful night, the heavens bestudded with stars and a waning moon in the sky, he opened his heart to say that he was happy once more after their long separation to see that she had not forgotten him.

"Forget you, Jamie Gordon! You must have classed me with the fickle-hearted if you expected such to have had a possibility of happening," said Grace, as she looked half reproachfully at him.

"Not just that," he said, in a half apologetic tone, "but my life must necessarily be one of crosses and sacrifice, and I could not hope to find you still caring for one of so somber a mind as mine must seem to be."

"I confess that you have never seemed somber to me, James," she said as she faced him beneath a large orange tree half way down the walk to the fountain whither they were sauntering. "On the contrary, I see a most cheerful disposition, even in the cross-bearing and sacrifice, which I have known in you."

"I can not see how so sunny a life as yours is could see in me aught but shadows," said James, as he looked earnestly in her soft brown eyes.

"If there have been shadows in your life they must have furnished only a background for the truer setting of the character I have always admired in you, even during that terrible trouble which befell you at Eaton. I am sure that you acted the man then and during these years of your course thereafter. I do not forget how you forgave those fellows who tried to murder you and how you tried to help each one after that to reform and lead sober lives. I certainly could not forget how you jeopardized your life in saving Rob Jannes and Jake Schlitz from that awful death that they were plunging to, when both were drunk trying to row across above the falls that evening. They had lost one oar and in mid stream were whirling about like madmen and all the time going closer to the falls. You went to their rescue when no one else would, not even their own brothers and then when you had saved them they only sought to injure you, and still you were kind to them. I am sure, James, that such a disposition shines brighter than any other that I can conceive of."

"You are a dear charitable girl, Grace, and I have always admired you and know of no other in all this wide world that I could love like you. But I could not make you happy in the life I expect to lead. I want to go to the regions beyond, to preach the Gospel to the neglected and I do not know what awaits me there. I simply know that I must give up many comforts and heavy crosses. Could you share such a life of toil and sorrow as may be in store for me, dearest one?"

"Oh James, I would go to the ends of the earth with you and gladly meet death itself for the privilege of sharing it with so noble a man."

For the first he clasped her in his arms and imprinted a consecrated kiss upon her lips, saying: "I accept and give the pledge for life and death. 'Set me as a seal upon thine heart, as a seal upon thine arm, for love is strong as death.'"

And they wept for joy, as they clasped each other's hands and stood in silence before the beautiful fountain as it sparkled forth its pure water, symbol of the life eternal and the love that was there pledged beneath the stars that night.

Flying Kites.

It is "kite time," and the boy who does not have one or more kites is in hard luck. What fun it is to fly a kite!

"My kite! how far and fast it flew,
While I, a sort of Franklin, drew
My pleasure from the skies!"

Up and down it goes, higher and still higher, till it is only a tiny speck against the blue sky. That is, if the string is long and strong it will do this, for the height to which a kite will rise depends upon the length and the strength of the string. There isn't anything quite so helpless and hopeless as a kite when the string breaks, unless it is a boy or a girl, a man or a woman, when the restraining cord of a good life is broken. Be sure that your kite, that you call "Ambition" or "Success," or by some other euphonious name, has this strong, trustworthy string attached to it.—Cal. Ogburn.

When Success Spells Failure.

Business success for the woman does not mean domestic or individual happiness, and, on the whole, business life makes for restlessness, selfishness and discontent. You cannot measure the influence of business on the woman by figures or statistics. You cannot count wrecked lives among women wage earners as you can tally off divorce cases on court calendars, and trace them to certain causes, such as incompatibility, desertion, cruelty, etc. You cannot say that a woman in business is a failure or success according to the salary she draws. You cannot expect the trim, self-contained girl at your elbow to admit that her perfectly appointed little apartment, her perfectly trained maid, her perfectly ordered life of dinners, clubs, theaters and operas spells failure. She says she is a success. In her heart she knows that when the last guest has gone, and the trim little maid has been dismissed, the exquisitely appointed little apartment becomes a whited sepulcher in which the starved soul of the woman sits alone weeping.—Woman's Home Companion.

Labor Fraternal Society Opposed to Alcohol.

The Fraternal Aid Society of Leipzig and vicinity calls attention in its yearly report for 1906 to the need of combating alcoholism in the labor organizations, because the alcoholic members make far more demands upon the sick fund than others, being more subject to sickness and accidents. In a systematic attempt to combat tuberculosis, that society finds that alcoholism is usually a prominent factor in the cause.

Optimistic Brown.

Brown's cheerfulness was a source of wonder and admiration to his friends. Either his religion or his philosophy taught him to accept everything as a wise dispensation. But then he had a large share of worldly goods, his friends argued, and nothing but adversity would shake his faith.

Therefore, when a promising crop was washed away by a flood, the neighbors were much astonished to hear him say: "It's all for the best. I was blessed with an overabundance last year."

In the winter his home burned to the ground. To his neighbors' solicitations he calmly responded: "The house never suited us, anyway; so it is all for the best."

Other calamities befell Brown, but still he refused to be disheartened.

The climax came when he was in a railroad accident. Both feet were so badly crushed that amputation was necessary.

Sympathetic friends gathered from all quarters. They dreaded to hear the lamentations they were sure would greet them, for even Brown could hardly be expected to pass this lightly by.

"Guess you are pretty well discouraged, aren't you, with both feet cut off?" ventured some one. "Do you think this is all for the best?"

But Brown nodded his head, smiling wanly, and said:

"They were always cold, anyway!"—Ladies' Home Journal.

Plea for a Wider and Better Observance of Thanksgiving Day.

The National Reform Association has issued a plea for a wider and more suitable observance of Thanksgiving day. It argues that the one day in the year in which we make general and express acknowledgment of our dependence as a nation on God and of the benefit we receive from him ought to be marked by a more general cessation of business, and on the other hand ought not to be given over to dissipation or frivolity. It suggests that the two most appropriate and most useful ways of observing the day are public worship and family reunions. Thus at once we strengthen home ties and promote the influence of religion. These observances are most in accord with the traditions of the day and the proclamations of the Governors and the President of the United States. Pastors and churches are requested to arrange for service in the largest possible number of churches. Young People's Societies are requested to assist in decorating the churches, in preparing the music and in distributing gifts to the poor. And all citizens are urged to regard church attendance on that day as not only a Christian but a patriotic duty, and a mark of good citizenship.

Play as a Factor in Health.

The philosopher, Herbert Spencer, used to lament, in his later years, that he had not adopted a regular system of recreation. He often said that what he had needed was play, simple play, "useless" from every point of view except that of recreating the system. This sort of human philosophy, says the "Independent," is gaining ground every year.

No one, at any age, can live healthily, and be a wholesome human being, without play. City life particularly demands provision for relaxation for those who are in mature life. In this way only can the burdens of life be kept from wearing one out prematurely. Further, there is no doubt that the public can so provide for relaxation and recreation that the whole community shall feel the benefit of it from a sanitary standpoint, and in the reduction of crime. Public playing is a feature of life of many Norwegian and Swiss communities. It works admirably in the way of keeping health and a good social atmosphere.

Precisely as with the young, so with the old—play has a hygienic value. It relieves the brain and the heart, the organs most likely to be broken down through hard work and worry. Play seems to have an admirable effect in equalizing the circulation of the blood and in mitigating the strain placed on the different organs. Play furnished also a kind of mental training which is very necessary in adult life. It takes the attention from a single affair, and it keeps all the sense-organs alert. Nor can we make too much of the social element in this matter. A good playground is the best means of counteracting the differentiation from each other which we undergo in the struggle for life. But have we really any time for games? Who can leave his business to spend an hour at sport every day of his life? We have seen this tested in a small way, very successfully, by a communal bowling-alley. Business men of all sorts and bankers did find it possible to get away from work and enjoy themselves in a very simple, free and easy way. They threw off their burdens, laughed and shouted and recreated. Golf has proved a useful game for many, and croquet and tennis have done a great deal of direct good. They do not quite fill the bill, however, as family games. What we want is a public recognition of the value of play, and opportunities for gathering together precisely as we would group our children.

The Strength We Need.

Strength for to-day is all that we need,
As there never will be a to-morrow;
For to-morrow will prove but another to-day,
With its measure of joy and of sorrow.

The teacher had been talking about a hen sitting on eggs, says "English Country Life," and, with the incubator in mind, asked if eggs could be hatched in any other way. "Yes, sir," said an experienced person of nine. "Put 'em under a duck."—Selected.

Advance Society Letters.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

At Kimberlin Heights, Tenn., as we all know, there is a college where students for the ministry are educated without charge, when they are without means. Of course, to keep up an institution like that outside aid is necessary. It costs one dollar to buy a bushel of wheat, and it requires one bushel of wheat to make bread for one meal for the boys, and there are 756 meals during each school year. President Johnson has called for help, and the Advance Society has sent a dollar, which will furnish bread for one meal in November. I hope others will send their dollars to President Johnson, for it would be a sad thing if the boys were forced to graze on cornbread.

Charlie's ice cream social is as good as over, but here comes a straggler from Oaksdale, Wash., Mrs. S. M. Gibbins: "There have been so few days out here in Washington that suggested ice cream that I just didn't get started to the ice cream social for the Advance Society orphan. And my nephew from old Missouri (which is away east of the Rockies) was visiting me, making me forget almost everything else. Hot lemonade will be more appropriate now, and I have brought a few friends that they may enjoy it with me. I enjoy so much reading what all the Av. S. is doing for our orphan and our missionary Drusie. If you were not such a modest man I would say"— (We must ask the reader to draw on his imagination. Fifty cents in this crowd).

Old Nebraska next comes gracefully to the front. M. A. Smith, Hebron, Neb.: "Here is 30 cents for Charlie's ice cream social, handed me by my wife, a sister, Mrs. A. H. Smith, Mrs. M. C. Wayne, of Republic City, Kan., and Mrs. Sue Powell, a daughter. Why do you 'spose they wanted me to send it? That's plain! They expected me to pay for a dish, too. Well, I add the dime and that makes it 40 cents. As I am just recovering from a severe attack of illness, hunt up some poor ragged boy or girl and let him or her have mine; or, if you can't find one, black or white, just give it to Felix. Success to the Av. S.! I hope its patrons may increase." (There are no boys or girls answering this description in Bentonville, for this is the land of the Big Red Apple. I will try to get Felix to take the saucer, but I'm afraid, being so manifestly a second choice, not to say a hundredth, that he will turn on his tail, and stalk away to his hammock.)

We will next hear from the land "Away east of the Rockies": Z., Julia and Leta Walker, Odin, Mo.: "We are perhaps late for the ice cream supper, but we bring a dollar; 50 cents for Charlie's cream, and the rest for Drusie." (I am a little bothered about that Z; is it a Walker, or a part of the Julia? or was it just put in for ornament?)

Edna Bear, Iberia, Mo., sends full reports for the 15th and 16th quarters of Av. S. work; also 10 cents for Drusie, and 15 cents for a saucer of our orphan's ice cream. From the envelope I see that her father is school commissioner of Miller county.

Of course you haven't forgotten our six-year-old member of the Av. S., who was started on his literary career by his grandmother. Here comes Willie Walter Jacob's second qarterly report from Iowa City. He is still six years old. If Iowa isn't proud of him, in my opinion she will be, one day. The following is from Willie's mother, Mrs. Myrtle Jacob, Kalona, Iowa.:

"Willie was half way through his third quarter before we could get this second report sent. He is very enthusiastic about it, but we are all leading the strenuous life, so popular in this country, and it is hard for us older ones always to give him the help he needs. We hope to keep it up till he is old enough to go on by himself. Perhaps by that time he will have the habit fixed. His little sister says, 'I am going to be on the Honor Roll, 'long with Willie.' She has learned several of his last quotations, and insists on having her Scripture lesson every day from the 'Revised New Testament' which her grandma sent her on her fourth birthday, July 11. But the history and poetry are beyond her yet. Long live the Av. S.! This record kept of what Willie has done, will alone show the good done by this work. 'Fill the mind with good thoughts, and the bad ones will have no room to enter.'"

As some may wonder how a boy of six can get much out of history, I take this note from Willie's mother's report of his fourth week: "Five pages from McMaster's History of U. S.—rather difficult, but carefully explained, and greatly enjoyed." From the eleventh week; "Five pages 'History of Iowa,' by Seerley and Parish—being about Indians, accompanied by explanations, pictures, etc., was greatly appreciated." The number of Bible verses read on every day are carefuly given till the twelfth week, when I find this note: "Every day we had Bible stories with verses in quotation, but being very busy, house-cleaning, entertaining the pastor, etc., mamma neglected to help Willie keep record of the exact number of verses. Where not otherwise stated, the history was from Mara L. Pratt's Series for Children."

What are the other mothers doing with their six-year-old boys? Just waiting for them to grow old enough to start to school?

Here is a letter from another young pioneer in the domain of literature, a letter written by the very hand of the writer; you have but to cast your eye upon the page to be perfectly convinced that no secretary took it down at dictation; Thornton Henry Haas, Albany, Mo.: "I send you 25 cents for orphan Charlie. I am sorry he is a cripple. I am glad I am not, for I can turn hand springs, skin a cat and do lots of Things. I can sing, too. Can Charlie sing? I will be Six Years Old the Third of November. Your little friend." (Thornton is now visiting in Bentonville, and I have heard him sing, and therefore know that he can do it. I also saw him skin a cat, and he did it so well that I would be mighty sorry for Felix to fall into his skillful hands. I used to live in Albany myself, and can testify that it is a thriving city, where they can skin cats and do lots of things).

I have solved the mystery of that "Z." An envelope lies on my desk with the postmark "Seymour, Mo.," and I find in one corner "Z. Walker, prop. of Greenwood Stock Farm, Odin, Mo."

Fayette, Idaho: "I know that the Av. S. will be grieved to hear of the sad affliction that has befallen one of its true friends. Our Harry Buckley, Lawrenceburg, Ky., is suffering from a partial stroke of paralysis, which occurred September 12. Please withhold my name."

I wrote to our faithful Harry Buckley, hoping this news might prove a mistake, very carefully withholding the name, which I am still withholding; nor would I have printed the address of the above note had not Harry guessed it. He replies as follows:

"Yes, I have had a slight attack of paralysis, my entire right side being affected, but is some better now, as is shown by my writing to you. I could not write for the first few days. I suspect you were informed of my illness by my good friend"— (But I must withhold that name). "I pray God's richest blessing upon the work of the Av. S., the orphan and the missionary. While I am writing to you, I want to say that Jefferson Davis was born in Fairview, Ky., and not in New Orleans, as you had it in your trip to Mexico."

I am sincerely glad to know that Harry is doing so well. The fact that he can still grasp his pen to point out a defect in "Around the Gulf to Mexico" leads me to trust he may soon be himself again. Of course we know that Davis was born in Kentucky. Harry is quite mistaken when he says I had it in my article that he was born in New Orleans. This shows how careful we should be in criticising others. No, no! I said in that in New Orleans I saw the house where Davis was born. Not that I was present on that occasion to vouch for it, you understand; I must needs take the word of the sightcrier of our automobile. He said it was the house. With his megaphone held in one hand, he waved his other and said: "This building on your right is where Jefferson Davis was born," and, just at the time, the fact that Davis was born in Kentucky escaped my rascally memory. I wish now I had asked him how the house was moved to New Orleans, and if the expenses were paid by the state or the nation.

Drusie R. Malott, North China: "In addition to preparing our circular letter, envelopes, etc., this past week, I have shared in the general moving of the season. I am again installed in the office building, or 'West House,' rooming with dear little 'Mother' Bernsten and her two little boys, while her husband is away in the homeland. Whenever I can snatch a few minutes I hear the boys recite their lessons. Along with everything else we have been putting up some grapes and apples. Now, don't you think we have been busy?

"Two of our sisters who had been to the Shanghai convention returned last May. When within half a day's distance of our farm they sent a runner ahead to tell us they were coming. When we saw the carts a little distance from the village, we all went to the south gate of the farm to meet them. The boys marched in a long line toward the carts; that is, they were supposed to march, but they went at a trot over the hill, through the gate and out in the field where the carts were.

"After dinner and a rest, we all went to see the new girls' school building, which was just being finished. The large number of workmen looked like two rows of ants as they went back and forth, carrying dirt and water for the mud face.

"Many inquire about my work. Much of my time is spent in the office. Then there is the language to study. If one lived here ten years, there would still be a wide field for language-study. Beginning last September, I went into the city every Saturday afternoon, remaining over Sunday, to have the children's meeting. How I praise God for having the privilege of this touch with the people! My heart goes out to the children. The girls are so downtrodden, their lives are so cheerless, so burdened, so stained with sin! They are slaves. From twenty to thirty girls come to the meetings, sometimes forty.

"I am especially interested in a little blind boy who has been coming. His parents are both blind. His sister (age 16 and married) is the only one of the family of four not blind; but of course she lives with her mother-in-law, the general custom. This little boy is as bright as can be. He can memorize a Bible verse as quickly as I, and oh! how he sings! 'Precious Jewels' is his standby, then 'I Will Follow Jesus.' He has also learned 'I have a Father in the Promised Land.' That is the favorite of the children.

"Another pathetic case is a young blind girl, aged 18, and her blind husband, aged 45. She has the most beautiful face of any girl I have yet seen in China; she is so childlike. They are both beggars, sleeping on the street, in temples, doorways, etc. Pray for these, will you not, that they may come to Christ Jesus as their personal Savior?

"God has seen fit to give us a little fellowship with our Chinese brethren. While he has graciously provided us with food and everything really necessary, he has seen fit to withhold our monthly apportionment for July. When the treasurer announced this to us, we promptly started singing the 'Doxology.' When, last evening, the treasurer announced that there also would be no apportionment for August, that precious song, 'He'll Never Forget to Keep Me' was praisefully sung. Each one gladly puts in his little balance for expenses this coming month.

"In my next letter I will tell you more about China, the people and our daily life, if the Lord permits. I remember how interesting it was to me when I was in the homeland and had not seen for myself."

Bentonville, Ark.

The Jewish Zion is in America.

Of the 11,000,000 Jews in the world, Russia has 5,000,000, Austria-Hungary has 2,000,000, and the United States has 1,500,000. These three countries head the list. The figures for Russia and Austria are five or six years old, however, and will need to be diminished somewhat on account of the persecution in those countries, but particularly in Russia, and the heavy immigration of Jews from both of them into the United States. Probably the United States has almost as many Jews in 1907 as are to be found in Francis Joseph's empire. Half of the 1,500,000 Jews in the United States reside in New York City. Every sixth person met in the streets of New York is a Jew. There are a dozen times as many Jews in New York City as were in Jerusalem at the height of Israel's power.

Union Gospel Songs

With the assistance of singing Evangelist Leonard Daugherty and J. H. Rosecrans we have prepared a new song book that constitutes one of the best offerings we have yet made to the psalmody of the church.

It is called Union Gospel Songs because it unites in itself the best of the best old songs, as well as the most helpful and popular of the newer candidates for popular favor—234 in all; and also because it unites features making it equally valuable for regular church work as well as for the Bible school, prayer-meeting and evangelistic services.

No expense has been spared in securing copyrights of desirable music and in sending forth strongly and handsomely bound volumes.

Limp Cloth—25 cts. per copy, postpaid; $16 per 100, not prepaid.
Board—30 cts. per copy, postpaid; $20 per 100 not prepaid.
Cloth—35 cts. per copy, postpaid; $3.50 per doz. not prepaid; $25 per 100, not prepaid.

The space usually accorded a self-laudatory preface, the Editors have modestly given to the Doxology and The Lord Is In His Temple.

The merits of this book predict it will quickly come into widespread usefulness. We wish to accelerate this movement. Samples will be sent on application, on condition they be returned if order does not follow.

—The Cross and Crown system of reward and souvenir pins appears to be the best attendance stimulus now being tried. We sell them by thousands. Write us for particulars.

—Those visiting our booth at Norfolk were surprised at the extent of our Bible school library. There is scarcely a good book published on Bible school themes but is carried in stock by us.

—While much of Marion Stevenson's helpfulness appears in this quarter's supplies, those for 1908 will be still further enriched from his great wealth of Bible knowledge and practical teaching ability.

—Through the recommendation of a friend we secured the order for furnishing the East St. Louis Y. M. C. A. (O. O. Larnce, secretary) with Bibles. An immense amount of business throughout the country may be turned to this House if thoughtful friends will speak the right word in time.

They know it will come with healing in its wings, with great inspiration for a forward move in all good works, as a positive help in making all the kingdoms of this earth to become loyal provinces in the empire of Christ. Is not such a paper worth working for? Will you not make it a weekly visitor to some new home?

Report of the Annual Convention at Norfolk, Va.

Christian Woman's Board of Missions.

The first session of the convention, other than the C. W. B. M. board meeting, was the gathering of the representatives of the auxiliaries and their friends at the great meeting on Friday night, October 11, in the Epworth Methodist Episcopal Church, kindly loaned for the sessions of the women's society. The church was packed. Mrs. A. R. Atwater presided and the welcome and devotional period was conducted by state officers of Virginia and local officers of Norfolk. W. E. M. Hackleman led the singing throughout this and most other sessions, and the Netz sisters rendered special music.

The address of the evening was by W. P. Bentley, formerly in China, but now superintendent of Oriental missions, and located in San Francisco. Brother Bentley is not such a graphic speaker as some who have returned to tell of their experiences on the foreign field, but he is one of the most thoughtful of those who give consideration to the work of missionaries. His theme was, "Our Responsibility to the Oriental Nations." America, he said, stands in a peculiar relationship to Japan and China as "guide, philosopher and friend." Japan's ambition is leading to the condition where one rest day in seven is being recognized. The state no longer suggests idolatry and the idea of the sanctity of the home life is growing. Both Japan and China have adopted the principle of religious liberty, and it behooves us to hold up before them Christian ideals.

The Chinese, said the speaker, possess qualities upon which we may safely base a prophecy of a future great state. They have marvelous political sagacity, an ideal of peace, not of war, great social wisdom, high intellectuality, with a fine literature, in which is the most compendious of histories and the most comprehensive of dictionaries. But the most encouraging quality is that of high moral and ethical sense. And then the many admirable qualities of the Japanese! Open-minded, they have been trained in the school of chivalry and learned the lessons of loyalty, courage, enterprise and honor, and Christianity appeals to them because it possesses the most beautiful personality and makes possible the most beautiful life.

The logic of geographical and racial sequence and historical development, urged the speaker, points irresistibly to greater emphasis upon these Oriental countries, and as the world adjusts itself to those new conditions arising from the shifting of the center of world interest and activity, no part of society is so much concerned in the movement as the Church. Shall she be less wise than diplomacy and commerce in the recognition of the fact that the destiny of the Americas is interwoven with that of the Orient?

Another obligation rests upon God's preserving care of these people. Wealth unknown is in their future possession, and it is the supreme privilege of our generation to deliver a pure gospel to a people prepared for a Protestantism chastened and corrected.

The speaker went on to instance certain evidences of a revelation to the original Chinese. They have three words for God, and echoes of the Mosaic priestly teachings and practice, while the Japanese theory of the divine origin and descent of their Mikado has almost the flavor of the Jewish idea of the Theocracy. As to Oriental skepticism, Mr. Bentley had a new apology for it. Such a state of mind, he said, argues independent and manly thinking, when the only alternative was consent to absurdity. He went on to mention other things, which were the preparatory work for the planting of the gospel seed.

Another obligation arises from the consideration that now is the fulness of time with these nations. Never were the Greeks and Romans more in despair of their systems than the Orientals are of theirs. Thinking Japan has not only repudiated ancestral worship and Buddhism, but their own native Shinto, while Confucianists, at least theoretically, disclaim belief in any form of religion. In China the priests are the dregs of society. The whole nation is without hope. They too await the advent of the Messiah. Our duty is plain.

Another obligation rests upon the demonstrated capacity of these people for improvement. In a brief period they have progressed in a way that took western nations centuries. Shall they have our telegraph and other modern western improvements and not our gospel? And our crowning obligation rests upon the proved spiritual capacity of these peoples, coupled with their spiritual needs, while another obligation arises from the presence in our own land of many of these people. The gospel for Asiatics means a Christian Orient and this, plus a Christian Occident, means the world for Christ.

The session of the C. W. B. M. on Saturday morning was opened by Mrs. Moses. The vice-president, Mrs. A. R. Atwater, led in the devotional exercises, after which Mrs. Moses gave the president's address, which appears in this issue. Great joy was felt when it was learned that every aim of the society had been reached. Then followed the report of the Board, read by Mrs. Harlan, the corresponding secretary. It was so enthusiastic and so full of success that to show its acceptance by the convention the Doxology was sung. An outline will be found in this issue. Reports of the Centennial Secretary, Treasurer and Literature committee followed. After this came the address on, "Minor Prophets of Modern Missions," by Prof. C. T. Paul, of Hiram. This address appears on another page. Then the missionaries of the society here on furlough were introduced. Miss Ada Boyd spoke for India—a plea for India's widows, of whom there are 637,000 under 20 years of age. She said that even in the upper classes the ideals of Christianity were getting a foothold. At the last India congress the session was opened by a prayer to God and he was addressed as Father.

Miss Ella Maddock, of India, spoke of the degradation of the people and of the work being done with success. Mrs. Ford, of Porto Rico, told how the work there had been accompanied by many hardships and trials, but that there had been success. She made a strong plea for the prayers of the churches and for more workers in the field.

Miss Mason, the first woman missionary to Mexico, spoke in behalf of that country and told of the marvelous success of the work there during the twelve years of its existence. Special music at these sessions was furnished by Miss Una Dell Berry, who sang Miss Adelaide Gail Frost's new song, "India Waiting," and by the Netz sisters.

At the devotional service, which was conducted by Mrs. Alice K. Murphy and Mrs. Reba B. Smith, of California, there was special music by the Netz sisters, who sang "The Home Land." Stanley R. Grubb, of Charleston, S. C., spoke of the victory won in that city in establishing prestige, and announced the good news of the completion of a beautiful $6,500 church building. C. C. Smith made a stirring speech on negro work and spoke of the heroic and self-sacrificing efforts of Jacob Kendall to teach and evangelize his own race in Liberia. At the close of the address some one in the audience sent up a gift of $100 to be applied on a fund for Brother Kendall's support. W. F. Smith and W. P. Bentley spoke of the work of the C. W. B. M. on home fields, the latter emphasizing the importance of evangelizing the Chinese and Japanese on the Pacific coast. This was followed by an address on "Bible Chair Work," by Prof. W. M. Forrest, of the University of Virginia, whose work there is maintained by the national C. W. B. M. President E. A. Alderman, of the University of Virginia, who happened to be in the audience, was called to the platform, and his address was one of the very best of the session. He paid a glowing tribute to the educational work of the C. W. B. M., especially at Virginia University, and expressed the hope that this might embrace all state institutions. Earle M. Todd reviewed the history of the establishment of the cause

Current Events

The Chinese Constitution.

The recent edict issued by the Dowager Empress of China indicates that the Celestial kingdom is shortly to enter upon an era of constitutional government. Seven years ago, at the time of the Boxer uprising, the Dowager Empress was an extreme reactionary, and was opposed to all foreign influences and innovations. The young emperor, whose inclinations were in the direction of liberalism, found himself practically deposed on this account. But the empress has been learning. The outcome of the Boxer trouble taught her something. The victory of modernized Japan over Russia taught her something more as to the practical value of modernization. Very likely she has had no very serious change of heart in regard to the general principles of sovereignty and democracy, but apparently she has observed that modern methods of warfare must be accompanied by modern methods of government. Two years ago, when the suggestion was made that China should make preparations to adopt a constitutional form of government, the empress approved the proposal and sent a commission to study the institutions of those western nations which had constitutions, and especially those of the United States. A year later an edict announced the intention of the government to promulgate a constitution as soon as internal conditions would warrant it—that is, as soon as the people could be educated to a fair understanding of their civic duties. The present edict indicates the opinion of the sovereign that this time has now come, and announces that henceforth China will be governed under a constitution.

Lipton's Challenge.

Sir Thomas Lipton, who has three times attempted to win back for England the international yachting trophy which was captured by the "America" in 1851, has issued a challenge looking to another race for it next summer. The challenge, however, specified conditions which were not acceptable to the New York Yacht Club, the present custodians of the cup, and it has been declined. The purpose of Sir Thomas' conditions was to secure a race between real sea-going yachts. In recent years the tendency has been to build for these races wonderful shells which were capable of great speed, but which were not seaworthy or suitable for any of the legitimate uses of a vessel except racing. The recent races, including the three defeats of Sir Thomas and his "Shamrocks," have shown that it is possible, by disregarding the questions of seaworthiness and practical usefulness, to build a faster vessel than any which takes these elements into consideration. The cup is in this country and the races must be held near New York. The rules require that each vessel shall proceed under sail to the place where the race is to be held. For the American yacht, that means a trip down New York Bay; for the British boat, it means a voyage across the Atlantic Ocean. It is therefore impossible for an English challenger to send the sort of racing shell that the New York club can send. The old cup races have served their purpose, but their usefulness is ended if such conditions as those proposed can not be accepted. There is needed a new series of contests on fair terms for ocean-going yachts.

The Stock Market.

New York stocks have recently undergone the greatest slump since 1893. The remarkable feature of this is that the country at large is now more prosperous than ever before in its history. Railway stocks, in some instances, have declined fifty per cent in value, while their freight departments have been unable to supply the demand for cars. Industrial stocks have fallen with the furnaces and mills at full blast and unable to fill orders. Wages are on the highest level, farm products are most abundant and bring the highest prices in years, while labor is all employed at remunerative wages. If the New York Stock Exchange is the barometer of national prosperity, stocks should naturally bring the highest prices ever listed. That the reverse is true is evidence that our commercial and manufacturing interests have far outgrown Wall street, and that our national prosperity can no longer be seriously affected by New York brokers and stock manipulators. Evidence is now forthcoming to show that this marvelous stock depression is largely due to punitive methods adopted by the Standard Oil Company in avenging itself on other corporate interests that have not loyally supported it during its grueling by the commissioners of interstate commerce. This discovery is rapidly dissipating fear of widespread business calamity. The worst is passed, and it is believed that our present prosperous era will be long continued. Proper caution, however, will prevent those of limited capital from involving themselves in further indebtedness until the clouds have rolled further by.

Champ Clark for Governor.

The general impression is that Champ Clark has been sentenced to Congress for life by his Pike county (Missouri) district. It is well known, however, that this eloquent and incorruptible tribune has senatorial aspirations. There is an apparently well authenticated rumor to the effect that he will seek to enter the Senate, via the Missouri gubernatorial office. Mr. Clark has read The Christian-Evangelist long enough to be well qualified for any office in the gift of the American people. He is one of the most picturesque of all our statesmen, and thousands will watch his race for the senatorship with intense interest. It is believed by his friends that had he only a little more confidence in his personal popularity he would, at present, be wearing the toga now held by Senator William Stone.

We Are Gaining in Gold.

George E. Roberts, who recently retired from the position of director of the mint, has just completed the compilation of the statistics on the production of gold in the various states and territories, for the year 1906. The total production was $94,373,000, a net gain over the previous year of $6,193,100. Colorado led with $22,934,400. Alaska followed with $21,365,100, California with $18,832,900, Nevada with $9,278,600, South Dakota with $6,604,900, Utah with $5,130,900. North Carolina produced $90,900, South Carolina $74,600, Georgia $23,700, Virginia $10,300, and Tennessee $800. Doubtless even the heroes of "the first battle" will view this disturbance of the "divine ratio" with equanimity, if assured that an equitable distribution will be made of these golden streams of wealth flowing from our mountainsides.

Aero Navigation.

St. Louis is now the center of interest in aerial transportation. As we are closing our forms nine giant balloons are tugging at their anchors, in perfect readiness for the signal gun that will start the Bennett international cup race. Five thousand dollars and world-wide renown await the victor. America, England, France and Germany are represented. This race is believed to have military and commercial as well as scientific significance. Balloons will undoubtedly be used in the next great war. The telephone should guard us against categorical declarations that they will never be of practical use for transportation of merchandise and men. Notable exhibitions of the dirigible machine are also part of the program for this week's balloon-fest in this city. Steam and lightning have already been chained to the service of man, and now the winds may be. God save from harm all these adventursome spirits now threading the skies.

These are the days of air navigation, swift runs across the Atlantic, wireless telegraphy, 2-cents-a-mile railroad tickets and two-miles-a-minute automobiles. It seems to have been decided that the best of all ways to lengthen our days is to save time and distance.

A New York philanthropist has built three hotels in that city with a total of 3,000 bedrooms, at which a room costs from 30 to 40 cents a night, with meals at corresponding prices.

Twenty years ago automobiles were considered visionary. Next year American manufacturers expect to make 55,000, valued at $140,000,000.

Editorial

In the Midst of the Convention.

It is exceedingly difficult in the hurry and tumult of one of our great conventions to find quiet enough and time enough to write an editorial. In another issue we shall attempt a more elaborate setting forth of the work of the convention than is possible at this time. While the convention has not yet closed its sessions, enough has transpired to place the Norfolk convention among the most historic of all our national gatherings. Indeed, we do not think it extravagant to say that more history has been made by this convention than by any preceding convention during the nearly completed century of our existence.

The matter which has caused most controversy for several months past was the solicitation and acceptance of gifts amounting to $25,000 from John D. Rockefeller by the executive committee of our Foreign Society. This matter came before the Board of Managers at its annual meeting just prior to the convention. The financial secretary, in submitting his statement, referred to the controversy which had been excited by this gift, and stated that the committee, in deference to the views of certain brethren who object to its action in this matter, would solicit no further gifts from this source. This position had been clearly stated by the president of the Foreign Society early in the discussion on this subject. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST had quoted President McLean's statement—that the committee was only the servant of the brethren, and that if they objected to the solicitation of such gifts no further such solicitations would be made—and urged that the matter be permitted to rest there. But the discussion went on with no diminution of warmth. The Board of Managers, however, voted unanimously to accept this settlement of the matter, and following this vote there was a season of prayer in which all hearts flowed together in brotherly love, and overflowed with thanksgiving to God for the manifest presence and guidance of his Spirit. We have seldom, if ever, witnessed a more impressive scene in one of our conventions, for this was a miniature convention, made up of the representative men of the society.

Following this action, however, Bro. T. W. Phillips, of Pennsylvania, introduced a resolution that it is the sense of this Board of Managers that the executive committee should return to Mr. Rockefeller the money which it had accepted from him. He called for a second to his resolution, and the silence which followed was most eloquent and impressive. Not a man could be found in that house full of leading brethren to even second the motion. Brother Phillips stood absolutely alone, so far as any sentiment was expressed, on this question. It is to be said to his credit, however, that he subsequently presided over the meeting of the General Board of the American Christian Missionary Society, and participated freely in the work of the convention, instead of sulking in his tent as many a modern Achilles has done.

The action of the Home Board was scarcely less important. Like the report of the Foreign Board it showed a distinct gain, not only in its receipts, but in the work accomplished, and the faithful effort of the corresponding secretary and his associates, to carry out the instructions of the last convention. One of the most important recommendations of the report was that a committee of twenty-five representative men be appointed to consider the propriety of forming a national publication society to be managed in the interest of the brotherhood at large, which should make its report to the Acting Board within sixty days, said committee and Board having power to act. This recommendation was amended, however, by substituting one year for sixty days, and the report to be made to the Board of Managers at its annual meeting.

It scarcely need be said that this action, favored by many of the most conservative brethren among us, was the result of those periodical disturbances of the peace of the brotherhood by one of our leading journals, which seems to have adopted, as a fixed policy, that method of increasing and maintaining its circulation. Recognizing as we do the necessity for some sort of action that will relieve our cause from the disturbing and divisive influence of such journalism, we yet advise the greatest caution on the part of this committee and the brethren generally in adopting a remedy which may, unless wisely devised, prove to be equally injurious. We are sure, however, that no committee of representative men among us would recommend any measure, nor would the Board of Managers approve any measure that in any way would hamper the freedom of our press, in reasonable and just criticism. So far as the Editor of this paper is concerned, he has never submitted to any control which would limit his freedom of utterance, and he does not expect to change his policy in this respect. Nor do we believe that it is the desire or purpose of the brethren moving in this matter to hamper such freedom of utterance on the part of any editor, but simply to protect, in some safe and sane way, our holy cause from those paroxysms of newspaper controversy which have done so much to weaken the influence of our religious movement in the world, and to alienate brethren one from another. How this can best be accomplished is a problem that will demand the highest practical wisdom of the brotherhood to solve, and when solved, it will no doubt require a large investment of capital to carry out. It is well, however, that this action was taken, and that we are brought face to face at last with one of the greatest obstacles in the way of our continuous and peaceful progress.

Other matters which elicited much attention and provoked no little discussion both before the General Board and the convention, related to certain constitutional changes, and to the readjustment of days for special offerings to our various general interests. These matters, we venture to say, ought not to have been brought before the convention before a general agreement had been reached among those interested. The lack of time for the due consideration of such questions in our general board meetings, is the prime cause of the fault of which we speak. We should have a whole day for the consideration of the reports which come before our General Board, and all differences should be settled there before being brought before the convention. The only thing that marred the orderly procedure of the entire convention was the discussion of these questions about which there was not a clear understanding on the part of those engaged in the discussion. In a later number we hope to speak more particularly of the conventions of the different societies, and of what they have accomplished and what they propose.

Federation and the National Convention.

As is known to our readers, a committee of ten selected at our last National Congress was appointed to call a special meeting to convene during the convention at Norfolk for the consideration of the question of our answer to a communication from the inter-church conference held in New York in November, 1905, inviting us to co-operation with other religious bodies on the basis of federation which they submitted for our approval. The meeting was crowded out at the hour originally appointed, on Tuesday afternoon, but was held immediately following the night session of the convention, in the presence of a vast audience which filled the great hall in which we met. F. D. Power, chairman of the committee, called the meeting to order and asked for nominations on permanent organization. W. F. Richardson, of Kansas City, Mo., was nominated and elected as president, and J. L. Hill, of Cincinnati, O., as secretary. J. H. Garrison then read the letter from the Interchurch Conference asking for our approval of the proposed federation and our appointment of delegates to attend the next quadrennial conference of the council to be held in 1908. The proposed basis of federation was read by F. D. Power, who, as chairman of the committee, then read the report of that committee responding to the overtures from the inter-church conference. The report was as follows:

"The Inter-Church Conference on Federation, which assembled in the city of New York in November, 1905, representing 18,000,000 of the followers of our divine Lord, having perfected a plan of federation in Christian service, looking toward a close co-operation among evangelical Protestant bodies as a suitable expression of whatever unity may now exist, and with a view to accomplish better results by such co-operation;

"And said conference, having asked the various religious bodies for an expression of sentiment in regard to the plan so outlined, and for the appointment of delegates to a general council in December, 1908, provided this basis is approved:

"We, the Disciples of Christ, in special assembly called for this purpose, identified with a movement which originated in the desire and purpose to promote the union of Christians, and still devoted to this aim and desiring in every scriptural way to advance the end sought in our Master's prayer for his disciples, would express our devout gratitude to God for this manifestation of union sentiment, and effort to bring our Lord's people into closer fellowship.

"We declare ourselves in cordial sympathy with every effort to bring about concerted action on the part of Christian forces against such evils as the liquor traffic, unscriptural divorce, desecration of the Lord's day, and the social evil, and to solve the problems of capital and labor and city evangelization and kindred questions that belong to our time.

"We congratulate the conference that it disclaims any authority or purpose to draw up a common creed or form of government or worship, or to interfere in any way with the freedom of the co-operating bodies, leaving them free to carry out what each believes to be its providential mission, and with this understanding of the spirit and aim of the proposed basis of federation, and disclaiming any authority to bind the churches by our action, or even any delegated authority to represent the churches on the subject, and furthermore reserving the right at any time to withdraw from the federation if in our judgment it fails to serve the purpose for which it is organized, or shall seem to be a hindrance rather than a help to the realization of a true scriptural unity, we give our approval to the proposed basis as a tentative working plan of co-operation, subject to such modification as experience may suggest, and recommend, by any method this meeting may approve, the appointment of the required number of delegates to attend the next quadrennial conference of the co-operative bodies.

"We moreover recommend that our churches enter heartily into the local co-operative movements in their respective communities as far as they may find it practicable to do so without surrendering any truth or principle for which we stand, believing that by so doing we shall most honor the Christ and most speedily accomplish the great purpose of our religious movement in hastening the fulfillment of our Lord's prayer for the unity of its followers.

"F. D. Power, A. B. Philputt, J. G. Slater, W. T. Moore, Clinton Lockhart, H. M. Bell, I. J. Spencer, W. F. Richardson, J. L. Hill, S. H. Bartlett."

It was the judgment of the committee, with which the Editor of this paper had the privilege of meeting, though not a member of it, that it were better to submit a careful, conservative report, which it was believed would be unanimously adopted, than to present a less elaborate and less carefully guarded report which might receive only a majority vote. No member of the committee was able to see why any member connected with our religious movement could dissent from a report like that given above. The report was adopted with practical unanimity. The discussion was brief, as the matter had been thoroughly discussed in our papers. Bro. J. B. Briney, the venerable and highly-esteemed editor of "Briney's Monthly," was the only one who spoke against the adoption of the report, and he found no objection to the report itself, but said its presentation at this meeting was "irregular," and feared that its adoption would prove "an apple of discord" among the brethren. It is a very strange situation, indeed, which has been brought about, if it be true that the adoption of such a report can be "an apple of discord" among brethren, breathing as it does the spirit of unity and fraternity.

We congratulate the brotherhood at large, thousands of whom, who could not be present, were in cordial sympathy with this action, that this report was adopted with very few dissenting voices in that great assembly. The overwhelming sentiment of the brotherhood, is, beyond all doubt, in favor of the utmost co-operation with all other Christian forces as far as is consistent with the fidelity to our own providential mission. It would be strange, indeed, if this were not so, but that public sentiment has been enabled to express itself so clearly and unmistakably in spite of efforts to cloud the question and prejudice the public mind, is a matter for congratulation and thanksgiving to Almighty God.

Following the adoption of the report the same committee of ten was authorized to nominate the required number of delegates to the next quadrennial conference. And so the Disciples of Christ will be represented in that great historic gathering in the interest of the closer unity of Christ's followers, to the end that the world may be converted. That this opportunity of declaring ourselves loyal to the primary object of our reformatory movement, in this public way, before our Centennial celebration in 1909, seems providential. That the declaration should have been so heartily approved by so large and representative a gathering, gives gratifying assurance of the future of the movement.

Making History.

The convention at Norfolk was more than an enjoyable convocation of brethren. It was this, but it was an epoch-making convention. Not that any very remarkable thing was done. Indeed, only such things were done as seemed naturally to grow out of events leading up to the convention. If it be true that coming events cast their shadows before, then the Norfolk convention did not, in any respect, contradict this maxim. For some time there have been apparent prophecies of what took place at Norfolk. In short, the convention accomplished exactly just what one might have logically expected, and in this regard it contradicted another maxim which says it is the unexpected that always happens.

Nevertheless it must be confessed that the manner of accomplishing this could scarcely have been expected. What was done was done so heartily, and, withal, of so little friction that in looking back over the action of the convention no one can fail to be impressed with the fact that there is a Divinity that shapes our ends, rough hew them how we will. The spirit which predominated in the convention was so distinctly Christian that no one seemed to question any action of great importance after it was done. If any criticism followed, it was always with respect to unimportant matters. The real, vital questions were discussed with the finest dignity but with a resoluteness which always indicated that everything was moving on thoroughly conscientious lines.

The last day of the convention, which was denominated "Disciples' day," was held in the Exposition grounds in the auditorium, when the Editor of this paper delivered one of the finest addresses of his life, in which he ran a parallel between the founding of Jamestown, the Declaration of Independence and the starting of our religious movement on this continent, and the issuance of the "Declaration and Address" by the Campbells. It was a great speech on a great occasion, but the significant fact is the enthusiasm which it kindled. A large portion of the audience was composed of people who knew little or nothing of the principles and objects of our religious movement, and it was curious to notice the effect on this special class.

From this point of view undoubtedly the convention was worth much more than it cost. Its educational influence was great on the people of Norfolk and vicinity. They received impressions which they never before felt. Perhaps the very ground on which the convention was held had something to do with its history-making character. It was almost impossible to devise small things while sojourning among so many suggestive associations. Everything seemed to lend itself to a history-making convention; and unless we are greatly mistaken there were several steps made which must inevitably lead to important consequences in the development of our religious movement. It is not necessary to particularize here. It is enough to state the general fact, though it may be well to notice independently one or two things which must have a decided salutary influence on the future of the movement.

Editor's Easy Chair.

It is better to appear under our familiar title, but the idea of an "Easy Chair" at a national convention, and especially at such a convention as that which has just closed its sessions at Norfolk, is grim humor. There has been no "Easy Chair," and very little of any kind of chair since we left St. Louis. It has been hard to find time for a few quiet moments each day for rest and meditation. The social features of one of our conventions, while one of the most delightful, is, nevertheless, most exacting in its demands upon one's time and strength. But who would dispense with it—the greetings of old friends, the making of new acquaintances, the "few words" which a half-dozen delegates wish with you at the same time, the college banquets wedged in between sessions, the heart-to-heart talks with elect spirits concerning the welfare of the cause we love? All that is indispensable. If it is neither warp nor woof of the convention, it is at least tone and color, and makes the business feature more easily borne. Nevertheless, we repeat, its mutual courtesies and reciprocities monopolize the time between sessions and make a convention one of the busiest places in the world. And yet an editor must write, because his calling demands it; and in order to write to edification, he ought to have a little quiet in which to think. We do not say, however, that this rule is universally observed by the editorial fraternity. If the reader should discover any evidence that the Easy Chair this week has been written without much thought, he will please remember that it is written under conditions that preclude the possibility of continuity of thought. This paragraph, for instance, is written at the close of "Disciples' Day" at the Exposition. The convention is over. The captains and the kings have departed, in the main, only a few lingering over night to take the morning boat for Washington. Thereby hangs a tale which succeeding paragraphs may unfold. Enough now to say that the Norfolk convention has passed into history, and has taken its place with the immortals.

At this writing the fast steamer "Newport News" is carrying a large number of The Christian-Evangelist Special party up the Chesapeake Bay from Norfolk to Washington. It is a glorious autumn day, and back here in the end of the boat, where we get the sun and are protected from the breeze which the rapidly-moving steamer creates, it is very comfortable. The steamer is crowded with passengers, for this is a popular daylight trip. Passing through Hampton Roads early this morning, the Exposition grounds lay off to our starboard and some of Uncle Sam's ships stood near our course on the larboard side. Perhaps it is necessary, in the present stage of the world's civilization, to have warships, but let no one doubt that the time is coming when they will be regarded curiously, in the expositions of that golden age that is yet to be, as the relics of a crude civilization in which nations tried to settle their misunderstandings by slaughtering each other. Referring to the Exposition at Norfolk in celebration of the three hundredth anniversary of the Jamestown settlement, we fear the press of the country has done it injustice. It is well worth visiting, apart from its historical associations; but, with these added, Americans everywhere ought to feel a patriotic pride in visiting this earliest shrine of our national freedom. Any sectional or selfish feeling that would prevent the newspapers of the country from giving proper notice of this most praiseworthy enterprise is unworthy of free and patriotic journalism. The water-front, with its new government stone pier and the artistic arrangement of the state buildings along the shore, has never had its equal in any previous exposition. We had time for only a hasty examination of some of the principal buildings, and we found much that was worthy of more time than was at our disposal. This exposition will do much for Virginia, and the whole country will be richer in its historical knowledge of our early beginnings as a nation because of the revival of interest in the Jamestown settlement, and of the events associated with those early and heroic days.

These are historic waters over which we are riding to-day. The Chesapeake Bay, which smiles its welcome to us under this glorious October sun, has had its placid waters stirred by the keels of hostile vessels intent on the destruction of our capital. We are just now passing out of the Bay whose name is somewhat linked with a brand of canned oysters once much in vogue, in the broad mouth of the peaceful Potomac. Potomac, Washington, are two names inseparably connected. It was only an ordinary river until a young revolutionary patriot built his home on its shores, and by his single-hearted devotion to his country's good, became "First in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen." When he had finished his illustrious career and his body was interred on its bank, Mt. Vernon became the nation's shrine and the Potomac River shares in Washington's earthly immortality. Night will fall upon us, perhaps, before we pass this historic spot, but the tolling of the bell on the steamer, as it passes, will warn us that we are near the spot that holds the sacred dust of Washington. How the world honors a man who prefers his country's welfare to selfish aims and ambitions, and who guides his nation's ship of state through perilous seas! As long as the Potomac empties its waters into the bay and the sea, will mankind honor the name of George Washington, the patriot who, when he might have been king, preferred to be a private citizen of a free and independent republic. The river at this writing is five or six miles in width, and the white sails of the oyster-boats on either side, gleaming in the light of the afternoon sun, and the green shores make up a beautiful picture which will not soon fade from the walls of memory. The enjoyment of the scenery and of the charming trip we are having is greatly enhanced by the congenial company on board—a large remnant of The Christian-Evangelist Special who still hang together. No effort was made to hold the delegation together after the convention, but many of us find ourselves going the same way to the same places. Our immediate destination is Washington, where some of us will spend Saturday and the Lord's day. There is such a chatter going on among this crowd of returning delegates that even one who is accustomed to seclude himself by concentration finds it difficult to write. But it is easy to excuse a good deal of hilariousness on such a trip as this, for the weather, the scenery, the congenial company, the special train, the steamer, and the historic interest of the route will make it memorable in the minds of all who have enjoyed it.

The sun is now sinking in the west. The nearly full moon, however, will lend us its mellower light for the remainder of the journey. To the right is "Maryland, my Maryland," and on our left is Old Virginia. Here on the left shore is Colonial Beach, a popular summer resort for Washington people. Further on, on the Maryland side, is the spot where John Wilkes Booth embarked in a rowboat to cross the river to the Virginia side on the night he assassinated the great and good president, Abraham Lincoln. Still the oyster boats are seen, showing that the oyster flourishes many miles above the Chesapeake Bay. Passengers note and admire the beautiful coloring of the setting sun on the water. A porpoise is seen disporting himself in the rear of the vessel. The Potomac must be set down among the most beautiful rivers of the world, and it is the highway from the sea to one of the world's most beautiful capitals. As the steamer neared Mt. Vernon, and the soft moonlight was throwing its mystic charm over the river, our delegates assembled in the cabin where the piano stood and began to sing religious songs. The music was interspersed with talks by several brethren, including W. T. Moore, C. L. Loos, Dr. Stackhouse of the Baptists in Canada, J. L. Romig, W. J. Wright, D. A. Russel of California, and others, all of whom extolled the convention we had just attended, and looked forward with expectancy to still greater things. There were many pledges to go with The Christian-Evangelist Special to New Orleans next October, which we hope will be a chartered boat to take us down the great river. Stackhouse, Romig and Wright talked of union in the great Canadian Northwest between Baptists and Disciples of Christ. All were buoyant, hopeful, happy. In that spirit our delegates are returning from the Norfolk convention. But here is Washington, and we close to send this on by next mail.

in Manchester, N. H., and Miss Elsie L. Taylor, of Pennsylvania, spoke on "State Organizers." This was followed by the report of the nominating committee. No changes were made in the list of officers for the coming year and the report is as follows: President, Mrs. Helen E. Moses; vice-president, Mrs. Anna R. Atwater; corresponding secretary, Mrs. M. E. Harlan; recording secretary, Mrs. Anna B. Gray; treasurer, Miss Mary J. Judson; superintendent of children s work, Miss Mattie Pounds; centennial secretary, Mrs. Ida W. Harrison; superintendent of negro work, C. C. Smith. Resident members of board: Mrs. Effie Cunningham, Mrs. R. K. Syfers, Mrs. J. B. Sidener, Mrs. J. M. Dungan, Mrs. N. E. Atkinson.

A. B. Philputt delivered a beautiful and impressive charge to the new officers, followed by a prayer for their guidance.

Mrs. J. H. Garrison, of Missouri, gave the report of the committee on watchword and aim, and the session was closed by an able address by Miss Annie Davidson, of Illinois. A reception followed, given at the Freemason Street Church of Christ, in honor of the C. W. B. M. officers and missionaries.

The Year's Report.

Last year was distinguished as one of building. In no year of C. W. B. M. activity had there been such advance in this direction. But this year the marked feature has been the number of conversions.

The total statistics of foreign work are summarized as follows: Missionaries, 68; assistant missionaries, 9; native helpers, 165; total number of workers, 242; stations, 28; outstations, 59; Christians, 4,951; conversions during year, 1,795; day schools, 38; pupils in schools, 2,279; orphanages, 6; children in orphanages, 403; hospitals, 4; dispensaries, 21; patients treated during year, 64,110; leper mission, 1; Women's and Babies' Home, 1; buildings erected, enlarged or repaired and sites purchased for new buildings, 17.

In Canada and Manitoba the progress shows: Church helped, 1; members in church, 71; additions during year, 16.

In the United States the reports show: States in which work is conducted, 39; state boards assisted, 14; city missionary organizations helped, 4; local churches to which direct appropriation is made, 19; number of workers employed, 208; additions to churches aided through employes of the board, 3,025; new churches organized, 15; Sunday-schools organized, 36; church buildings erected, 27; schools and Bible chairs supported, 15; students in school and Bible chairs, 1,773; Chinese hospital, 1; Chinese dispensaries, 2.

During the year a site has been purchased in San Francisco for the hospital. Myers Memorial Hall, Lawrence, Kan., has been furnished and dedicated. Enlargements have been made at Lum, Ala., and Martinsville, Va. A farm of 120 acres has been purchased for the Industrial Department at Morehead, Ky., and other improvements made there and at Hazel Green, Ky. The site for the Sarah Davis Deterding Missionary Training School and headquarters building has been purchased and work on the building commenced.

President's Address to C. W. B. M. at Norfolk Convention

There is joy in our meeting to-day, the joy that follows successful endeavor when its object is worthy. Would that all who have helped to make the splendid record of the year were here to rejoice with us in the fact that every published aim set before us has been reached and passed.

Can you not see in thought the great company of which we are so small a part—the company that has made the record of the year? Let us call it before us as best we may. How welcome would be the host from Jamaica, between 3,000 and 4,000 strong! These are they who have come up out of great tribulation; who, through earthquake, fire and drought, fainted not, failed not. From ruined homes and chapels they would come; from heavy burden-bearing and from days of toil; but were they here they would have a welcome that would speak our deep appreciation of their royal faithfulness through days of fiery trial.

A company of between seven and eight hundred would come from India, but it would be no less welcome than the greater throng from Jamaica. Their language would be strange, but together we could look up and say "Our Father." In the ranks would be many bright-faced girls and boys. These found the True Light in our orphanages, and are walking in it as witnesses for Jesus.

From Mexico would come a company of between four and five hundred. Of these also many have the dew of their youth.

Mrs. Helen E. Moses, President Christian Woman's Board of Missions.

But in the company are those who have counted it a small thing to suffer for Christ's sake.

The band from the fair isle of Porto Rico would number less than two hundred, but it would be a brave company, one learning to walk uprightly, striving honorably to follow our great Leader.

From Argentina would come a little company of less than a dozen—the only congregation of our people in that great country. What would the privileges of this convention mean to these men and women! Think of their isolation and the great work before them, and hold them up to God.

Manitoba would send a small band of faithful workers that we would be glad to see.

Many representatives from the home land are here, and this meeting has its crowning joy in the fellowship of this goodly company. But we are few compared with the many who have wrought to complete the work of the year, yet are not here to share in the joys of this meeting.

First of all the children, whose gifts are so precious, and whose love for this work is so pure and unselfish, are not here; but in many homes they will remember this meeting and pray for this work we are trying to serve. For their pure lives and pure gifts we give thanks.

A number of our young women's missionary circles are here represented, but only a few compared with the many. There has been no brighter chapter in the history of the year than that written by our circle girls. May their number increase and the beauty of our God be upon them, and may he establish the work of their hands for world-wide missions.

Could each faithful auxiliary worker be here, great would be our joy. Were they here to share in the inspiration of this meeting, their joy in the victory of the year would make greater undertakings seem the natural and right thing. In thought we greet them and pray the new year may bring them joy, hope, courage, victory.

Our home missionaries from every border of our land should be here, for they have striven faithfully and well. Heat, cold, privation, pain, overwork, isolation—these have been borne. Many have toiled, not counting life dear, so that they might do the work intrusted to them. Our missionary teachers, too, would be welcome. They have wrought well. Many who might command larger salaries in more advantageous locations are remaining in obscure places that they may do character building to strengthen the foundations of good government, of Christian civilization in our country.

It would, indeed, be a glorious company were all here. While this may not be, it is good to remember those who have wrought with us. I would we could reach them with the word of cheer or comfort many of them may be needing to-day. May our great All Father give his blessing and make stronger the bond of service uniting us.

But from the joy of to-day let us turn to the work of to-morrow. A celebrated artist, on being asked which of his pictures he regarded as the greatest, answered: "My greatest picture is yet to be painted." So we, with the achievements of this year in view, would say, "Our greatest work is yet to be done."

We are not willing to confess that the best work we are capable of has been done. We have grown with the work. We see greater heights, greener fields beyond. It is well that we feel the added strength, the deepened impulse, the stronger faith for the work of to-morrow, for the call of opportunity is not only stirringly, but sternly loud and clear.

Miss Annie E. Davidson, president of Illinois C. W. B. M.

Long we have had Africa at our doors. Then was added China, then Japan, and now comes India. If we shirk the work to be done for these nations in our very midst, our children will answer for our cowardice. A Northwestern journal has said in writing of the recent invasion from India: "Let us beware of intemperance, of violence, in dealing with these people; remember, the white man in India may suffer for our folly," a needed word of caution.

The day is at hand when we must have done with temporizing and evasions in attempting to answer God and our conscience concerning the Living Word of peace and good-will it is ours to speak to all nations. It becomes us to-day to order our lives as those who, having great things to live for, must live greatly.

Jasper T. Moses, C. W. B. M. missionary to Mexico, who has been compelled to enter a sanitarium in New York.

Mr. Ellis, who has completed his study of foreign missions, made in behalf of some of our leading newspapers, concludes that the enterprise of missions is so magnificent, so important, that it must engage the attention of our greatest minds, must be handled by men, and can never be successfully consummated by women and children.

An enterprise that brought the Son of God to this world might well engage the best effort of every son of man; but every son of man is the son of woman also, and his best development comes when both man and woman are vitally interested in his destiny.

No high principle has been reached, no great victory in behalf of Christian progress achieved, without the influence of the Christian home back of it. It was the Christian home or the Christian school that gave us the magnificent heroes of missions, Livingstone, Carey, Moffat, Morrison, Judson, Hamlin, Boardman, Fisk, Agnew, and a host of others.

It gives a mother courage to study the history of missions, and there to trace the influence a vital interest in this work in the home has on the minds of the young. Great thoughts, great purposes, attract the young as fragrant flowers do the honeybees. When our children ask us for stories, they want us to tell them of great deeds accomplished. These bring them the dreams they love.

It is great that the minds of our ablest men are being aroused to the importance of the missionary enterprise. Not to be aroused were madness, but there will ever be a place for the work of women and children in missions, both at home and on the field.

This being true, we may pause only long enough from our endeavors to give thanks to God for his guidance, for his goodness that has crowned the year, to implore his continued presence and blessing. Then, clasping hands in hail and farewell, go forth to live and work for the day when our King shall have his own; when through his reign order, abundance, beauty, peace and goodwill shall be universal, and from happy hearts and homes in every land glory and majesty, dominion and power shall be ascribed to our God and his Christ.

Ira M. Boswell, Chattanooga, Tenn.

To this end we pray "God be merciful unto us and bless us, and cause his face to shine upon us, that thy way may be known upon earth, thy saving health among all nations."

Beginnings—An Address by Miss Annie E. Davidson

As we meet in this region of historic memories and look backward at the small beginning made here three hundred years ago, by a few brave souls surrounded by countless dangers, our hearts must be filled with awe and thanksgiving to Almighty God for the mighty increase which has given us our great nation, with all that it means to every nation, tribe and tongue. But such an increase is too vast to consider in a brief address. It is ours to note briefly the beginning and increase of a few movements in which we are especially interested at this hour.

How small, apparently, was the beginning of the winning of disciples of Christ. The first two were humble fishermen, Andrew and John, won to his cause in a private conversation. What an innumerable throng has since been added to these immortal two. But between that small beginning and the present mighty host of the followers of the Lord, there have been many arrests of development, many times of apparent loss and departure from the right way of progress. When, however, his followers have wandered from the Way, the Captain of the world's salvation has always furnished guides to lead them back.

One of the many small beginnings in the progress of which we are greatly interested to-day was made in October, 1874, when the Christian Woman's Board of Missions was organized. That the organization has been blessed and greatly increased is proved by the reports given to-day, showing something of the work accomplished during the past year.

A. McLean has said of the little band which made this small beginning: "They walked by faith and not by sight. Their supreme desire was to do for Christ's sake whatever they could to have his salvation made known wherever there were souls to be won to his service. Every step of the way in which this work has gone forward has been marked by a full dependence on God for guidance, and a glad acknowledgment of him in all the fruits borne."

I have known some of the brave women who started this work; have heard from the lips of the first organizers something of the trials of those pioneers.

As they traveled over the state, trying to do much-needed missionary work among their own sisters, they went in fear and trembling, often coldly received, sometimes not received at all. It required a consecrated, courageous soul to endure all this. Our workers still have trials and problems; but we owe much to the pioneers who blazed the way. The motto which they chose, which has been our abiding motto, "The love of Christ constraineth us," expresses the motive which actuated them. We have reason to be thankful because of the wisdom of the plan of organization of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions which they inaugurated. Frances Willard said: "It is a satisfaction to do good according to a good plan." Our faithful members have proved this to be true. The bravery of those women, their devotion to God and good, the wisdom and success of their plans, have all been growing upon me ever since I was led to become a member in my early youth.

Our pioneers reasoned, "Christ said, go into all the world; therefore we will be neither home nor foreign, but a board of missions with the world for our field." They combined in one our national, state, district, auxiliary and children's organizations; each having its own special work to do, but all working together in harmony for one great end.

We should thank God that we have made a good beginning in carrying out our plans and purposes. And yet the aim of our pioneers to arouse and enlist our sisterhood in this great work has been only partially reached. Less than one-twelfth of our sisters in Christ have fellowship with us in this soul-saving, character-building work. This makes us realize that we are yet in our small beginnings.

Why are so many still unenlisted in our army? Not, we know, because the work already accomplished is unworthy. Nor because there is any reason to question the high character, efficiency and devotion of our national officers, or their wisdom in choice of fields and workers. One reason we can see is that so many are at ease in Zion because there is no persecution now to make us shrink from calling ourselves Christians. Satan has slyer, more subtle ways of tempting now. The very blessings a Christian civilization has brought us are made to tempt us to forget that the conflict between sin and righteousness is still raging, and that we must be soldiers of the cross in the battle. Good and beautiful things have been so multiplied in Christian lands, that before we are aware, all the time and money of many professing Christians are used in gaining a share of these good things.

From the daily press, that mighty agent which has been called "the nation's thrashing machine," and the platform, which helps it to thrash, we hear a continual wail about the great and growing evils; and we shudder when contemplating the tons of chaff for only a small portion of grain, which these machines bring forth. Both are doing much to greatly increase the discontent and hatred of the masses against those whom they consider to be the favored classes, and yet may thresh out no adequate remedy for the many evils bewailed. There is but one remedy—the spirit of Christ in the hearts of the people, both masses and classes; and it is those who are doing the work which our Christian missionary organizations are doing, who are striking at the root of the difficulty.

Some have argued that because of the tendency of human organizations, when they have gained power, to degenerate, that, therefore, we should not organize, but that each one in his or her own place, or each church in its own way, should work, and watch, and pray for the advancement of Christ's kingdom. This we should and must do; but in addition to such personal or local work we must also give and pray to send others to those who are suffering for the truth. Those who argue against organizations in the church for a specific purpose; object to their continued call for money; to the visits of strenuous secretaries; to the sending out of millions of pages of literature by organizations, do not seem to realize that this must be done to awaken those who sleep; that it is the lack of the Spirit of Christ which makes such strenuous work necessary to stir the church to do the work it was established to do. Those who have followed the history of our missionary organizations; who hear or read their reports; who have put their own shoulders to the wheel to help them in their noble work, can never be willing to give up the power which the united effort of thousands to forward some definite work for God can give. But while this is true, we must not forget to study the cause of past failures, and realize that such failures have always come from too great a reliance on human wisdom; that the greater our success and power, the greater is our danger. Paul warns us that we must "walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit; for the mind of the flesh is death, but the mind of the Spirit is life and peace."

As our spirituality is deepened we will have higher aspirations; will realize more fully that the number of dollars collected, the number of members enrolled, the amount of literature published and sent out, the holding of great and enthusiastic conventions, while highly important and necessary, are by no means our highest aspirations; that they are only means to an end; that the great end for which we are working is to glorify God by helping to save souls for time and eternity. But it is only in proportion as we give ourselves unreservedly to a study of his will concerning us, and submit ourselves to his leading, that he will give us a victory over self and a truer conception of the honor and privilege of being co-workers with him in helping to redeem the world. Christ said, "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men to me." It is only as we, as individuals, leaders and members of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, become Christlike in character, that we can draw others into the true fellowship of this great work, and make our latter end to greatly increase in power to bless humanity.

All these promises and warnings from God's Holy Word are known to us, but there is danger of their being buried in the halls of memory under accumulations of human wisdom. We must resurrect them often, and repeat them to one another on occasions like this "lest we forget." When our Centennial celebration occurs, God grant that all the great things attempted for him may be accomplished; and that all who are working to this end may also have growing within themselves a deeper spirituality, and still higher aspirations, and be able to go on to greater achievements.

What great achievements may be ours, what a mighty host we may be in the army of our Lord, what soul-stirring, glorious reports of victories achieved for Christ and his Church, may be reported when our second Centennial occurs, if we, and those who take our places when we cease from our labors, are true to the high ideals and Christlike aims which inspired our pioneers. We will not be on the shores of time then, but we know if we continue faithful until the end, we will rejoice with the heavenly host over the victories achieved.

"Missions, the Heart of Our Plea"*

By Ira M. Boswell

"Our plea." These words thrill us with their story. A story so marvelous, so wondrously blessed of God that it appears as a dream that comes to some weary traveler, who lays his head upon a stone, and sees a ladder let down from the heights of glory. And were it not for the present evidence of the reality of this story, we would be afraid to stir lest we should awake, and find it only a dream. But this is no dream.

There are those who object to the use of "our" in connection with "plea"; but I protest against this objection. I consider it an honor, of which I am not worthy, to be numbered among those who claim as theirs a "plea" which in less than 100 years has grown from a few brave, honest, earnest seekers after the old paths to a million and a quarter that walk therein, and which have changed the current of religious thought. A "plea" that last year brought from the hearts and pockets of its adherents more than $8,000,000; which munificent sum, I believe, will, under the blessing of God, prove to be but the shadow of better things to come. A "plea" that has built colleges and churches all over the land of its birth, and planted the Cross in the lands of dumb idols and heathen temples as rapidly as it has received the money and the men. A "plea" which, when fully understood by those who make it, will get money as fast as it can get the men, and every advocate will become a missionary. We will go everywhere preaching the gospel, and nothing will stop us but death.

If this is not "our plea," whose is it? And why are we here? If it is not "our" plea, what mean these prayers and plans? What prompts the sacrifices made by thousands who are here in person or in prayers? And why do we love to put our dollars and our souls into it?

But it is "our plea." Not arrogance nor presumption move us to claim it as "ours," but love and loyalty to God who gave it to us. It is "ours" as God is our father and Christ is our elder brother. Paul could say "my gospel," and we can say "our plea." When Christ becomes "our Christ" his plea becomes "our plea." When we lay claim to Christ's plea as "ours" we proclaim to the world that we are fellow-workers in the kingdom of truth and co-laborers with God in winning the world from sin and death to righteousness and life. It is not "our plea" unless we make it our plea, and when we become unworthy of it God will take it from us, and give it to another people. Brethren, the plea is more to me than the people who have it, and if we fail to measure up to its sublime privileges and purposes, I pray God to slay us and give it to a people, who, appreciating fully its sweetness and simplicity, its purposes and power, will with it conquer the world for Christ.

"Our plea" is Christ and him crucified for the sin of the world, and the Saviour of all who will come unto him; a Saviour whose power to save is limited only by the activity of his disciples in carrying the good news of the kingdom to the ends of the earth, and the disobedience of men in refusing the proffered salvation. "Our plea" is Jesus, our savior and king, and the New Testament our only rule of faith and practice, and this rule illustrated, beautified and emphasized by the law, the prophets and the psalms. "Our plea" is Christ's prayer that all who believe on him may be one that the world might believe that the Father has sent him. "Our plea" is to bring the church back to the only program by and through which the world can and must be won to Christ. It is ours to present Christ to the world as free from ritualism and ecclesiasticism as when he walked through the wheat fields and vineyards, the villages and towns of Palestine; and as informal as when, seated in a boat filled with fishermen and their nets, he preached to the multitudes that covered the shores of the sea of Galilee. It is ours to show sinners and saints a Saviour as forgiving as when, nailed to the cross, his brow torn by the thorns of his crown, and his cheeks stained with spittle from the lips of blood-thirsty zealots, he cried out above their taunts and jeers, so that the whole world could hear, "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do;" and as loving and approachable as when John leaned his head upon his bosom. We can hold up to the world a Saviour as full of sympathy as when he wept with Mary and Martha at the grave of Lazarus, and as full of compassion as when he looked down upon Jerusalem. We crown him as a king, who whether entering the temple amidst the waving of palm branches and shouts from the lips of the multitude of "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord," or sitting upon the curbing of a well talking to an outcast woman, is always the friend and Saviour of sinful men and women.

This plea has brought us together at this time and in this place. To-day is a holy day. We are upon the mountain height of Christian fellowship. But we do not wish to build tabernacles here. Past conquests are not sufficient to satisfy us. Missions, the heart of this great plea of ours, sends the blood through this body, filling us with consuming desire to carry the gospel to the nations of the earth. Without the spirit of missions, satisfied with past achievements, we would stagnate, and the world would witness the suicide of a Samson that should have torn away the gates of sectarianism, and overturned the temple of sin. To me missions is as big as the universe, as holy as the vesture of Jehovah, and as powerful as the throne of the Almighty. Without it the shadow of the cross would have reached no farther than Calvary, the light of the morning of the resurrection would have been lost in the bewildering gloom of the mountains of Palestine, and the man of Macedonia, his lips weary with constant calling, would have died among strangers and foreigners from the commonwealth of God, with the echoes of his own vain calls for help sounding in his disappointed ears, and the tears of a broken heart would have forever stained his hopeless eyes.

Missions with me means more than going and sending. It takes four "M's" to measure this great world. If each letter it takes to spell missions should be placed like bits of colored glass in a kaleidoscope, it would by being turned spell four other words. At the first turn it would spell motive; at the second, messenger; at the third, message, and last it would spell means. And I most solemnly plead: "What God has joined together let no one put asunder." I stand always and unwaveringly for the four "M's" of missions.

Without a messenger the message is useless. Without a message the messenger is fruitless. Without messenger and message the means are unavailable, and without motive the whole thing is impossible. Our motive must be pure and holy, and our means must be sanctified by the motive. Our messengers must like Barnabas of old, be good, full of faith and the holy spirit, and our message must be the message carried by Paul to Antioch. I have but little patience with those who have the message but refuse to send it, and I have just as little with those who would sacrifice the message for the sake of sending it. The feet of all messengers are not beautiful, but it is written: "How beautiful are the feet of them that bring glad tidings of good things."

God does not bless us for the light we have, but for the use we make of it. The light is in itself a blessing of tremendous import. Mere gratitude for it should force us to our knees in prayer and praise, and make us arise in his strength and the power of his might to do great things for him. The Jews said they had Abraham for their father, and in their selfishness they turned their blessing into a curse. We claim the pure gospel to our credit; God forbid that our blessing shall prove our undoing.

If we have no plea, if there is not something in our message peculiar to our plea, let us smash all our church and missionary machinery, become a lost brotherhood, and do our missionary work through those bodies that are larger and wealthier than we. But we have a message, a message that makes no compromise with sin, and signs no truce with sectarianism. Sin curses the world, and sectarianism blindfolds and shackles the church. Sectarianism can never win the world from sin to the Saviour, and "our plea" will receive its mortal wound whenever it submits to the kiss of sectarianism.

Sectarianism is by no means synonymous with error in doctrine. The sectarian is not the man who, though he may have some error in his message, with a heart aflame with the love of Christ, lays down his living and his life to take the proclamation of peace to a rebellious world; but he is the sectarian who, believing he has the nearest approach to a perfect conception of the plan of salvation, contemplates it with satisfaction, condemns others for their failure to preach it, excommunicates those who do preach it for using so-called unscriptural methods, and hugs it to his bosom while sinners are dying for the need of it. Anti-missions is another name for sectarianism, and the anti-missionary is not only one who opposes missions, but one who favors it but does nothing to further it.

I would not be understood as in any way undervaluing the necessity for correct doctrine. I would be afraid and ashamed not to preach what the apostles preached, and I would be startled if similar results did not follow my preaching. With Paul I thank God that I was not sent to baptize but to preach Christ; but I also thank God that as men and women were baptized as a result of Paul's preaching, so men and women have been baptized as a result of my preaching. But poorer results come from the complete failure to preach the truth than comes from the faithful preaching of the gospel, even though it be mixed with a small amount of error, and the methods of the messengers not altogther scriptural as some people read scripture.

I have heard much of our becoming a disappearing brotherhood. There is a danger, but it lies no more in the preaching of error from the pulpit than in the practice of inactivity by superorthodox or indifferent pews. I have too much confidence in our plea and in our people to believe we will disappear until all God's people are one, and the kingdoms of this world have become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ.

The plea that comes nearest the plea of God carries with it the greatest responsibilities. Such a plea is ours. God has given it to us, and with it the responsibility of giving it to the world. It is ours not to keep and fuss over, but to give and rejoice over. To us as to no other people should come the cry from heathen lands. We should, we must get there with our plea for Christ and oneness in him before contending camps have been pitched in these virgin fields. If we believe what we preach, we condemn ourselves if we fail to be pioneers in missionary efforts. We must become so saturated with our plea that mere contact with men and conditions contrary to Christ will precipitate a Philip ready to evangelize every village and city, turn every chariot into a missionary journey, and convert the streams and pools of every land into baptisteries.

We have the motive, we have the message; when will we have the messengers and the means? Not until we give ourselves unreservedly to Christ. May God hasten that day, and grant that the time will soon come when the watchman can cry out: "Break forth into joy, sing together, ye waste places of Jerusalem; for Jehovah hath comforted his people, he hath redeemed Jerusalem, Jehovah hath made bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations; and all the ends of the earth have seen the salvation of our God."

The Year on the Foreign Field

By Stephen J. Corey

A Summary of the Work of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society Read to the Convention at Norfolk.

We give praise to the Father of all nations for the greatest year in the history of the Foreign Society. At the convention last year we announced 1,116 additions to our church in foreign lands. This year we bring you the report of 1,912 additions. This is an increase over the number last year of nearly 40 per cent, and a net increase in the membership on the foreign field, after deducting all losses, of 1,700, or a gain in membership during the year of about 20 per cent. Our gain in the home land for the last year was but a little over three per cent. It is interesting to note that while we are expending in the home land about $265 a year for each convert added to the church, in the work of the Foreign Society this last year but $176 was expended for each member gained. This in spite of the fact that we have in the home-land a Christian civilization and thousands of Christian institutions to reinforce our work. This advance of the foreign work ought to give us new courage.

One of the great needs of foreign missions has been proper equipment for the work. During the last year the Society has expended $24,000 for buildings and land. This expenditure, however, by no means meets the present need of the Society in heathen lands. Many missionaries are without homes in which to live.

The work of the Foreign Society is very broad in its scope. It includes almost every possible Christian activity. In the homeland our churches are varied in their kinds of work. A pastor to-day has his hands full with calls from all directions. But in the foreign fields the work is far more diversified still. What a host of institutions, made possible by a Christian civilization, can do in America, our foreign missionary workers must do in heathen countries. They must preach the gospel, teach school, practice medicine, translate literature, conduct orphanages, relieve the famine sufferers and stay the pestilence. They must train native evangelists and helpers. They must erect buildings, superintend industries, direct sanitation and teach the people to be clean. Their work touches every side of human need. I can not report all our workers have done in their varied ministrations this last year. Let me, however, touch upon a few principal divisions of their work.

Literary Work.

Translation has a large part in missionary work. The Scriptures must be given to the people in their own tongue. Tracts, leaflets and doctrinal literature of all kinds must be circulated. Textbooks must be printed and dictionaries published. The printing press is one of God's richest agencies in converting the heathen world. Thanks to the Bible societies, our missionaries do not have to spend years in translating the Scriptures in the older mission fields of the world. However, they have much to do in creating a Christian literature. This year our missionaries have done much of this kind of work.

Miss Ada Boyd, C. W. B. M. missionary to Bilaspur, India.

At Bolengi, Africa, Dr. and Mrs. Dye have translated into the Lokongo tongue the book of James and a portion of the Gospels, besides several textbooks. The missionaries on the Congo had to first create a written language for the people, into which the Scriptures might be translated. The native tongue was but a spoken dialect. Dr. and Mrs. Dye have brought home with them a native convert, who will aid them, while home on furlough, in translating the New Testament into the native dialect.

In China, Doctor Macklin has translated into the Chinese language "The Church of Christ by a Layman" and a work on hygiene and the British Constitution, as recreation, besides treating about 15,000 patients, and doing a great deal of evangelistic work.

In Japan, our missionaries publish a monthly paper and Doctor Guy has translated "The Church of Christ by a Layman," besides considerable translation for the Bible College.

The press at Vigan, Philippine Islands, has turned out over 1,000,000 pages of printed matter. Hermon P. Williams has has turned out over 1,000,000 pages of native language and several books for the school. Brother Hanna, at Laoag, has translated the Pentateuch into the Ilacano language. Our mission press at Vigan prints two papers, one for the native and one for the English speaking constituency.

On our press at Jubbulpore, India, our brethren print a paper of twelve pages in the Hindi language, which is read by Christians of every mission in India speaking the Hindi language. It contains the Sunday-school lessons, prayer meeting and C. E. topics. Sunday-school supplies are also printed and books are being translated and printed for the Bible College. G. L. Wharton's tract on tithing has gone all over India.

Mrs. M. R. Ford, C. W. B. M. missionary to Bayamon, Porto Rico.

Educational work is absolutely necessary in the foreign work. The young must be taught and trained. A native ministry must be educated and equipped. Every lesson taught is made an entering wedge for the gospel. Education is not carried on as an end in itself, it is a stepping stone to Christ. There has never been such an opportunity for educational work as now. With the introduction of western learning in Japan and China and the Philippines comes the call for mission schools. The schools conducted by the missionaries in China are overwhelmed with applications for admission. The young people trained and christianized in the mission schools are in urgent demand for teachers and government aids. The Foreign Society has forty-nine schools and colleges in foreign lands. In these schools are 3,356 pupils. This is a gain over last year of 850. Of these 108 are studying for the ministry, a far larger portion according to the membership of the churches than are studying for the ministry in the homeland. The native ministry is the hope of foreign missions. Twenty young men are studying for the ministry in the Bible College at Jubbulpore, India, thirty at Bolengi, Africa, about thirty in the Philippines and nineteen at the Drake Bible College, Tokyo, Japan. There are also thirteen young women in the Girls' College, Tokyo, being trained as Bible women and evangelists.

Last year we reported that a union had been formed in Nankin, China, between our college there and the Presbyterian College. That union has been a success. The college has been conducted with the utmost degree of Christian unity and cooperation this year and now negotiations are under way for the union of the Methodist College with the other two. If the union is perfected the outcome will be a strong Christian university instead of three small colleges. This union will in no way affect the teaching or liberty of the teachers in the school. The Bible will be taught by our men as conscience dictates.

The Medical Work.

No one can measure the value of our medical work. One has rightly said that medical missions are the key that unlocks the door of heathenism. Our medical missionaries last year treated about 90,000 patients; all of these received not only ministration for the body, but also spiritual instruction. They go back to their homes and tell the good news of Jesus and his love. Many are converted. The healing of the helpless sick breaks down the barrier of prejudice and superstition and opens the way for the preaching of the gospel. In China our missionaries have aided much in the great famine this year. In Harda, India, the dread bubonic plague has been raging. Four-fifths of the population of the city fled. Doctor Drummond stayed fearlessly at his post and ministered to the sick and dying.

Miss Ella Maddock, C. W. B. M. missionary to Deoghur, India.

The Evangelistic Work.

This is the heart of all mission work. The conversion of the people through the preaching of the gospel is the end towards which all the work moves. This has been a great year for evangelistic conquest. The work in the Philippines has been the most fruitful. Our missionaries there report 943 added to the churches. This is an increase of 75 per cent in one year. Five American missionaries and their helpers have brought about the results. This is the nick of time in the Philippines. Wherever the evangelists go, there are converts. The land is a great unoccupied field. Our workers are distracted with the appeals for preaching. The missionaries have been at work in this field but seven years. We have now 2,500 members. We have seventy-five preaching brethren, who support themselves in other occupations. Of these, thirty-five have pledged themselves to preach once each Sunday and to devote two weeks to mission work each year.

At the convention last year we reported 127 members in the little church at Bolengi, Africa. During the year they have 180 additions, making the membership 302.

This is wonderful work. The little church supports twenty-two native evangelists. They go far and wide preaching the word. They are gone sometimes for three months and return with a procession of natives who have heard the word and come to Bolengi for perfect instruction. Besides the twenty-two evangelists supported by the church there are ten more ready and waiting for some one to support them and send them forth. The largest Endeavor Society in our brotherhood is at Bolengi. It has 280 members.

Our Japan mission reports 247 conversions for the year. This is a good record for the Sunrise Kingdom. Doctor Guy, of Tokyo, has recently made an evangelistic tour of the colleges of the empire. Everywhere he had great crowds and deep interest. The students of Japan are alert and anxious to hear. Many of them are accepting Christ.

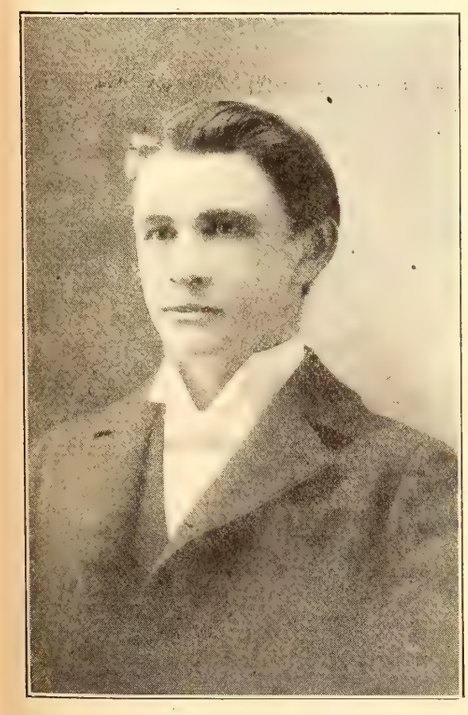
The missions in China and India each report about 100 conversions. This is a smaller number, but the results in these lands can not be measured by numbers. It is a time of seed sowing and preparation. A large harvest will be reaped in due time. China is passing through a great educational and governmental revolution. The horizon looks bright for a great missionary conquest in the near future. There are unmistakable signs of a great revival in India. These giants of the Orient are just awakening from their long slumber. It is a strategic hour for evangelistic undertakings. Our missionaries do not wait for the people to come to them; they go to the people. They cover vast territories in a year. Frank Garrett of Nankin, China, has had personal supervision of nineteen outstations besides his busy work in the Nankin during the year. He has also made long itineraries and preached in many villages. Brother Stubbins, of Hatta, India, has preached in 330 villages during the year.

The Losses from the Ranks.

Our hearts have been saddened by the deaths and necessary returns of missionaries this year. Two missionaries have returned from Cuba during the year; one with broken health. Brother Arnold returned from China and passed away during the year. Professor Paul and his wife and Mr. and Mrs. Paul Wakefield have returned from China because of broken health. E. S. Stevens and wife have returned from Japan, he in a critical physical condition. Mrs. Guy has also been obliged to return from Japan on account of severe and continued illness. These workers hope to return. G. L. Wharton, our veteran missionary, died in India during the year. Brother and Sister Gordon have returned from India, she with broken health. In Africa, Miss Ewing died of the fever. This has been a sad year for the workers. None are sadder than those whose failing health has compelled them to return.

Prayer for the Work.

The campaign most needed is a campaign of prayer. The crying need for workers can only be answered in that way. Only by prayers can the hands of the workers be strengthened and the front of heathenism be broken. We have great need of money and of men. But this need will never be satisfied until it is satisfied by prayer. We must "pray the Lord of the harvest to thrust forth reapers into his harvest." We must pray the Lord to thrust forth our own children into the harvest. Prayer of this kind over the cradles of our babies will mean victory for the coming generations. The missionaries at the front should have our constant prayers. Their names and the names of the stations where they work should become household terms with us. In their loneliness and isolation they look to us for help. They are our brethren, we sent them forth. If our petitions ascend not to the Throne of Grace for them we are unworthy of them. Let us pray for them and the native church and let us pray that "the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ."

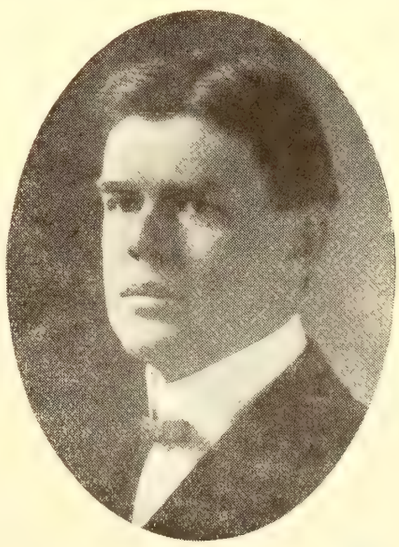


The Appeal of the Field.

The anxious call for more workers comes loud and clear. China asks for twenty-two new missionaries. Africa calls for men to equip a new station in a vast field. From every land comes the Macedonian appeal. The doors in all lands are flung wide. Our missionaries there propose to advance into the land and possess it and they want more men to help them. Idolatry is disintegrating, the heathen nations are advancing, and they hunger for the truth. We have the truth and woe be unto us if we take it not to them.

The Minor Prophets of Modern Missions*

By C. T. Paul



An aspect of the Bible now strongly impressing the Christian consciousness is its supremacy as the Book of the Child. Modern psychology and pedagogy, ethics and sociology, comparative religion and theology alike are emphasizing its unique treatment of the initial and formative periods of human life. In the light of this emphasis childhood has acquired, for both science and religion, values which for centuries in the history of the Church remained unrecognized. Now, by the summons of the Eternal Spirit of Truth and Progress, the Church is called to sit down with the children and learn new lessons from the Sacred Word. Wherever the Bible has gone it has cast a halo about little heads. It has kindled the purest love-lights that ever shone from parents' faces, and inspired the sweetest lullabies ever crooned by mothers' lips, because it has invested childhood with meanings that are "born not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." Across its pages, even those that are dark with the sad true story of human sin, breathes the hope and innocence of tender years. Across the centuries, in the procession of divine purpose, is heard the tramp of little feet. In the genealogies and histories, the laws and prophecies, the poems and proverbs of the Old Testament —in the midst of those sublime visions that come to seer and psalmist of the onward march and ultimate sovereignty of Truth in this world—there stands always the image of a child.

David, singing of the excellencies of the Lord's name in all the earth, of his glory enthroned above the heavens, of his enemies silenced and overthrown, connects this universality, exaltation and triumph of the Divine One with the ministry of children, exclaiming: "Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings thou hast established strength." Here is Isaiah portraying the golden age of righteousness and peace under Messiah's sway, when "the wolf shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid." As the prophet visions the time when all that is savage, destructive and unloving shall have been subdued, and the earth filled with the knowledge of the Lord, he sees the reins of government in little hands—"A little child shall lead them." Take the child out of the Old Testament and you make it an inhuman as well as incomprehensible book. You have broken the chain of revelation. If you would understand the unfolding of the Divine plan you must bend over the floating cradle of Moses in Egypt; you must muse upon the hills with boys like Jacob and Isaac and Joseph and Benjamin and David; you must remember that once at dead of night, when other ears were dull, the youthful Samuel heard God's voice and received the prophetic call.

W. M. Forrest, Bible chair instructor, Charlottesville, Va., under direction of C. W. B. M.

Throughout the Old Testament God sets his seal on the value of child-life in the place assigned to it in those great movements that prepared the way for the coming of Christ. And in the New Testament its place is more exalted still. What shall

Missionary Tour Through the Heart of Africa

When we arrived at the village of Ikenge they were the losing side, and consequently they did not wish to give up the fight. I harangued them on the evils of fighting, and said that if they did not stop "Bula Matadi" (the state) would punish them, and finally we got them to agree that if the Bombenga people would give up the man who had caused all the trouble they would quit. We got the agreement of the Bombenga envoys, and after arranging for two of our evangelist-porters to stop over and see that the terms were lived up to, and after preaching to a large crowd by moonlight we went to sleep without fear or anxiety. That day many of the Ikenge people ate their first warm meal for many days. They had lived in the swamps and in hiding, and our presence gave them an opportunity for cooking and sleeping in peace. I enclose a print of one of the little fireside groups that night.

From Ikenge we bore away to the left, east by north, to the next village of Bokenge, which we reached at about 9 a. m. and found a very timid people, who ran away at our approach. After the singing of a hymn they gathered by ones and twos until we had an audience of 60. The evangelists gave their bright, pointed talks and I followed. After the addresses I called the elders of the village and suggested that they make a law that no more "bange" should be grown or smoked. We told a semi-civilized (an old state workman) native of the village that if he did not see that the people did away with the stuff the state would give him "what for." As we were leaving the village we found an enormous calabash used for smoking the vile stuff, and lo and behold! it belonged to the wife of the said ex-workman, who was a full-fledged Catholic, beads and all! We pre-empted the calabash and hope to show it to audiences at home.

We left Bokenge and went on more to the east to Bombembe, where we arrived at noon and preached to large audiences. Everywhere the people were surprised to hear of a God who loved them and who offered them "life," and had given his own son as their Savior. "Come and tell us more about this salvation, white man, for we have never heard of it before."

From Bombembe two roads go to Bokatola, the residence of the poor lone state officer. He dared not show his head in the district where we had been. We came to this place by a roundabout path which showed us his entire plantation. What had formerly been an enormous and populous country has been bled by them, and they are planting rubber, which is now from 15 inches to three feet tall, to pay for the occupancy of the country. He was all alone up in the interior on a high plateau. His station (of which I enclose a print) is well-developed, and M. Blockmans, the resident officer, is clearing a large new plantation near by. He has but ten soldiers with him, and is not certain of his position. He asked for a few shotgun cartridges from me and wished me to stay over night, but I refused, giving as an excuse that I must reach the neighboring native village of Boulama (which means "at one side"; and we surely thought it was at one side, for we were pretty tired when we reached there after two hours slipping off from the log path; but we felt fully repaid by the hearty reception we received). Crowds gathered that night, and tired and sleepy though we were, we preached to them till late. "Oh, when will you come here and settle and teach us this salvation?" Every one of my men were living examples of the religion we taught. So in all these towns they asked us to only "come again"; or, better, "come and live with us and teach us the 'way of salvation.'"

Next morning, with a guide to go before, we started down toward Longa, to the east and south of Bokatola. Here we found all the women wearing a large pompon belt, broad behind and tied with strings in front. Some were very pretty, but it was a very meager article of apparel. We arrived at Bowele, a village hidden away from the path, and without a guide we should never have found it. The entire estimated population was possibly 500, but the people were so timid that we had not over a score for our audience. We went on to the next village, to a large and populous town called Bwalangombe, which was also hidden away, but much larger than that we had left. We arrived there about noon, and though they were timid at first they received us with courtesy and soon gathered a large crowd. We preached here as usual and pushed on to reach two more villages that day. As we went down into the intervening forest and swamp we heard the beating of drums and paused to make out what they were telegraphing about; but they were simply calling all the forest tribes of Bacwa to a big dance at Bokaca, or Bokakia, as the big town is called. We hastened on lest we should be apprehended and they be scared and run away. We came in on them after about three hours' marching, and found as fine a village as we saw anywhere. They had fled at the first signs of a caravan, all but the village clown, who very industriously swept the plaza. We threw ourselves under the shade of the trees, and while one of the boys mended my torn canvas traveling shoe, we called to them and sang hymns till we got quite a crowd. One of the evangelists, who had proved himself the most adaptable and versatile, got up and addressed them in their own language, which we all spoke. This is quite an exception, for all the state men and traders and soldiers use the mongrel dialect called the "commercial language." He used the conversation of Christ and the Syrophoenecian woman, and very cleverly adapted it to them, calling her a Bacwa. It was splendid and called forth surprised exclamations from them. The next man, Njoji, one of the brightest of all Bolenge's evangelists, asked them if they knew what it was the "Bsukulu" (the owl) says? "It says," he declared, "'Josol ecwelo' (seek the path), and that is the very message we bring to you." "That is true," they all declared. "The owl teaches us the way of wisdom. We had better listen to this teaching." Crowds had been gathering by this time, and one of the largest audiences we had on the journey listened with rapt attention to the eloquent preacher declaring the "way of life." After him I arose and recalled to them many bits of knowledge of a Supreme Being they had and of his laws which they knew, though they never held them any more in awe. They listened attentively, and interrupted frequently with their exclamations of agreement or surprise. After I had closed my remarks they crowded around and begged me to remain. "Why will not a teacher come to teach us as well? We never thought that this message would be for us outcasts." Our evangelists were very eager to return there again for a more permanent work. The village has a population of at least 3,000 people. These are the Bacwa, called by the natives "Balumbe" as well, and are famed for everything bad, and degraded by their fellows to a very ignominious position. I took a picture of a group of them for your edification.

SENSE ABOUT FOOD

Facts About Food Worth Knowing.

It is a serious question sometimes to know just what to eat when a person's stomach is out of order and most foods cause trouble.

Grape-Nuts food can be taken at any time with the certainty that it will digest. Actual experience of people is valuable to any one interested in foods.

A Terre Haute woman writes: "I had suffered with indigestion for about four years, ever since an attack of typhoid fever, and at times could eat nothing but the very lightest food, and then suffer such agony with my stomach I would wish I never had to eat anything. I was urged to try Grape-Nuts and since using it I do not have to starve myself any more, but I can eat it at any time and feel nourished and satisfied, dyspepsia is a thing of the past, and I am now strong and well.

"My husband also had an experience with Grape-Nuts. He was very weak and sickly in the spring. Could not attend to his work. He was put under the doctor's care but medicine did not seem to do him any good until he began to leave off ordinary food and use Grape-Nuts. It was positively surprising to see the change in him. He grew better right off, and naturally he has none but words of praise for Grape-Nuts.

"Our boy thinks he cannot eat a meal without Grape-Nuts, and he learns so fast at school that his teacher and other scholars comment on it. I am satisfied that it is because of the great nourishing elements in Grape-Nuts." "There's a Reason."

It contains the phosphate of potash from wheat and barley which combines with albumen to make the gray matter to daily refill the brain and nerve centres.

It is a pity that people do not know what to feed their children. There are many mothers who give their youngsters almost any kind of food and when they become sick begin to pour the medicine down them. The real way is to stick to proper food and be healthy and get along without medicine and expense.

As Seen From the Dome By F. D. Power

The thirtieth anniversary meeting of the Christian Missionary Society of Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia convened in Baltimore October 2-4, at the Christian Temple. It was a good meeting, spiritual, harmonious, hopeful and practical. Peter Ainslie presided. The glorious dedicatory services, with their atmosphere of joy and sacrifice, hallowed the house, and the convention at once was on the mountain top. "Preachers' Day" was very profitable with its papers and discussions on prayer, the Holy Spirit, the Word and missions. Some of the addresses were of an unusually high order, and all were most creditable. One of the choice events of the day was the appearance of a committee from the Baptist Association of Maryland, consisting of Drs. Curtis Lee Law, Charles H. Dodd and H. A. Griesemer, bearing greetings and presenting a resolution of their last annual meeting, as follows:

"Whereas, The Baptists and Disciples of Christ in Maryland are so closely related in matters of faith and polity; and

"Whereas, Our hearts have been made tender by the fraternal and felicitous addresses of this afternoon; be it

"Resolved, That the president of this association be authorized to appoint three fraternal delegates to convey to the next annual convention of the Disciples of Christ in Maryland our affectionate greetings.

"Resolved, second, That these fraternal delegates be requested to assure our sister denomination that in our opinion the time has come for larger co-operation between the denominations which are so closely allied in things fundamental."

The convention took the following action in response:

"Whereas, It has been the policy of the body of believers with which this convention is identified from the beginning to encourage and foster the spirit of Christian union among the followers of our Lord; and

"Whereas, Our brethren, the Baptists, have authorized the appointment of a committee to convey to us the fraternal greetings of the Maryland Baptist Union Association and to assure us that in the opinion of said association the time has come for larger co-operation between these two great bodies so closely allied in things fundamental, and which are so closely related in matters of faith and polity; therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the Christian Missionary Society of Maryland, Delaware and District of Columbia most heartily welcome and thoroughly appreciate this action on the part of our sister church, and would recommend the appointment of three fraternal delegates to inform the Baptists in their next association that we would recommend that a joint committee of five be appointed by each convention for the purpose of considering plans for a more practical union than now exists, and that we encourage the co-operation of the two bodies in church and charitable work wherever and whenever they may find it possible to be mutually helpful."

It may be proper for me to say here that the Baptist Congress meets in Baltimore November 12-14, and I have been asked to address them on "The Desirability of Union Between the Baptists and Disciples." So the courtship goes on. Who shall pop the question?

Our convention reports were encouraging. Twelve missionaries were aided during the year and all bills paid. Thirty-three churches reported 5,388 members, 710 additions, $5,008 given for missions, and a grand total of $70,381 raised for all purposes. Thirty-four Sunday-schools have enrolled 4,740 and report 267 conversions, and made a contribution of $1,684.65 for missionary purposes and for all uses $6,438.56. H Street, Washington, received the banner. The woman's session was full of interest and among the speakers was William Forrest. Other visitors on the program who gave great assistance were H. A. Denton, Oliver W. Stewart, W. H. Anderson and Charles H. Dodd. The Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor sessions were among the best we ever had and this best of conventions of the brotherhood. The plans for the coming year all mean enlargement. The next convention will be held with the Thirty-fourth Street Church, Washington. This convention is the outgrowth of the meeting called thirty years ago by the Vermont Avenue Church, at which eighteen delegates were enrolled and $150 raised. Jacob Thomas and F. D. Power were the only ones present who were at the initial meeting.

Some other history has been making in these parts. The First Church, Philadelphia, has just celebrated its seventy-fifth anniversary. C. Q. Wright, A. B. Philputt, H. L. Willett, C. H. Bond, Samuel Troth, G. P. Rutledge, L. G. Batman and others were on the program from 6th to 13th. This church has a noble history. Beginning in 1832, a handful met in an old session room of an abandoned Presbyterian church in Bank street. Mr. Campbell preached in the city the following year, and "trespassed upon their patience three hours and twenty minutes." David S. Burnet held a meeting in Bank street. William Rowzee came from Kentucky in 1836. In 1842 Walter Scott held them a meeting, and later Benjamin Franklin was for a time their pastor. James Challen, Dr. Barclay, Dr. Faurot, O. A. Bartholomew, David Walk, W. L. Hayden, C. C. Foote, C. Q. Wright, H. S. Lobinger, A. B. Philputt and R. G. Frank are some of the names associated with the pulpit. L. G. Batman is their present able and efficient leader. It has always been a strong church, having many stable and devoted people in its membership. Since my pastorate began I have had a very close and happy fellowship with these brethren. There are none better. We are all glad of their long life and usefulness and trust they have a future as bright as the past has been honorable and glorious.

South of us lies Richmond on the James. We hear that splendid organization, known familiarly as "Seventh Street," is soon to have a change. The gifted J. J. Haley leaves them January 1 for California. He has been their pastor for three years. He is universally esteemed and regarded as one of the strong men of the Richmond pulpit. His predecessors have been such men as Morgan, Hall, Cave, Tyler, Hopson and others that have made "Seventh Street" illustrious. Mrs. Haley is a sister of Champ Clark, so well known in Missouri, and now a national figure. No one has stood higher in our ministry in the East than Mr. Haley, and it is greatly to be regretted that he is so soon to remove from our midst. The removal of Bates and Haley leaves two of our most important churches vacant, but Hiram College and the Pacific coast are the gainers.

All is quiet along the banks of the Potomac. Our people are well represented at Norfolk. Many delegates passing through have cheered us by their greetings. Eleven persons have been added to the Vermont fellowship the past two Sundays. The government at Washington still lives and the bears live also.

OLD SOAKERS

Get Saturated With Caffeine.

When a person has used coffee for a number of years and gradually declined in health, it is time the coffee should be left off in order to see whether or not that has been the cause of the trouble.

A lady in Huntsville, Ala., says she used coffee for about 40 years, and for the past 20 years has had severe stomach trouble. "I have been treated by many physicians but all in vain. Everything failed to give relief. Was prostrated for some time, and came near dying. When I recovered sufficiently to partake of food and drink I tried coffee again and it soured on my stomach.

"I finally concluded that coffee was the cause of my troubles and stopped using it. I tried tea in its place and then milk but neither agreed with me; then I commenced using Postum, had it properly made and it was very pleasing to the taste.

"I have now used it four months, and my health is so greatly improved that I can eat almost anything I want and can sleep well, whereas, before, I suffered for years with insomnia.

"I have found the cause of my troubles and a way to get rid of them. You can depend upon it I appreciate Postum." "There's a Reason." Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Our Budget

—The convention has closed.

—But its spirit will abide.

—There was no "scrap."

—There was serious discussion.

—But it was not about some things that one of our papers has recently agitated.

—That paper was represented by several of its staff, but their voices were not heard in this convocation of the brotherhood.

—The federation and "tainted money" questions were acted on in the only way open to a great brotherhood facing great opportunities. We publish in this issue a first installment of convention reports, addresses, etc. Our next issue we hope to make a special illustrated convention report number.

Comparative statement for second week of October, 1906, with second week of October, 1907.

Loss	$ 136.83	Loss	$ 162.74	Loss	6

It will be noticed that the Board of Church Extension has fallen far behind in its receipts compared with this time last year, and it is hoped that churches and individuals that have not sent their offerings will do so at once by remitting to G. W. Muckley, corresponding secretary, 600 Waterworks building., Kansas City, Mo.

During the fourteen months of his ministry 107 were added to the church, and about $2,000 raised for an addition to the building. The congregation is left in peace and harmony. Brother MacFarlane goes to help H. E. Wilhite in his work.

Three Generations of Healthy Babies

Have been successfully raised on Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk; more each year than on all so-called "infant foods" combined. Thousands of unsolicited testimonials received annually from physicians and grateful parents testify to the merits of Eagle Brand.

—As a result of a meeting held by Lee Tinsley, at the Kansas Christian Church, Bartholomew county, Indiana, arrangements are being made for a co-operation with other churches in the county so that a preacher can live in their midst. There is a great opportunity to build up a strong country church.

THE CHILDREN OF OUR MISSIONARIES

must be cared for and educated in America. The Foreign Christian Missionary Society has arranged for the G. L. Wharton Memorial Home and scholarship at Hiram, O.

Other missionary societies have such homes. $25,000 is needed.

A great opportunity to put money into a permanent investment in aid of missions and in the care and education of worthy children.

Individuals, churches, Sunday-schools and societies are asked to help. Address Wharton Memorial Home, Hiram, O.

—The brethren at North Yakima, Wash., are making a preliminary canvass to determine whether they are able to build the church which the committee has planned. It certainly will be a hand some one if the funds can be provided, but not more handsome than the merits of the case deserve. Morton L. Rose is the minister.

—October 6 was a day of great rejoicing for the church at Hartford, Mich. On that day the last $425 of indebtedness was paid, and a mortgage of almost twenty years' standing was burned. The church has passed through many hardships but is to-day in good condition and expecting to go forward to larger things.

—Mart Gary Smith has been visiting Yukon, Okla., where he found the church ready to receive a minister, and he will place a man there for half time. He reports the work at Ardmore, under Brother Tremble, as succeeding admirably. This city should have a $25,000 building, and this is one of the aims of those who are planning for the work.

—With one exception J. W. Webb has preached longer in California and Oregon than any other Christian preacher. He is secretary of the Stainsland county board of trade at Modesto, Cal. In sending his subscription for another year he says: "The Christian-Evangelist is such a sweet spirited, spiritual, able, sound and newsy paper that I can not well do without it."

—Clarence D. Mitchell, of Lima, O., and E. E. Bilby, of Frankton, Ind., are assisting J. K. Ballou in a meeting with our church at Sioux City, Ia. A new building in a new location has been recently erected and the policy is one of enlargement. Foundation work is necessary and it is good to know that more additions than were expected was the result of the first week's effort.

—L. E. Chase began his second year's work with the congregation at LeRoy, Ill., October 6, with an all-day service. The reports of the various auxiliaries indicate that last year was the best in the history of the church. More money was given for local expenses and for missions than ever before. During the year fifty were added to the church. There was a net gain of thirty-seven, the present membership being 238.

—L. L. Carpenter, of Wabash, Ind., will dedicate the new house of worship at Wauseon, O., on October 27. Fifty years ago Brother Carpenter organized the church at this place. He preached the first sermon in their old house, and a few months ago preached the last one in it. It is intended to make the occasion of the dedication a great reunion of the Disciples of Northern Ohio. Charles R. Oakley is pastor.

—Louis S. Cupp began his third year with the Hyde Park Church, Kansas City, October 13. In two years 280 have been added to the church, 145 of these at regular services, $2,000 paid on various debts, and all current expenses paid to date. They are expecting to pay off their church extension loan of $4,000 by January 1. Brother Cupp is now preaching a series of expository sermons on the Book of Romans, in which there has been unusual interest.

—James Sharratt, who has just effected an organization at Ashdown, Ark., reports that the brethren there need a good preacher, and those interested may address S. A. Maddox. Brother Sharratt has since been in a short meeting at Rock Valley school house, and, with F. O. McColley, singing evangelist of Latah, Wash., commences in New Mexico with a large tent meeting for the brethren at Lordsburg.

—W. G. Surber, who recently removed to Oklahoma, was much impressed by the convention for the reorganization of the work. He was appointed office secretary with duties not clearly defined, but in a general way he is to represent both districts in aiding to locate preachers, gather statistics of the churches, Bible schools and Christian Endeavor Societies, and to assist in cementing the union of the work.

—Charles E. Smith, who has been with the church at Altoona, Pa., for four months, finds the work very agreeable. A ten-year-old debt has been harassing this congregation, but recently over $800 of the indebtedness has been paid which has had the effect of substituting enthusiasm where there was discouragement. Two young men from this congregation are to attend Bethany College to prepare for the ministry.

—Arthur W. Jones, of Oak Cliff, Tex., has done good work at Douglas, Ariz., in a meeting just held. The pastor's salary was increased and a considerable amount raised for expenses and church debt. N. B. Carpenter is the pastor and is devoted to the work as well as very efficient. The membership under him has been doubled in five months and the future of the cause there seems full of promise.

—Our church at Windsor, Mo., is looking forward to a great meeting to begin about December 1, with J. V. Coombs and Professor Dawdy and wife. W. A. Morrison has, in the meantime, cancelled all engagements for meetings, in order to aid the church in making preparation. The Sunday-school contest with the school at Clinton is progressing finely. Much enthusiasm is being awakened.

AT THE FIRST SIGN

Of Baby's Torturing, Disfiguring Humor Use Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment.

Every child born into the world with an inherited tendency to torturing, disfiguring humors of the skin and scalp becomes an object of the most tender solicitude, not only because of its suffering, but because of the dreadful fear that the disfiguration is to be lifelong and mar its future happiness and prosperity. Hence it becomes the duty of mothers of such afflicted children to acquaint themselves with the best, the purest, and most effective treatment available, viz.: warm baths with Cuticura Soap, and gentle anointings with Cuticura Ointment, the great Skin Cure. Cures made in childhood are in most cases speedy, permanent, and economical.

—Alva W. Taylor has entered upon his sixth year at Eureka, Ill. During his pastorate there 445 have united with the church—about half of them conversions and reclamations. The cause of missions and benevolence was given $13,000, and for all purposes, including the building fund, about $32,000 was raised. Brother Taylor never had larger audiences and the church is now giving for missions more than for all else. This is a fine record, but what we expect of such a consecrated pastor.

—On account of ill health, S. W. Crutcher has resigned at Braymer and Cowgill, Mo., to take effect November 1. He has been actively in the work of the ministry for forty-five years, and has never been out of work for more than a few weeks at a time. He must now have absolute rest, and goes to Pine Bluff, Ark., where his three sons live. His sixty-ninth birthday will be in December. We regret that Brother Crutcher has broken down, and trust that he may speedily be restored to his wonted health.

—The church at Ashland, Ky., of which William Dunn Ryan is pastor, is rejoicing in constant growth, and the provision of larger quarters seems an immediate necessity. A corner lot 100x100 feet, which is regarded as the best in the city, has just been purchased and upon it will be erected, in the near future, a commodious house of worship. This congregation is just completing a beautiful nine-room parsonage with all modern equipments.

—At Mattoon, Ill., our congregation has held a jubilee service to celebrate its freedom from debt, and in honor of the many things accomplished during the pastorate of David N. Wetzel. At the evening service the mortgage which has been against the church property ever since it was constructed, was burned. When Brother Wetzel took the charge in April, 1902, there was $2,000 still unpaid. Many improvements have been made on the property during his pastorate.

—October 6 was a great day for the church at Fitzgerald, Ga., when their new house of worship was dedicated by T. E. Cramblet assisted by the pastor, N. G. Buckley. More than double the amount of money asked for was raised, leaving a property worth $20,000 almost free of debt. It has been just two and one-half years since this church was organized by Brother Buckley, who is leaving Fitzgerald to take work in the West. Brother Maldoon, a graduate of Bethany, will take charge at Fitzgerald.

—William Burleigh began his second year's work with the church at Portsmouth, Va., on October 6. The event was celebrated by worshiping in the new chapel, which has just been erected on the lot recently purchased. The Portsmouth mission is now comfortably housed in a most desirable location, and faces the future with bright prospects of becoming a permanent and flourishing congregation—another monument to the wisdom and value of state and home missions. They are soon to begin a series of special meetings, led by Charles E. Elmore, of Crewe, Va.

—The Board of Church Extension closed its annual report with a gain of twenty-seven in the number of contributing churches and $375 in amounts contributed over last year. This is a victory in view of the fact that the San Francisco reconstruction offering was made in July. It is hoped that the churches will send their church extension offerings in October because the board publishes October receipts in the annual report. All remittances should be made to G. W. Muckley, corresponding secretary, 600 Waterworks building, Kansas City, Mo.

—N. M. Field, in writing from Spokane, Wash., says: "The fall work of the Dean Avenue Church has begun in all departments, with a greater increase in attendance and interest than at any time in the history of the church. The building is wearing a new dress of paint on the outside, as well as many improvements on the inside. The chorus platform is to be made larger, with elevated seats, to accommodate the large choir which is the pride of the church. J. H. Allen is doing a splendid work, having accessions at almost every Sunday service."

—M. M. Davis, pastor of the Central Church, Dallas, Texas, celebrated his seventeenth anniversary on October 6. During the year he has preached 123 sermons and had 179 additions. These figures, added to those of the preceding sixteen years, give grand totals of 2,335 sermons and 3,322 additions. The church raised over $8,000 during the year. Of this amount nearly $5,300 was for current expenses and $2,752.79 was given to missions, education and benevolences. When Brother Davis began his ministry in Dallas we had but one congregation there. Now we have seven.

—E. P. Wise, whose excellent address to the Ohio convention was recently printed in our columns, has been making a special effort in the direction of spiritual and social development of his congregation. There have been over 170 additions to his church within the past eighteen months and a series of studies from I Thessalonians he finds is increasing the interest and attendance at the midweek service. The Sunday meetings are growing, the Bible school is increasing steadily and Brother Wise rejoices at the manifest deepening of the spiritual life.

—At a public reception tendered Charles E. Freeman and family, who have just moved to Cherokee, Ia., to take the work of that church, about 300 were present. A musical and literary program was rendered and the ministers of the city and superintendent of schools made appreciated addresses of welcome. Cherokee is Brother Freeman's boyhood home and many old acquaintances joined with the church in extending him and his family a cordial welcome. The work is prospering in every department and a new building is being seriously talked.

—H. O. Pritchard, of the First Christian Church, Shelbyville, Ind., has resigned his work there to accept a call to the pastorate of the Cotner University Church, Lincoln, Neb. Brother Pritchard has been a minister of the church at Shelbyville for four years, and during that time the church has enjoyed a period of growth along all lines. About 350 have been added to the church, $4,000 has been paid on the church debt and a large part of the remainder provided for, $1,000 expended on improvements, and the missionary offerings more than doubled. The church has a new $25,000 building and everything is in shape for a great work by the next minister.

—"God has blessed our united efforts beyond measure. Our property has been increased in value thousands of dollars, and a multitude have been added to the Lord. Here and there all over the land are young men and women who thank God for life and joy begun in our midst. God has given us mighty opportunities and heavy responsibilities and great joys in the throngs of young people that have come to us.' This is from a pastoral letter to his congregation at Salina, Kan., written by David H. Shields, who has had ten years of service with our church there. He has accomplished a great work both for our congregation and his town, for Brother Shields is also the mayor of the city.

—There has recently been a visit of Mormon leaders to El Paso, Ill. Rufus A. Finnell took occasion to speak upon Mormonism from the pulpit and five of the leaders were present to hear him. They all left town after stating that the Christian preacher had prejudiced the people so against them that they could find no sale for their books nor gain entrance to homes. Brother Finnell will go to Sandoval for a meeting in November. Rome G. Jones ministers there. Brother Finnell has been lecturing at Wapello to secure funds for the education of a young Japanese boy for the ministry. W. E. Spicer's church at Pittsfield furnished the scholarship.

—September 29 marked the close of the second year's pastorate of John Ray Ewers with the church at Youngstown, Ohio. During the past year 105 united with the church, 73 by primary obedience. About $7,000 has been raised. The church debt of $2,000 has been paid. The C. W. B. M. has grown from sixty to ninety-one, the Men's club from twenty-one to seventy-two and the Young People's mission has almost doubled. The building has been extensively repaired, individual communion set installed, new range and set of dishes purchased. A choir of fifty voices has been maintained and large audiences have attended all services. Ninety per cent of the 850 members contribute to the current expenses. The pastor always holds his own meetings. This church has a surplus in its treasury.

—Isaac S. Bussing surprised his congregation at Poestenskill, N. Y., by tendering his resignation to take effect at the end of the current year, or sooner if he be called to another field. He has been pastor there for over four years and the clerk of the church, Lucian Wager, reports that he has greatly endeared himself, both to the members and to the community. During his pastorate a debt of $2,500 has been cancelled and money raised for current expenses and missions. He has been the leading worker in the law and order and temperance movements, a faithful pastor and an acceptable preacher. Brother Wager writes on behalf of the church to express its hearty commendation of Brother Bussing, and the regret that he is to leave Poestenskill.

Hamlin-Daugherty Meeting, Winfield, Kansas.

Winfield is a county seat town of more than 8,000 population. It is in one of the richest agricultural counties in the state of Kansas. A Christian Church was organized here in 1880. Through almost unspeakable struggles and painful trials, during these years, it has managed to live. The frequent change of pastors has encouraged the struggles rather than eliminated them. December 1, 1903, Albert Nichols became the minister. There were then 159 names on the church roll. At the first service of the new pastor, fifty-eight members were present. At once plans were laid for a vigorous and systematic campaign for Christ in the town, and the reviving of the forces. The church commenced growing at once. Nearly $1,200 was spent on improvements on the church building. The discouraged began to return, and the careless to renew their fellowship. The Northcutt-Bently meeting was held in 1905, with ninety-two additions, and the Boen-Daugherty meeting in 1906, with thirty additions. These successes inspired the church to renew and increase its determined efforts.

Early in 1907 it was decided to have R. R. Hamlin, of Fort Worth, Texas, and Leonard Daugherty, of Louisville, Ky., to conduct a meeting, to begin September 15. All plans were laid, the dates promptly kept, and for four weeks the tidal wave of religious revival swept over the town. From the number of additions the meeting might not be regarded as a great success, but upon general principles it has been the greatest in ten years, if ever in the history of the church it has been excelled. There were seventy-three additions. Forty-three of these were confessions, twenty-two by statement, and eight from other religious bodies. The meeting puts the church well on its feet, and the struggles to exist seem to be over. The church has an enrollment now of 424 members, and a new and modern building seems inevitable. The Sunday-school is too large for the accommodations, and superintendent Oscar Gafney, who is serving his ninth year in the capacity, is greatly puzzled to know what to do with the school in its present cramped quarters.

A tabernacle to seat 700 people was built, was well seated and well lighted. Faithfully and zealously and with convincing power, R. R. Hamlin did the preaching, and at times to crowds surprisingly large. He left no excuse for man in disobedience. He showed him a fearful scriptural destiny, if he continued in defiance of God's wishes. Hamlin has dignified this great religious cause with his convincing arguments for the church and righteousness; he has left the local church in fine shape, with good feelings one for the other, and loftier estimates of ourselves. More people than ever from the denominations now see things as they are, and have a higher and more correct knowledge of the Christian Church than they ever believed they could have. Hamlin is a safe preacher and a splendid evangelist.

Prof. Leonard Daugherty was with us in the Boen meeting. Then he was liked; now he is liked better. The new "Union Gospel Songs" were used with telling effect. The songs of this new book are carefully selected, well timed and full of the richest melody. It contains hymns from the soft, delicate communion hymn, to the exciting strains of the evangelist's highest exhorting momentum. A choir of over fifty voices made the atmosphere pure with music that swells the soul. Brother Daugherty was never in better shape, and never sang more sweetly than in this meeting. His solos were heard in intense silence. In this meeting, as is true in all modern evangelism, the song service meant fifty per cent of its success. The "Union Gospel Songs" sold well among the music lovers here, and many copies remain in the city as precious reminders of the meeting of 1907.

The Church is in better condition than in many years. It is before the people in a new and favorable light. Its financial record for 1906 was most excellent, the average weekly cash offering amounting to $32.65. This was independent of all missionary offerings, or extra offerings for revival meetings. The year 1907 will show an increase over this. All current expenses are paid with the free-will offerings. No one is run after for a subscription, and no one therefore is run after for the payment of a subscription. Albert Nichols will go out into his fifth year's ministry with the church stronger and abler than ever, with not a voice raised against his work, plans or suggestions and when a new and great religious workshop is dedicated here, a monument to our common Lord, and in keeping with the growth of the town and congregation—a thing for which we are praying, and an end to which we are working for 1908—Winfield will have a generous and commendable report to take down to the Centennial at Pittsburg in 1909.

be the sign of that stupendous event of which the prophets have been singing, and for which the ages have been waiting? Not a peal of thunder, not a blast of trumpets, not some glittering pageant of worldly magnificence, but, let the shepherds of Bethlehem answer: "And this is the sign unto you: Ye shall find a babe wrapped in swaddling clothes and lying in a manger." As the wise men of the first century brought their gifts of gold, frankincense and myrrh, let the wise men of the twentieth century bring their gifts of intellect and heart and bow before the glory that came to childhood on the day when the Divine Saviorhood became incarnate in a little babe.

Christ honored childhood not only in his own birth and infancy, but in his treatment of children during his ministry. Wherever he went he loved them, bade them come to him and they followed him. In the temple they hailed him with hosannas amid the indignation of priests and scribes. To those callous formalists, steeped in legalism and materialism, juvenile praises were blasphemy. It was part of the mission of Jesus to rediscover the child and to set him in his rightful place. Therefore he rebuked those who despised the little ones and warned those who would cause them to stumble. He took them in his arms, blessed them and spoke of their angelic ministries in heaven. Nor is there any more dramatic moment in his life than when, his disciples disputing about pre-eminence, he set a little child in their midst and said: "Except ye turn and become as little children ye shall in no wise enter the Kingdom of Heaven." In the midst of his disciples—there the Master placed them. Long has he been overlooked. But there he is to-day.

Perhaps you think I have been talking sentiment and poetry. Well, I am to discuss the importance of the missionary education of the young, and I feel we ought to begin with the biblical view of the child. What we need as a prerequisite in all our work among young people, whether in the Sunday-school, the Mission Band or the home, is really to see the child in our midst as Christ saw him—a personal dynamic, a spiritual force—symbol and prophet of the kingdom of God.

This is the vision that has been coming to art since the days of Joshua Reynolds. Our modern canvasses glow not with medieval saints and angels, but with the faces of children, in the fields, at the fireside, kneeling by the cot at evening prayer—yea, the faces of street urchins and ragamuffins, because, to the discerning, the gleam of the spiritual shines even through dirt and rags.

This is the vision that has been coming to poetry since the days of William Wordsworth who, first among English bards, sang of the heaven that "lies about us in our infancy," and saw as the chief glory of manhood the uncorrupted heart of the boy.

"My heart leaps up when I behold
A rainbow in the sky,
So was it when my life began;
So it is now I am a man;
So be it when I shall grow old,
Or let me die:
The child is father of the man,
And I could wish my days to be Bound each to each by natural piety."

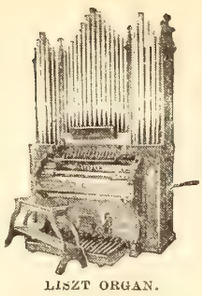
Modern poets are singing with Longfellow:

"Come to me, O ye children:
And whisper in my ear
What the birds and the winds are saying
In your sunny atmosphere.
Ye are better than all the ballads
That were ever sung or said
For ye are living poems,
And all the rest are dead."

This is the vision that is coming to our modern psychologists as they sound the abyss of being and mark the wakening of the deep truths that slumber in the youthful soul. That vision has come to every Christian worker and every Christian organization capable of fulfilling the Master's command, "Feed my lambs." It inspires the Young People's Department of the C. W. B. M. It broods over the Junior Endeavor Society and over the 150,000 Sunday-schools in this land with 12,000,000 scholars in the midst.



The other day I saw, side by side in a magazine, two pictures of the Colosseum at Rome. One represented that ancient structure in the days of Nero, when the sands of its arena were soaked with the blood of Christians who, for the witness of Christ, were torn to pieces by Numidian lions. The balconies are crowded with spectators, and there, in the sand, the little group of martyrs are kneeling in prayer before the death struggle begins.

In the other picture the galleries have fallen away and the walls have crumbled. The grooves of the chariot and the tracks of the wild beast have disappeared. But there, in the same enclosure, is another prayer-meetig. This time it is a great multitude, and it is in the twentieth century. It is composed of the 1,000 delegates to the recent World's Sunday-school convention, who, from all quarters of the globe, from the farthest-flung battle lines of the Cross, are gathered in the Eternal City under the watchword, "It is the business of the whole Church to give the gospel to the whole world as speedily as possible." I recalled the words of the Roman emperor: "O Galilean, thou hast conquered!" Yes, Christ has conquered through his little ones, for if you seek the genesis of that great missionary convention in the City of Martyrdoms you will find it in the vision that came to Robert Raikes of the spiritual value of the waifs of Gloucester. How wondrously the prophecy of that vision has been fulfilled! Christian worker, has such a vision come to you? How much do you see in a little face? Have you shared in the great soul-discovery? The starting point in the Christian education of the young is to accept Christ's estimate of a child.

Because the child is the symbol and prophet of the Kingdom, related in a vital way to the purposes of God, a potent factor in the world's movements, his education, both in the faith and works of Christianity, is tremendously important. He must know the place of God's word in his life and the relation of his life to God's world. He must not only be taught religious truths, but he must be trained for service. He must be shown how to express his religious life. The popular conception of the religious education of children has been that it consists merely in imparting religious facts. Religion is sometimes conceived of "as a finished product, such and such an amount of which is to be interjected into the young mind." The process might be called religious vaccination. What we are now coming to understand is that a child has a religious nature to be expressed and developed, and that facts are valuable only as they contribute to this result. Development means activity. We have made the mistake of giving the child much to learn and nothing to do. We now see that the kingdom of God, of which the child is a part, is not a passive abstraction, but a living organism, every member of which must work or shrivel.

The active side of the Christian life is a missionary activity. Therefore, biblical and missionary education should go hand in hand. If you ask why it is that such large numbers in the churches to-day have no concern in the world's salvation, the answer is plain. While they have been trained in biblical knowledge, they have never been trained in missionary activity. Dr. Pierson truly says that in the Sunday-school "many children have gone from the primary to the adult classes with no idea of the program of Christ for the Church, or how far it has been carried out." The Sunday-school is redeeming itself, thank God, by providing instruction in missions. The development of the missionary department in the Sunday-school is history's seal on the proposition that in religious education befitting the nature of the child and fulfilling the requirements of God, biblical knowledge and missionary practice must not be sundered. At the convention in Rome, already referred to, the Bible and the world were kept side by side. The first theme on the program was "The Sunday-school and the Great Commission." As regards practice, $75,000 was contributed for work in Africa and elsewhere.

The Young People's Department of the C. W. B. M. is to be congratulated on the soundness of its educational propaganda. In hundreds of mission bands and junior societies all over the land the children are taught not only the Scriptures, but the facts of missions. More than that, they are guided into the practice of what they learn. They come to know the purpose of Christ in this world and taste the joys of being coworkers with him. They take part in missionary meetings, support a missionary magazine, are trained in systematic giving and, with their offerings, build chapels and dispensaries, and support orphans and evangelists in heathen lands.

LISZT ORGAN.

Mason & Hamlin ORGANS

Many churches have not the room or cannot afford a large pipe organ, yet want good music and something more than the ordinary reed organ. For such our Two Manual Pedal-Bass Liszt Organs furnish the most perfect substitute for the pipe organ obtainable and are really superior to a small pipe organ in many respects. They are entirely different from any other organ manufactured and their reputation is world wide.

If we view this movement more closely in its practical results and responsibilities we shall, I think, find reasons not only for emphasizing the value of the work now being done, but also for lending encouragement to its continuance and further development.

First and foremost it is strategic work. In this, religion and science are agreed. While Christ, interpreting the nature of the child, sees in him the symbol and prophet of the spiritual kingdom, our modern paidologists, interpreting the laws of his growth, are telling us the most favorable time for the expression of that nature is during adolescence. The statistics of President Stanley Hall and of Professors Coe and Starbuck, gathered from a wide range of evangelists and teachers, assure us that the majority of conversions occur between the ages of 6 and 18. More life-decisions are made and more characters determined within those years than at any other period of human life.

Leaders of mission bands! Yours is the solemn yet exalted privilege of dealing with young hearts and minds at their most pliable, receptive and expansive stages. Yours the white sheet on which to impress images of the true, the beautiful and the good. Yours the sleeping embers of spiritual chivalry to be fanned into a sacred passion for Jesus Christ and to be released in his blessed service.

Ministers, Attention!! Working hard and results slow and unsatisfactory. Church sleepy. Send 25c silver and this ad for the remedy. If you haven't 25c, send for it anyhow. Your Bro.,

Is it not significant that the formation of the life-purposes of most of the great and good can be traced directly to the impressions of early years? The impulses of adolescence are the mightiest forces in history.

How came Jane Addams to Hull House in Chicago? Because, at the age of six, driving with her father through the slums of another city, her heart was touched with compassion for the poor. Because, when she told her father she wanted some day to live among the alleys and hovels, he did not say her nay. Because, at the age of twelve, she saw her father mourning the death of Giuseppe Mazzini, and from the story of that patriot learned the beauty of a life of service. Hull House with its sheltering ministries was created out of soul-stirrings of a little maid.

And do you know how Mazzini became the fiery patriot and prophet of Italian liberty and unity? Follow him through his tempestuous career, driven from his native land, languishing in the prison at Savona, poring over his Bible, the sob of the sea answering to the tears in his heart. See him banished from France to Switzerland and from Switzerland to England, yet conducting by voice and pen that mighty campaign that eventually shook off the yoke of Hapsburg and made his beloved Italia free. What was the primal impulse of that ardent life? For answer go back to the year of 1821 and stand in the streets of Genoa. Crowds of ill-clad, hungry-faced people, fleeing Austrian oppression, are thronging the vias; and out of the crowd, a tall, gaunt, black-bearded man steps up to a boy walking along quietly with his mother, and, holding out a red handkerchief, merely says, "For the refugees of Italy." That boy is Mazzini. The gaunt stranger represents downtrodden Italy. That moment the fires of liberty leapt in the young soul. On the Strada Nuova not long ago I passed the very spot where this young prophet devoted himself to his country and to God.

In the missionary ranks the principle of the strategic value of early impressions finds abundant confirmation. It explains David Brainerd journeying in the American forests from the Susquehanna to New England; subsisting on cakes of Indian meal warmed in ashes, and declaring he feasted like a king; baptizing his red-skinned converts in the streams beside the wigwams. It explains Carey and Heber and Mills and Judson. It explains Livingstone toiling at the loom, and Moffat and Paton in the Scottish hills dreaming of continents and isles for Christ.

In a Sunday-school in Aberdeen a missionary from the Fiji Islands told of perils and triumphs and closed his address by saying: "I wonder if there is a boy here who will some day be a missionary and bring the gospel to the cannibals." The most restless, mischievous, daring boy in the room said deep down in his heart, "I will." On his way home he knelt beside a stone and prayed God to accept him. That boy was Chalmers, of the South Seas, whom Robert Louis Stevenson called "the great heart of New Guinea."

A little girl 8 years old heard in New York a missionary address and decided she would go some day to the foreign field. Circumstances kept her at home till she was 36, but she went to Ceylon, where for forty years she conducted a school from which she sent out 600 Christian graduates. That girl was Eliza Agnew, who to-day is remembered in Ceylon as "the mother of a thousand daughters."

A few days ago I asked a young lady about to sail for China where her missionary interest was first aroused. Her reply was, "In the Mission Band in Cleveland." This is the sort of strategic work the Young People's Department is doing. In the hearts of the children it is sowing seeds that will bring forth fruit, not only at home, but in the uttermost parts of the earth. Suppose that from each of the hundreds of mission bands there should go forth at least one worker. What a magnificent contribution would be made to the evangelization of the world!

Your work is not only strategic, but it is constructive. Some grown people seem to be absolutely impervious to the missionary appeal. Their souls are too small to receive the idea of a world-wide gospel. Before you could make missionaries of them you would have to take them apart and make them all over again. There is so much in them to destroy that there is little chance to build. I do not know what to do with them. I can only trust that the Lord has his wise and loving ways of dealing with them. But I know it is not thus with the children. Christ loved them because they were free from bias and prejudice and the crochets of the schools. In the frank simplicity and stainless enthusiasm of their hearts the seed of his Kingdom could germinate. In that Kingdom there are but two cardinal facts: Christ himself and Christ's program—Christian character and Christian work. And these, when rightly presented, rarely fail to win the child's response. I have never met a child who could not be interested in missions. They appeal to his hero-worshiping spirit and to his sympathies unspoiled. They call out all that is divine in his soul.

I heard a returned missionary talking about Africa. In the audience was a little fellow four years old, who understood from the address that African boys did not have many of the things that he enjoyed. Walking up the aisle and looking into the face of the missionary, he inquired: "Mister, has de little African boys any dum to chew?" Receiving a negative answer, he went to his mother and demanded the fifty coppers he had saved up in his little bank. I saw him place them in the missionary's big hand to buy gum for the little Congolese. That is the spontaneous sympathy of childhood, and it is worth more in the redemption of the world than nine-tenths of the crystallized, censorious and niggardly orthodoxy that passes under the name of religion.

I am wondering whether the Christian Woman's Board of Missions is not setting us a lesson, which we would do well to take to heart. While we, the brethren, are busy with our mighty intellect analyzing, criticising, demolishing and annihilating a few opinions; contending for the faith and with each other; slaying men of straw and also wounding men of flesh and blood; hurling epithets, acerbations and recriminations; strengthening ourselves in our faith and causing others to stumble; displaying the discipleship of the big stick and the sword; while the brethren are doing this the sisters are going about their way with a quietude and charity that are beautiful, doing constructive work for God in training the young prophets to sit at their feet for the service of that blessed Master in whose dying love and living power we all should be one.

In the thirteenth century, after the highways to the East had been bestrewn with the wreckage of fruitless crusading expeditions to Palestine, the cry rang out over Europe that only the children—"the pure in heart"—could wrest from the Saracen the tomb of the Lord. From battlemented castle and hamlet hovel, from town and field, from hill and valley, gathered the children's crusade. Thirty thousand from France under the boy Stephen; 20,000 from Germany under the boy Nicholas—50,000 strong—they trooped down the Rhine and the Rhone, and over the Alpine passes, with waving banners and uplifted crosses, until they stood in Marseilles and Genoa and Rome, dreaming of the Holy Land, and waiting for shipment on the sea. Because of their songs, their prayers, their visions, their quenchless zeal and the high hopes set upon them, they were hailed as the "Minor Prophets of the Wars of the Cross."

All the world knows of the disillusionment and disaster that broke their ranks and scattered them in thousands to slavery and death. Theirs was a splendid enthusiasm, a vast fund of life-power that came to naught because they lacked both proper guidance and a proper goal.

In America I see another army of children rising, with banners and crosses above their heads and songs and prayers and visions in their hearts. Sometimes I see them in solid processions going forth to the wars of God. Again I see them sitting down in companies in the Sunday-schools and mission bands, each company under its captain, who, with an open Bible and a map of the world, is instructing them for the world campaign. They will not fail when the Lord of Battles calls. Children of the New Crusade, the Church salutes you as the Minor Prophets of Modern Missions!

An Introductory Word.

Advertising is not only indispensable in the modern business world, but is quite as helpful to the readers of the various periodicals in which it appears. It is coming to be the very general verdict that a good line of advertising is both interesting, instructive and helpful. The Christian-Evangelist is striving to give to its readers the very best in advertising as well as in its other departments, and solicits the active aid of its readers in this respect. It is with genuine pleasure that attention is called to the advertisement in this issue of Albaugh, Dover Co., a concern whose announcements we are glad to present for consideration. All the men actively engaged in managing this splendid mail order house are not only moral and upright men, but are professing and practicing Christians. The house of Albaugh, Dover Co. is managed on broad religious lines and is engaged in demonstrating that Christianity and business are entirely compatible.

The concern is a strong one, with a very large capital. It has magnificent eight-story warehouses, owns several factories and handles the output of many others. It has the ability and disposition to sell excellent goods and prices that will appear very small in comparison with usual prices and still make a fair profit. The few articles mentioned in their ad. are only a mere hint of their stock, which includes almost everything from a paper of pins to a threshing machine. Their magnificent catalogue, weighing several pounds, should be on the table of every home desirous of practicing comfort with economy. It will be sent for the asking. Get a copy and then tell us if this is an overstatement.

Mention The Christian-Evangelist when you write, and be careful to address Albaugh, Dover Co., Block 900-964, Chicago, Ill.

W. D. Cree, Advertising manager.

An Acknowledgment.

I desire to acknowledge, through the columns of The Christian-Evangelist, the receipt of a draft of $1,000, the bequest of Elizabeth A. Dodge, of Randolph, Ohio, to the Ohio Christian Missionary Society.

It is a beautiful thing when a disciple of our Lord, blessed with this world's goods and serving Christ faithfully here, determines that her ministry for the Master shall continue through coming years by an appropriation of a definite amount for spreading the gospel within our state. Money thus given goes on indefinitely multiplying in usefulness as time passes, and through the giver, continuously exalts Jesus Christ. Brethren, if you are blessed with ability thus to give, you will do well to consider this most practical way of serving the Lord and make some provision for such distribution of your money as will help to hasten the ultimate triumph of truth.

I pray that the example of Sister Dodge will prove an inspiration to others, able to do likewise, and that many may learn the joy that is possible through this fellowship, thus providing for the further advancement of primitive Christianity.

Great Day at High Hill.

R. B. Havener, state Bible school evangelist, revived the work at High Hill something more than one year ago, and I was called to the pastorate. In the fall he held another meeting, during which the money was raised for a new house. The house was completed, and furnished at a cost of $2,100, of which $900 was to be raised on the day of dedication. All the membership was in fear as to the results, as the giving up to this time had been exceedingly generous. A fine day, with basket dinner, gave us a splendid audience, and Brother Havener raised $964, so that all the church now think more of him than ever. The State Bible School Board makes no mistake in keeping such men in the field and at such work.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Georgia.

Lowell is a beautiful village eight miles south of Carrollton, the county seat of Carroll County. I began a meeting there the first Sunday in September and organized the Church of Christ at Lowell, the fifth Sunday, with 40 charter members. This new congregation is well officered and begins its career with fine prospects. It is the only church in the village, and the good men and women who compose it are happy and hopeful. O. H. Moore, the faithful, popular preacher of Texas, Heard county, is their minister, and a rapid increase is reasonably expected. Brother Mooney, a popular singing teacher of Heard county, was with us a few days in the beginning of the meeting and rendered valuable assistance. He was followed by W. T. Caldwell, of Red Oak, who remained with us till the close. Brother Caldwell captured the community with his singing. The people for miles around attended the meeting and were attentive, courteous and hospitable. Nine of the sisters were added to the W. S. G. M. Altogether it was a glorious meeting, and I am glad to add the church at Lowell to the list of churches I have organized.——The churches of the Central District will hold their annual district convention at Harrison, October 16 to 18——The churches of the Northeast District will hold their convention at Mt. Vernon, Walton County, October 22-24——Every church in Georgia should observe "Georgia Day," the first meeting day in November——Remember our State Convtntion will be held with the First Church, Atlanta, November 18-21—The sweet-spirited CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST grows more popular all the time with all thoughtful readers. It should be in every Christian home in Georgia. E. L. Shelnutt.

Canada Letter.

The annual meeting of the churches in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick was held in Tiverton, N. S., at the beginning of September. There are fifteen churches listed in Nova Scotia and nine in New Brunswick. The tabulated report shows 1,879 resident members in these churches, and about 1,200 in the Sunday-schools. There were something over 100 baptisms in these churches last year. Church property to the amount of about $60,000 is owned. Over $8,000 was spent on local work, and a total of $929.08 was given to missions. Eleven ministers are devoting their time to the care of these churches. The convention was one of the best in the history of the co-operation. Beside the local ministry there were present William Gates, of Texas; W. R. Warren, of Pittsburg, Pa., and W. J. Wright and A. McLean, of Cincinnati, O.——The cause of union between Baptists and Disciples is receiving earnest consideration throughout the whole extent of Canada. O. B. Stockford, of Okotoks, Alta, reports that at that point a union has been formed under the name of a Church of Christ. The new church remains in fellowship with the Baptist convention of Western Canada, which has given and is continuing financial aid to the work. The Bible is to be the sole rule of faith and practice in the new church and the Lord's, Supper is to be observed every Lord's day.—— J. A. L. Romig reports that he has recently attended the Baptist convention of British Columbia and that the convention registered "a sweeping victory for union on all lines, taking advance ground on the subject beyond the other conventions that will count mightily for the faith once for all delivered to the saints."——At Vermillion, Alta., an important new point on the Canada Northern, a union was formed about a year ago. Since that, a new church has been built in the country, and now a movement is on foot for a new building in the town. Here also the union bears the name "Church of Christ," and adopts New Testament authority and usages.——While in the maritime provinces a joint committee representing both Baptists and Disciples met in St. John on August 17 last among other resolutions passed was the following: "Whereas, the greatly to be desired union of God's people would be advanced, and the power and influence for righteousness and godliness of the Baptists and Disciples of Christ would be more effective and much increased by a union of these bodies, therefore, resolved, that we recommend our respective conventions to appoint a standing committee on union to consist of twelve members from the Baptists and twelve from the Disciples of Christ, etc." These committees have been appointed by the conventions of the two bodies and an early meeting for the consideration of union is expected.——District conventions are on now in Ontario. The convention of the western district is to be held this year with the church at Poplar Hill. This is one of our best churches and the program promises to be an excellent one.—— The convention for the Niagara district is to be held on October 16 and 17, at Winger. E. R. Black, of London, is to be one of the principal speakers at that meeting.——Owen Sound has started a movement for the liquidation of the debt on the parsonage and church building. "Out of debt by 1909" is their slogan. Here's to their entire success in the worthy undertaking.—— The church at West Lake, under Pastor Merry, is planning for an evangelistic campaign this fall, with R. W. Stevenson, provincial evangelist, as assistant. Good progress is reported from Collingwood, where Bro. L. D. Vosburg is in charge. Brother Vosburg is whole-souled and a hustler, and his heart is cheered by the good prospects ahead of him.——W. J. Cadman, of Bowmanville, wil conduct a symposium in the "Christian Messenger," our Ontario paper, on "Our Educational Problem" in Canada. It is a serious problem and deserves the most careful and candid consideration. M. B. Ryan.

Selkirk, Ont.

Cincinnati Letter.

C. M. Fillmore spent a week with the Hill Side Avenue Church of Indianapolis, looking over his new field. He will leave the Carthage church the last of the month. He has been at Carthage for eight years. We are sorry to have him leave our vicinity, but he has the prayers and best wishes of all the brethren here as he goes to take up the work at Indianapolis.——W. T. Moore recently spent a week with the Central church in a short meeting. At the ministers' meeting Oct. 7, he made an appeal for Bethany College endowment, receiving the promise of the hearty support of the brethren. Cincinnati folks are always glad to welcome Brother Moore.———The Northside church observed Rally day Oct. 6, and had more than 500 present at Sunday-school. R. H. Waggoner was the speaker for the occasion. ———The Columbia church celebrated its third anniversary Oct. 6. Bro. A. M. Harvuot was invited to preach. H. C. Bowen, who has been the minister of that church since its establishment, has resigned. He has engaged in business, but will do some supply preaching. He has done a very faithful and profitable work at Columbia.———A good meeting was held at Evanston recently by Brother Stout of Iowa. The pastor, R. E. Deadman reports 22 added. This young church has a bright future before it.——H. C. Runyan, of Latonia, reports things flourishing over there. The old and new rooms of the church are being filled at the church services.——The big thing on here at present is the teacher-training movement. About 125 churches are represented in the campaign. About 1,000 students are enlisted. H. H. Moninger and Justin N. Green are the teachers of the classes. The Christian churches are right at the front in these classes. W. G. Loucks.

Columbia (Mo.) Notes.

Brother M. A. Hart has made an excellent impression in Columbia. His pastorate opens with every promise of a great work. His sermons are full of the person and spirit of Christ. Yesterday morning he spoke on the text, "Other foundation can no man lay than that which is laid, which is Jesus Christ." There were six additions by letter.——The Bible college has opened with a larger attendance than ever. The university credit courses are popular, and we have the best classes in the history of the institution. Our student preachers are caring for above twenty churches, and are doing excellent work. Last year above 200 were added by their ministry.——C. H. Swift was yesterday recalled for a year to serve the church in Auxvasse. He is a good student and very earnest. His churches appreciate him.——R. J. Pirkey, of Louisville, Ky., has been taken home, suffering from fever. Our prayers follow him.——C. F. McCall, who graduated last June, is studying in New York preparatory to missionary work in Africa.—— Brother and Sister Robinson, students of last year, are now in Japan.——Miss Nannie Hopper, a student of last year, is in Mexico, working under the C. W. B. M. It is reported that she is suffering from fever. May she be blessed and restored. W. J. Lhamon, dean.

Oregon Echoes.

It gives me pleasure to speak of the good work that is being done by the Oregon field workers under the O. C. M. C. Brother McConnell has organized two churches since Turner and held a very successful meeting with the church at Myrtle Point. The new congregations are at Oakland and Bandon. The proper thing is being done for these fields by calling ministers at once and arranging for the permanency of the work done by the evangelist. A third church has been organized at Wallowa by the Ritchey brothers, and the work at Union revived. We hope to have men for these fields soon. The work now being done reveals the fact that Oregon is a field ripe unto the harvest; but efficient laborers are few and means very deficient. Nothing has so impressed this fact on my mind as my recent visit with the "scattered Disciples" of Central Oregon. Sherman and Crook counties have a combined area equal to that of New Jersey and a population of about 12,000. In the two counties there are four small congregations and not a preacher for any one of them. The two in Crook country are too far apart for one man to serve both. They are at present unable to support themselves in aggressive work. Here is a field for six months of strenuous evangelism, after which each of these churches can support full time service by an able minister. We should send into these fields the very best men we have. The people ar tired of the poor diet furnished by incompetent preachers sent to them by other religious bodies. Give us a reasonable fund and competent men and we can take Oregon for Christ. "If Jehovah delight in us, then will he bring us into this land and give it unto us."—— Brother Handsaker is making things prosper at Corvallis. They have a large tabernacle ready for a great meeting with Brother Martin. It is hoped that Brother Martin will be able to begin soon. Brother Wood is pushing the new building at Hood River and Brother Thompson is getting ready for a big work at Enterprise. Watch these mission fields.——Watch for the announcement of your district convention and don't fail to be there. Don't forget that your help is needed to make November 3 a great day. Look up the day and take your pocketbook to church with you. If you should happen to leave it and its contents on the plate it will do you good.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

The Bible School at Work

Conducted by J. H. HARDIN,
State Bible School Superintendent of Missouri, 311 Century Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

CHURCH OFFICERS AND THE BIBLE SCHOOL.

A great change is going on in the minds of the elders and deacons of our churches in regard to their relation to the Bible school and their duties therein. Not many years ago many of them ignored it. Those who attended it did so as individual workers and not in any sense as representing any sympathy nor leadership officially as officers of the church. This is too much the case now, altogether too much; but a change for the better is setting in. As illustrative of this change note the following resolution passed by the officers of the Carthage, Mo., church during a rally we recently held there for the increase and betterment of the work in that city:

"The official board of the Carthage church, regrets that in the past it has not kept in closer touch with the Bible school; and the board now resolves that in future, it will, as the official head of the church, assist in organizing, directing, maintaining and pushing the great work of the Bible school."

The voluntary passage and communication of this resolution had a very inspiring effect on the church. On the Sunday of the rally, under the influence of the leadership of these brethren and the efforts of the minister and his canvassing committees, a large section of the church which is not ordinarily in the Bible school was enlisted, and a large Home Department organized besides. It will not be many months until the school will be one of the largest in the state. To this end Bro. N. L. Sims is working persistently, patiently and effectively.

THE COMBINED SERVICE.

On the Sunday referred to a part of the program was in pursuance of the following notice widely advertised several weeks before the rally:

SUNDAY MORNING.

"Combined Bible school and church service, J. H. Hardin assisted by the officers of the Carthage church. The aim in this service is to have all the church in the Bible school and all the Bible school in the church service Let every one co-operate, making this a great Rally Day."

The following order of services was pursued:

1. Bible school bell tap at 10 o'clock a. m. (the Bible school superintendent in charge).
2. Two songs.
3. Responsive reading.
4. Song.
5. Prayer.
6. Song.
7. Bible study, 35 minutes.
8. Reports summary on blackboard. Primary pupils allowed to go informally.
9. Voluntary during which chorus choir take places on the platform.
10. Communion hymn.
11. Lord's supper, conducted by the officers of the church in the ordinary way.
12. The offering.
13. Announcements.
14. Anthem.
15. Sermon, with invocation and hymn.
16. Benediction.

The whole service was closed by 11:45, and the members of the church were at home thirty or forty minutes earlier than usual. So pleased were the people with this arrangement that the officers at their regular meeting in the afternoon determined to continue this order indefinitely. Some modifications in minor details will be made, perhaps, but the church will continue to worship in this way, for the reason that it closes up the wide chasm which has so long yawned between church and school.

I am convinced that hundreds of churches would worship thus permanently if they were led to try it once. It is scriptural common sense, edifying and convenient.

How about that pledge? That pledge you made at Sedalia, to state Bible school work? Have you paid the first and second quarters? If you have not done so, send in the money right away.

As these notes are written, the state superintendent is giving a course in Bible school pedagogy in Missouri Christian College at Camden Point, and speaking to large audiences in the church each evening.

The Cities of Refuge.—Josh 20:1-9.

Memory verses, 2, 3.

GOLDEN TEXT.—My refuge is in God.—Psa. 62:7.

In a primitive state of society it is conceived that a crime is an injury only, or chiefly, to the person who is the direct victim, and not to society as a whole. It was therefore considered not only the right but the duty of an injured person to seek vengeance for himself or for an injured member of his family. In a more highly organized state of society it is understood that any crime is an injury to the whole body politic. If A steals from B, or assaults him, the courts take cognizance of it as a case of "The State against A, not as "B against A." The whole process of advancing civilization depends upon the recognition of this principle. Without it, government can not advance beyond the tribal stage.

The Hebrews at this time had reached the stage of development where it was felt that an injury to an individual was an injury to his immediate family. The next of kin had certain duties to perform in a variety of cases. It was the duty of the next of kin to marry a childless widow and raise up heirs to the deceased, as in the case of Ruth and Boaz. It was the duty of the next of kin to buy up land which was in danger of passing out of the family through accident or misfortune, thus to keep the estate of the family intact. It was the duty of the next of kin to avenge a murder or any other injury which left the victim incapable of avenging himself. Thus Job, realizing his own helplessness under circumstances which seemed to conspire against him, cried out, "I know that my avenger liveth." The word "avenger" or "redeemer" there is the word for next of kin considered as the heir to these various duties which have been referred to. Job, of course, uses the expression figuratively to express the belief that he would in some way secure vindication from the accusations which were being unjustly laid upon him.

As Israel was passing out of the pastoral state into the agricultural stage of her national existence, it was necessary that there should be some means of checking the old practice of family revenge, in order that the new legal and judicial institutions of the nation might develop; just as it is necessary to suppress the old system of personal and family feuds in some of our mountain districts to-day in order that there may be a growth in respect for law. The device adopted in Israel was the cities of refuge. They were not places to which criminals might go and be safe from the just punishment of their crimes. They were places to which a certain class of accidental offenders might go in order to escape private vengeance and secure a legal trial.

The establishment of this institution, the cities of refuge, illustrates one point in God's method of dealing with men. He lays his requirements upon them gradually, as they are able to bear them. He takes them where they are and gently leads them up to where they should be. The old system of private vengeance was a bad system. But it was not instantly prohibited. It was first limited and controlled and later was done away entirely. Similarly, many things were permitted to the patriarchs which would not be permitted to-day. David, whose devotional lyrics have been the comfort and uplift of millions, would be excluded from any well-ordered church of to-day for immoral conduct. God does not change, but men's knowledge of him and of his will has been increasing. The word of the Lord has come with increasing clearness to successive generations from the beginning of human history down to the full revelation in Christ. The law of the cities of refuge, which prohibited vengeance in certain places and for certain offenses, was as much of the will of God as that generation could receive and put into practice.

Teacher-Training Class

In answer to inquiries concerning the character and scope of the teacher-training lessons prepared by Marion Stevenson and appearing each week in OUR YOUNG FOLKS, we publish the following prospectus.

The author's skill and success as a teacher of the Word is well known by all who read our church papers. He has also earned a wide reputation as a Bible lecturer in many a church and Chautauqua in recent years. This training he has enjoyed eminently fits him for the preparation of the outlined lessons on the study of the Bible.

In addition to this he has served the Bible school in a practical way as state superintendent of Bible schools in Illinois and is giving much of his present time to Bible school institute work in connection with his Bible lectures. He thus has a happy combination of faculties and experience in preparing a book for the training of those who are to be the future teachers of our Bible schools.

There was a time in the beginning of the human race that man was acquainted with God in the familiar sense in which a man may be acquainted with his neighbor. The story of Eden represents the closest intimacy between man and God, his creator. What a delightful companionship the first human pair enjoyed with God when he would come into the garden in the cool of the evening for familiar conversation. There was no fear or restraint on man's part. This intimacy with God was quite natural. While it is only mentioned we can easily imagine what it must have offered to man and what help he would receive from it.

This story of the original order of creation should convince us that acquaintance with God is our natural right. It also is our highest privilege and its lack our most painful deprivation. The desire for it is not a mark of a morbid spiritual condition but a healthful indication that the man's true nature is asserting itself and demanding its rights that it may be satisfied.

Sin interrupted this familiar fellowship and ever since the entrance of sin man has been estranged from God. His heart has been filled with fear at the thought of God. His estrangement has driven him away so that he is in lesser or greater ignorance of God and on this account he lives apart from his natural rights and consequently lacks most of what otherwise might come into his life.

It certainly follows that the supremest endeavor of our life should be to renew this acquaintance with God and to so fully cultivate it that we may enjoy all it can afford us. How can we come to know God?

In his word we have the story of lives lived in acquaintance with him. We may discover from the record the secret of their lives and may imitate them.

Abraham is universally known as the friend of God. God became more and more his familiar friend. What was the reason for it? When God spoke to him he believed and obeyed and walked in God's ways. Can we not do the same? We can believe upon broader and deeper grounds than were offered to Abraham. We can obey as unhesitatingly. The result will be the same in our lives, we shall come to know God.

Moses is another life that came to know God "face to face." We sing the beautiful song, "Face to Face"; Moses acquired this intimacy with God at a great cost. If we are willing to pay the price we may enjoy its blessedness. Consider the faith of Moses, and especially his renunciation of Egypt, his patient obedience and continuance in the disappointments of his choice for forty years until God had tested him, his other forty years of obedience in tribulation—a great price he paid for the privilege of "seeing him who is invisible"—are you willing to pay it? It is worth while.

We might mention a long list of Old Testament worthies and note that through faith, renunciation, obedience, patience they came to know God.

Suppose we think a little while of Jesus as the revelation of God. He told those who listened to him that he came to them that they might know God. To Philip he said, "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." If we study Jesus we shall become acquainted with God. If we walk with Jesus as he walked with God, we shall have a deeper and finer acquaintance.

But this means for us faith, repentance, death to the world and the old life, obedience, patience. It is a great price, but Oh, to know God!

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

By Charles Blanchard.

The Comfort and the Comforter.

Topic October 30. John 14:1-4; 25-31.

It is the old, sweet promise of the Master's abiding presence with his disciples. He was going away; but he would send another Comforter to abide with them forever, even the Spirit of truth, whom the world could not receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you and shall be in you.

And I have wondered sometimes if many of us, like the big, busy world, wrapped up in the pursuit of material things—the things that we can see—were not robbing ourselves of the presence of that Comforter which the Master promised to abide with his disciples forever? We are trying to walk by sight, for the most part, I fear. I confess that the call of the world is strong in my own heart and life, and sometimes seems almost irresistible. My sympathies are with the busy and bothered men and women who are struggling with the pressing problems of the work-a-day world. But I feel all the more keenly my own loss and the loss that multitudes are suffering from allowing the call and claims of the world to absorb their energies and spoil them of the "Peace of God that passeth all understanding"—that peace which the Master promised, which the world can not give, neither take away.

What we need in this world of intense activities is the sense of the unseen and the eternal, pulling us upward and leading us outward and onward, away from self and sin to something better and abiding and blessed. I confess this need in my own bothered life, full of vexing cares of this world of work and worry. The very best men and women, I doubt not, have felt this pull of the world downward. Shall we whose faces were made to turn upward walk ever in the world with faces to the ground? O for the Comforter, the teacher, the constrainer, the Spirit of truth to guide us!

We need to claim the promise of the divine presence, to cultivate the sense of spiritual things, in the midst of the multitude of material claims that press upon us. It is one of the perplexing problems how thus to preserve our mental and spiritual balance, while doing our duty as men and women in the world. It was to help us in the stress of this conflict that the Master left us these precious and exceeding great promises. The spiritual must be cultivated or we will get hopelessly lost in the mazes of materialism.

"I will not leave you comfortless: I will come unto you. Yet a little while and the world seeth me no more; but ye see me: because I live, ye shall live also." The promise is to all his own. He came that we might have life and have it more abundantly. And that we might have this more abundant life he promised the Comforter, the Holy Spirit, unto all that obey him. Our spiritual life is dependent on our receiving the Holy Spirit. Of this there can be no doubt in the minds of those who read the scriptures carefully. The Gospels and the epistles are full of promises and assurances of the gifts of the Holy Spirit. Nor can we receive the spiritual gifts save as we receive the Spirit, bearing witness with our spirits that we are the children of God. There are mysteries about it all, as there are mysteries all about us, even with the finer forces of nature.

> Forever deeper and deeper lies
> The mystery of life among the hidden,

But shall we refuse the gifts of the Spirit in refusing to receive the Spirit, because we can not understand all about the mystery of spiritual influences? To me it does not seem strange that God, as our Father, that Christ, as our Master, should send the Comforter, the Holy Spirit, to abide with us forever. Love prompted the gift. Love claims the promise, with humility yet with great rejoicing. The extravagant claims that have been made by some, who are loud in their professions of spiritual possessions, ought not to lead humble disciples everywhere to deny themselves the best of all the gifts of the risen Lord. For this promise of the gift of the Holy Spirit is the especial promise of the Master to his disciples, just before his death and repeated with tender assurance just before his return to the Father. Putting away, therefore, all pride and selfishness and self-seeking, let us receive with meekness the engrafted word and the infilling Spirit. It is our high privilege. It is our birthright as children. "Because ye are sons he hath sent forth the Spirit of his son into your hearts crying Abba, Father." And the promise of peace is linked with the promise of the Comforter. How much we all need this blessed Comforter let your own tired and troubled hearts answer. O my Master, I want to be comforted, for I am often sore distressed and I have no one else to whom I can go but unto Thee.

TIRED? LONELY?

Tired! Well, what of that?
Didst fancy life was spent on beds of ease,
Fluttering the rose leaves scattered by the breeze?
Come, rouse thee! work while it is called to-day!
Coward, arise! go forth upon the way!

Lonely? And what of that?
Some must be lonely, 'tis not given to all
To feel a heart responsive rise and fall,
To blend another life into his own.
Work may be done in loneliness. Work on.

Dark? Well, and what of that?
Didst fondly dream the sun would never set?
Dost fear to lose thy way? Take courage yet!
Learn thou to walk by faith and not by sight;
Thy steps will guided be, and guided right.

Hard? Well, and what of that?
Didst fancy life one summer holiday,
With lessons none to learn, and naught but play?
Go, get thee to thy task! Conquer or die!
It must be learned! Learn it then patiently.

There are ways in which even silent people can belong to God and be a blessing to the world. A star does not talk, but its calm, steady beam shines down continually out of the sky, and is a benediction to man. A flower can not sing bird-songs, but its sweet beauty and gentle fragrance make it a blessing wherever it is seen. Be like a star in your peaceful shining, and many will thank God for your life. Be like the flower in your pure beauty and in the influence of your unselfish spirit and you may do more to bless the world than many who talk incessantly.—J. R. Miller.

The president drove around to the Gordon cottage the next day and took James out for another drive through the city and far out toward the mountains, whose snow-capped peaks stood out against the sky in stately splendor. The green fields stretched far up the slopes, and the balsam, fir, spruce and pine forests joined the distance to the snow line along the rugged heights. From these sparkled and babbled beautiful brooks, fresh from the melting snow and distilled rain that ever watered the foothills and kept coursing into the valleys below. James sat in spellbound rapture as his eyes followed these scenes for two hours as they drove far up the slopes or stopped to catch some of the views to the right and left, or drank from the swift-flowing brooklets to slake their thirst. Beautiful speckled trout shied past or peered out from some sequestered glen beneath the rocks as they drove through the streams or crossed bridges leading up the mountain. Finally they reached a height where they could see far down the valleys and out for miles and miles over the beautiful country, cities and towns, and the great Pacific Ocean could be descried in the distance by the aid of field glasses which they brought along. Great volumes of smoke indicated where the steamships were plying to and fro with their cargoes of wheat, wool, fruits and precious ores; or freight of humanity bound for the coast towns or the Orient. One very large transport, closely guarded by a massive man-of-war and some cruisers, could be distinctly seen from where they stood, steaming out to sea, manifestly bound for the Philippines.

"Would to God that those were missionaries instead of soldiers!" said the president, as he heaved a sigh toward the receding flotilla. "The time is coming, James, when the nations shall learn war no more." Turning toward Middleton, they talked of the future project which the president had called James to assist in carrying out.

They were at work upon a college building to take the large class of young people that were graduating from the grammar schools and who, if such advantages were not provided, would either have to go without further preparation, or go to other schools that were not so advantageously located with respect to influence and society as could be had right in Middleton. For even tobacco and profanity were absent there. Not even their workmen cared to continue these habits, since the influence was such as to make a man who indulged in them very unpopular and the butt of all kinds of ridicule, and if persisted in dismissal eventually followed, although there was no law positively forbidding, except the law as written in the Word of God. In fact, the laws of Middleton were few and little used, since the people were a law unto themselves, as all truly redeemed people are. Such a community was, indeed, a good one for rearing children, and a better could not be found for a college town.

As they drove back they visited the location, and James was highly pleased with the plans of the buildings, which were fast nearing completion. They were built from the salmon-red brick that were manufactured upon their own yards and the gold pyrite sandstone that they quarried from their own quarries on the river bank not far away, and they were an imposing sight indeed.

"We purpose to put in courses here, James," said the president, "that shall fit our children for all the activities of life, including foreign and home missions. In fact, we shall make missions our central object, as it is humanity we are aiming to touch for betterment in all our activities. And I trust that God shall lay it upon your heart to abide with us for a time and assist in putting this project into force. I have in mind several of the Eaton students, with whom I am corresponding with a view to bringing them here to assist and prepare a colony which we expect to start in China upon the plan we have here at Middleton. We hope to train our own missionaries and send out colonies upon this basis to all the wide world. And I believe it is God's plan to evangelize the earth. We have no less than three score men and as many women applying for foreign missionary work. Most of them, like yourself, have been rejected on credal difficulties by the denominations, or because of a lack of funds or possibly mismanagement. A number of very bright and good men come to us, having been rejected on the report of church committees where they have preached the Word faithfully, but with too much fervor and insistence of its being practiced to-day. We shall doubtless bring the whole 'Homiletic Team,' of which you were the organizer, to us shortly, as they have all been rejected from various fields where they have gone preaching the doctrine of healing and holy living as it was held in our opera house congregations that year before the persecution. Now we shall admit these people to our community and permit them to live as the people here do. In the meantime they can have access to our missionary course and we can have an opportunity to test them and to know if they are worthy and capable; also to find out what part of the work they are best adapted for. So from time to time we can select our bands of missionary workers and send them forth. Thus by precept and object lesson, through such communities, we hope to teach the nations a living, practical gospel. It is a great mistake to cast these men off for slight and supposed offenses without giving them a chance under most favorable circumstances to redeem their record and adjust themselves to he work and place they are adapted for. Many have spent a great part of their lives in trying to fit themselves for some kind of benevolent work, and to cast them off under a cloud of suspicion for offending a sin-loving and worldly community is unfair and unchristian, to say the least. They may have the very elements of great and useful persons, and here we shall have the opportunity of developing them and testing their proper worth. They have the right to live at least, but in the world there seems to be no opening for these who have been rejected by committees and boards of the churches; they are tabooed and suspected and thrust into menial toil, where they can scarcely eke out a livelihood, even suspected by the class they associate with. This tends to make their lives sore and bitter. It is not so here. We all were in the same condemnation and know what it means to be falsely accused and hated for the truth's sake. It was the Master's own position in the world where he was hated and cast out, and he warns us that we too shall be hated of the world and of all men not in him, if we preach the truth and if we follow him. I am more convinced than ever, James, that this very policy of the boards and the churches will lead to an abandonment of the ministry of the denominations by the honest and the upright, who seek to serve their Lord and Master according to the teachings of his word. For let them follow that as their guide in doctrine and practice and there is not a church in ten to-day that will support them. They may get a call and work for a time, but the inevitable will follow. They will give offense by their faithful course. Then that report will be distorted and they will not be likely to get another call, since the churches look for a man with a "record," and the superintendents say they have no time to pick up men and carry them unless they have a "record." The result is that these faithful men are dropped and the subtle, unconscientious and popular fellows will be installed. Such a course puts a premium upon what is coming to be known as "progressiveness," and it is fast transforming our humble ministers into unbelievers and ear-ticklers. "Progression," so called, is nothing more than following the lines of higher criticism and pandering to the tastes of perverted consciences, worldly-mindedness and mammon.

Just at this point a dashing span of horses horses drew a fine carriage up to the steps and some well-dressed people alighted and introduced themselves to the president. He immediately recognized the man as one of his correspondents, who had written him of his own accord upon hearing about the projected college and its object, from Mr. MacDonald. His correspondence had been conducted with reference to making a princely gift to the institution, in which he had a good degree of confidence. But now seeing with his eyes and hearing with his ears he was fully convinced that his confidence had not been misplaced, and before he left he handed President Brown a bond for one million dollars, to be paid in installments covering a period of years and to be used as the directors of the Foreign and Home Mission Board, connected with the college, chose. "This is the second such gift to this work this month," said the president, as he showed James into the bank and deposited the bond. "We have no lack of funds nor men and women and opportunity, may God give us grace and wisdom to use them aright. It is not the great trifles that count so much as it is the smaller ones. For instances, we have 2,000 households whose average income is $2,000 per year. That is an aggregate income of four million dollars. One-tenth of that means forty thousand dollars this year, with an increase this year according to the prosperity of our colony. Then the freewill and thank offerings aggregate double that, aside from such princely gifts as this. But these two gifts aggregating two million dollars this month are to be paid in installments, so that they will not count as much as the regular tithe and offering, you see.

"You may think it strange that our households average so high in incomes as two thousands dollars per year, but when you consider that such men as MacDonald and McMillen and Geer and some others who have factories, mines, great wheat and cattle ranches, or millions of sheep, or vast herds of horses that produce thousands of dollars each month, clear of expense, it will average a great many smaller incomes up to the $2,000 each.

"There are very few of our people who do not get an income, from which after the tithe is taken out, they lay up a snug sum each year in the bank for emergencies. And then we have an investment and loan branch that assists these people in putting their money out in good investments, so that they can constantly earn more with their incomes. The fruit and garden business is a very good and sure yielding investment, since we have a good market for all our produce. Many strawberry men have taken as high as $500 per year from an acre of such fruit, and other fruit is quite as certain, since we are not dependent upon rain, you see, for we have a fine irrigation system. The dairymen raise from three to seven crops of alfalfa from the same piece of ground. One man with twenty cows over on that dry knoll yonder made from ten acres of ground something over two thousand dollars clear. He got water up there by a series of windmill pumps, and he raises an amazing crop of hay.

"Then, there are the mercantile men, who all club together and buy their stuff in great quantities, so that owing to the cheapness of insurance and rents and no liability of loss because of poor debts, they can afford to sell at rates that attract trade from hundreds of miles away. Their mail system has vastly outgrown their local trade already, and people come in on the trains from other towns to trade, saying that they can afford to pay fare for one hundred miles or more and return on a hundred dollars' worth of trade, and then more than earn their day's wages and get a better grade of goods," said Mr. Brown, as they walked down the avenue toward his home.

Avoid Secret Stomach Remedies

Because Most of Them Contain Dangerous Ingredients, Which Produce the Drug Habit.

Thousands of people, having dyspepsia or stomach troubles in some form, continually "dope" themselves with all sorts of secret tonics, drugs, pills, cathartics, etc., which not only inflame and irritate the stomach and intestines, but in many cases cause the opium, morphine and cocaine habits.

You have a right and should demand to know what any medicine contains before you take it, unless it is put up or recommended by some reputable physician. Fakes and quacks will put most anything into their secret preparations, to make you like their useless stuff so as to want more of it, until it makes you the victim of some drug habit, which will ruin your health in a short time.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are not a secret remedy, they do not contain injurious drugs, and they are recommended by thousands of physicians in the United States and Canada to their patients for dyspepsia, catarrh of the stomach, and all other stomach troubles resulting from improper digestion of food.

These wonderful tablets actually digest food because they contain the very elements that are required of a healthy stomach to properly digest food, thus acting as a substitute and giving the overworked digestive organs a rest and a chance to regain their former health, strength and vigor.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets contain fruit and vegetable essences, the pure concentrated tincture of hydrastis, and golden seal, which tone up and strengthen the mucous coats of the stomach and increase the flow of gastric and other digestive juices; lactose (extracted from milk); nux, to strengthen the nerves controlling the action of the stomach; bismuth to absorb gases and prevent fermentation, and pure aseptic pepsin (gov. test) of the highest digestive power. All of these are scientifically incorporated in these tablets or lozenges and constitute a complete, natural, speedy cure for any stomach trouble.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are sold in large fifty-cent boxes, by all druggists.

Evidence of Blind Faith.

President Patton of Princeton University once delivered a sermon, his subject being "Faith."

He spoke of the blind faith of the client who puts himself at the mercy of a lawyer in preparing an action for trial, and of the confidence of the sick in entrusting themselves to the physician.

"A case of blind faith," said the clergyman. "The doctor writes out a prescription. Oftener than not you can not read it; you don't know what it is. He tells you to take it. 'Yours not to reason why, yours but to do and die.'"

Whether or not Dr. Patton meant it, there was a distinct ripple throughout the congregation.

My Task.

To love some one more dearly ev'ry day,
To help a wandering child to find his way,
To ponder o'er a noble thought, and pray
And smile when evening falls.

To follow Truth as blind men long for light,
To do my best from dawn of day till night,
To keep my heart fit for His holy sight,
And answer when He calls.

Make the Children Happy.

A little while ago, I was guest in the home of a large family where the mother was of the nervous, fretful, trouble-borrowing kind of woman, who neither enjoys herself nor will let others enjoy themselves. There was scarcely five minutes during my stay that she was not correcting, repressing, scolding, or nagging one of the children. It did not seem to make any difference what they were doing, she would tell them not to do it. If a child stood in an open doorway or near an open window, she was sure he would "get his death of cold." He must not eat this, he must not make a noise, he must not play, he must not do this, and he must not do that.

She kept on repressing her children in this manner throughout the evening, until they were very nervous and fretful. The result of this constant repression is that there is not a really normal child in the family. There is a sort of hungry, unsatisfied look in the faces of every one of them. They give one the impression that they long to get away from their mother and to let themselves out in laughter and play to their hearts' content.

It is worse than cruel, it is a crime to crush the childhood out of any life, to suppress the fun-loving instinct, which is as natural as breathing, for no wealth or luxuries in later life can compensate for the loss of one's childhood.

We have all seen children who have had no childhood. The fun-loving element has been crushed out of them. They have been repressed and forbidden to do this and that so long that they have lost the faculty of having a good time. We see these little old men and women everywhere.

Children should be kept children just as long as possible. What has responsibility, seriousness, or sadness to do with childhood? We always feel indignant, as well as sad, when we see evidences of maturity, over-seriousness, care, or anxiety, in a child's face, for we know some one has sinned somewhere.

The little ones should be kept strangers to anxious care, reflective thoughts, and subjective moods. Their lives should be kept light, bright, buoyant, cheerful, full of sunshine, joy and gladness. They should be encouraged to laugh and to play and to romp to their hearts' content. The serious side of life will come only too quickly, do what we may to prolong childhood.

One of the most unfortunate things I know of is the home that is not illuminated by at least one cheerful, bright, sunny young face, that does not ring with the persistent laughter and merry voice of a child.

No man or woman is perfectly normal who is distressed or vexed by the playing of children. There was something wrong in your bringing up if it annoys you to see children romping, playing, and having a good time.

If there is a pitiable sight in the world, it is that of parents always suppressing their children, telling them not to laugh, or not to do this or that, until the little things actually lose the power of natural expression. Joy will go out of the life when continually suppressed.

The first duty we owe a child is to teach it to express itself, to fling out its inborn gladness and joy with as much freedom as the bobolink when it makes the whole meadow glad with its song. Laughter, absolute abandon, freedom, and happiness are essential to its health and success. These are a part of its nature. It can not be normal without them.

Suppression of the fun-loving nature of a child means the suppression of its mental faculties. The mind will not develop normally under abnormal conditions. There is every evidence in a child's nature that play is as necessary to its normal, complete development as food, and if the fun-loving faculties are suppressed the whole nature will be strangled, its expression stifled. Play is as necessary to the perfect development of a child as sunshine is to the perfect development of a plant. The childhood that has no budding and flowering, or only a partial unfolding of its petals, will have nothing but gnarled and pinched fruitage. The necessity for play in the very beginning of a child's development is shown by the fact that the instinct to play is so strong in all young life, including the entire animal kingdom.—Success.

Are Tears Justifiable?

How early babies learn the tyranny of weakness! Nobody can bear to see the little velvet face of a pretty baby puckered up for a cry. Even the most hard-hearted will rush to give a baby what he is crying for. And what is the result? A race of children who cry for everything they want.

Let not the woman who, at a moment's notice, can drop tears as Silas Wegg dropped into poetry be confounded with the woman who enjoys what we call "a good cry." Even the strongest women sometimes need the safety-valve of tears. These women, however, cry for the sake of their health and not for graft, and never, never do it in public.

A woman who needs and who takes a good cry is always a little ashamed of it and generally sneaks off by herself where she can even sob out loud without disturbing the neighbors, and where the luxury of two pocket handkerchiefs and red eyes and a storm-devastated countenance will not affect either the price of stocks or the happiness of the family.

In an hour, such a woman emerges radiant, smiling, refreshed and strong enough to take up the burden of life and stand straight under it.

With a weak and selfish woman, tears in public are a weapon for graft. With a strong-souled and unselfish woman, tears in private are a tonic, a safety-valve and a refuge.

Take your choice, you men who are thinking of marriage.—Delineator.

Lives That Are Poems.

"I believe—yes, I am sure," and as his eyes swept over the faces of the members of his Bible class, Judge Smith's own countenance glowed, "that each true life, no matter how lowly, is a poem."

Just then a bell gave the signal for the return of the class to the main room. So the judge was obliged to leave the thought with no farther explanation.

I nodded my head as I walked homeward. He was right. His own life is an epic—the story of a hero, to be known and loved of all men. Then I turned my eyes inward. Well, if my life is a poem, it must be a nursery jingle to which only the children love to listen.

I began to look about. With all my love for the poetic, I had never before understood that I was surrounded by living poems of various kinds.

There is dear old Deacon Wise—a calm, slow-moving, but stately psalm. His life has been one of hard work and of responsibility, but it is and always has been one of glad thanksgiving to God for benefits received and opportunities for service.

Ellen Graham's life is a ballad, a little old-fashioned, as if she belonged to a past generation. Yet the strains tell of honor and truth, of battles fought for the right, and of simple, wholesome pleasures. It is a quiet, uneventful existence, a song of the hearthstone, yet the world would be better were there more like it.

Her young niece, Lillian, is a song. It is one as sweet and pure and with the same glad lilt as that of the meadowlark. She lives as the wild bird sings, for pure joy, and in her life are expressed the trust and dependence of the bird's melody. May God bless the glad girl whose life is a song!

Then there is Mr. Long—a tragedy. Sorrow and disaster have come to him, and he has borne them with a grim dignity. His face, even the cadences of his voice are grave. He is, not sad and sorrowful, but tragical, and the notes of his life ring out, low and deep.

Mrs. Summers is a sonnet. She is beautiful and has the grace of high polish. In all things she conforms to fashion's law; when she shakes your hand it is done according to the last rule of society. You may call her somewhat artificial, but there are people who apply that term to the sonnet, at the same time admiring its beauty.

The life of the statesman, Martin Gray, is an ode. It may be a little stilted, but it is exalted in motive and stately in measure. You listen, and your pulses beat more steadily, and your heart grows stronger. Odes are rare, in this work-a-day world, but their music gives us new power for life's greater conflicts.

John Carson is an elegy. Gloom sits upon his brow, and he dwells in the shadow. Many years ago the grave closed over his heart, and it is only the exceptionally strong who can go on in the old way when the heart is gone. This elegy tells of the sweetness of a lost love, but in its message are no strains of the joy of victory over self.

It is said that hymns are sung more than any form of musical expression. So you will not smile when I tell you that my mother's life was a hymn, and that its memory comes to me, laden with the hymn's sweetness and power of consolation. "Nearer my God to Thee"—that was her life's message. Through days of trial and nights of pain the strains kept on, sometimes trembling a little but never breaking. And now it rings in my ears, faint because of the width of the River of Time, on the farther side of which she waits for me.—Epworth Herald.

The Hollyhock Ladies.

BY EMILY WILLIAMS.

Polly went upstairs to her mother's room and got four pins. They were two inches long and had big, white china heads. Then she went into the garden to pick hollyhocks and sweet peas. The tops of the pins made the flower dolls' heads. Polly put a sweet pea blossom on the pin and pushed it up close to the top; that made a lovely waist. Next she put on a hollyhock upside down; that made the skirt.

Soon she had four beautiful ladies all dressed in their party frocks. There was Mrs. Holly, who wore a red hollyhock skirt and a purple sweet pea waist. There was Miss Blanche Holly, in a white hollyhock skirt and a white waist. There was her sister, Pinkie Holly, all in pink, and last of all came Violet Holly, who had on a yellow skirt and a pale lavender waist.

Polly took them to the front steps and stuck the pins into the wood so that the ladies stood up very straight. There she left them while she went to prepare the banquet. A big nasturtium leaf was the tablecloth, and the napkins were little squares of grass. For dishes she picked the red poppy petals. One of these held the tiny white "cheeses" that grow behind the woodshed, in the other were the ends of nasturtium flowers, full of honey.

Just as it was all ready Polly's mamma called her in to supper, so Polly had to leave the hollyhock ladies to eat alone.—Exchange.

School Has Begun.

They cut the pants of Brother Jim
To fit the legs of Little Tim.
Ah me! 't was years ago when Bill
And I would chase and race and run
To reach the schoolhouse 'neath the hill
To pick out seats ere school begun.

Poor Little Tim! he had to pose
Upon the low front seat; his toes
Were then two inches from the floor.
His Brother Jim and Bill and I
Picked out our seats behind the door—
For reasons that were smooth and sly.

I see her yet, a prim, sedate,
Staid personage, who sat in state
Upon the little platform where
She ruled with ruler, and with grim
Determination she would stare
Into the eyes of Little Tim.

Poor Little Tim! he seemed to grow
In wisdom on the front seat row;
But us big fellows by the door
Were satisfied to peg away
And learn a little, or no more Than just enough to keep from play.

Upon the farm is Brother Jim—
He wears the cast-off pants of Tim.
Bill runs a rural barter store,
Yours truly 's on a sal'ry small—
The chap who couldn't reach the floor
Will run for county judge this fall.

Little "Cayuse."

In the first days of opening the route across the continent there flourished an old trapper called "Whipsaw." One day a Sioux Indian came to his cabin, carrying a Pawnee papoose which he had captured. The little thing was about two years old, and was half-starved and frozen. What became of the child is told by Mr. Henry Inman and Col. William F. Cody in their book, "The Great Salt Lake Trail."

The Sioux was anxious to trade his capture, and Whipsaw, who was as tender-hearted as he was rough-looking, gave a jackknife for the boy. Once in possession of the baby, he put soft moccasins on its little feet and a warm doeskin jacket on its back. Under the trapper's kindly care the little fellow throve and grew rapidly into a strong and handsome child.

Soon after his adoption the trapper took charge of an overland station on the line of the pony express, that famous means of carrying the Western mail. By the time the little Pawnee was five years old he was of great service to the old agent.

With an intense hatred of his own race, the boy inherited many of the red man's remarkable traits. His sense of hearing was marvelous. He could distinguish the distant footsteps of a bear or the thud of a horse's hoofs on the soft sod long before the trapper could make out a sound. He always gave warning when the pony express was coming either by day or night, and the men named him "Little Cayuse," because his ears were the first to catch the sound of the horse's approach.

In the middle of the night the little Pawnee would waken the trapper. "Cayuse, cayuse!" he would say. The rider who was to take the place of the one who was coming would jump up, saddle his horse, and be ready to relieve the express the moment it arrived. Little Cayuse's warning never failed.

The pony express was not the only approach of which the boy gave news. The Indian horse thieves soon found out they never met with success at the station where Little Cayuse lived. He was better than an electric battery. One cold night he woke Whipsaw at 12 o'clock.

"Is the express coming?" asked the trapper.

"No," answered the Pawnee lad.

"Well, go to sleep, then," said the trapper, but the little Indian shook his head.

"Long time no cayuse," he said.

Sure enough, the pony express was two hours overdue. Whipsaw woke up the men. Little Cayuse slipped out of the door and laid his ear to the ground.

"Heap cayuses," he announced. The men got ready their guns and waited. Before long a band of Sioux crept up to surprise the sleeping station. But the station was not sleeping, and the thieves were soon put to flight. Later, a mile from the cabin, the express rider was found dead.

The president of the company heard of Little Cayuse's action and sent him a beautiful rifle, built for his small hands. The boy was only six years old, but he had not had his gun long before he shot with it a great gray wolf.

How to Chat Well.

How comparatively few there are who can chat well, who can practice the art pleasantly, easily and entertainingly.

Chatting is not conversation—it is not mere talking. It is not speaking to a person on any special subject, it is not talking with a purpose, and yet it is not purposeless.

It is simply acquiring the art of touching lightly on a variety of everyday topics.

There must be an element of the unexpected in chatting, a slight uncertainty as to what will come next, and not a firm conviction that before the speaker quits there will be a dissertation on health or a special hobby.

Those who would chat well must have a sense of proportion; they must learn not to spend too much time over a mass of details that are really unimportant, and yet they must not ignore those details, however small, which serve to give realistic touches.

The essense of chatting, the most delightful form of conversation, is to pass lightly and naturally from one subject to another.—St. Louis Republic.

"Are you chief engineer of this concern?" asked an excited individual of the sub-editor. "No, sir, I'm not the engineer. I'm the boiler." And he proceeded to "boil down" six sheets of matter into a note of six lines.

A Guessing Game.

The Robbins children always had a game before they went to bed. The one which the children liked best of all just at present was "guessing things." Sometimes the article selected was cloth; then they would name all the things they could think of that were made of cloth. Then there would be a "gold" night, a "silver" night, a "brass" night, and now they were having a "wood" night. The game was at its height. Nearly everything wooden from a table to a toothpick had been mentioned, and still they did not want to give up; they never wanted to. There was always the plea: "Just one more, mother: O, please!"

Baby Rosalea was asleep in mother's arms. Genevieve's blue eyes were slowly closing, and Arthur's were roving anxiously around the room, trying to spy some wooden object which had not yet been mentioned.

"This must surely be the last one," mother was saying just as Uncle Dick popped his head in at the door.

"Come in, Uncle Dick!" invited Marion and Grace and Harold.

"Tell us something very strange that is made of wood, Uncle Dick; we've used up all the usual things," said Harold.

"Perhaps you have not thought to mention this," remarked Uncle Dick, as he took the evening paper out of his pocket and unfolded it!"

"I will venture to say that no one has touched the inner pages of this paper since the material of which it is made was a tree standing in some Canadian forest," Uncle Dick went on, as he spread the open paper upon his knee.

Then the children gathered around him, eager to hear what more could be said about a "newspaper tree."

Uncle Dick told them how the great logs are cut into small pieces by machinery, then dumped into another machine containing chemicals which convert them into pulp, and from there into great tubs in the paper mill, and then into several other machines which transform the pulp into huge rolls of paper. When these rolls are placed on presses and printed, the newspaper is made.

"We never should have thought of that by ourselves, should we, mother? Harold exclaimed when the game was over.

"No," answered his mother. "I think we shall have to ask Uncle Dick to join our games group."

"Will you, Uncle Dick? Will you?" chorused four eager voices. And Uncle Dick has promised to do so.

Hamburg Children.

A curious and pretty custom is observed every year in the city of Hamburg to celebrate a famous victory which was won by little children more than four hundred years ago. In one of the numerous sieges, Hamburg was reduced to the last extremity, when it was suggested that all the children should be sent out unprotected into the camp of the besiegers as the mute appeal for mercy of the helpless and innocent. This was done. The rough soldiery of the investing army saw with amazement, and then with pity, a long procession of little ones, clad in white, come out of the city and march boldly into their camp.

The sight melted their hearts. They threw down their arms, and, plucking branches of fruit from the neighboring orchards, they gave them to the children to take back to the city as a token of peace. This was a great victory, which has ever since been commemorated at Hamburg by a procession of boys and girls dressed in white, and carrying branches of the cherry tree.

—Union Gospel Songs, we believe, is the best combination song book on the market. By combination book we mean one adapted equally to regular Lord's day, Bible school, prayer meeting, Christian Endeavor and evangelistic services.

—Bible schools contemplating the establishment of a library should write for our catalogue. Therein we have the very best books for this purpose listed and classified according to the ages of the pupils the library is designed to serve.

—Our Bible school has more than doubled its membership since we have been using the Cross and Crown system—only six weeks.—G. D. King, Porterville, Cal.

We are selling these Cross and Crown souvenirs by the thousands. Descriptive circulars will be sent on application.

—It is well to delay no longer sending your order for 1908 Bible school literature. There is going to be a great rush of new business, and we will appreciate any help in distributing orders more evenly through November than to have the usual December crush. Samples and order blanks set on request.

—Any man knowing himself indebted to this House (or having a well-grounded suspicion to that effect) is requested to make immediate settlement. We wish to inaugurate a great clearance of all accounts of more than 90 days' standing that we may begin the new year prepared to more nearly "forget the things that are behind."

—With the help of Pastors Moffett, Ragland and Walters, of Springfield, Mo., our Brother G. H. Morrison recently introduced The Christian-Evangelist into 194 new homes in that city. Brethren wishing the assistance of this consecrated representative in making this paper a ministerial assistant in the homes of their people may write him at 3003 Pine Street, St. Louis, or care this office.

—More bracing weather is accelerating the speed with which Disciples all over the land are joining The Christian-Evangelist family. They are not coming singly, either, as the following weekly club list will show:

Peoria, Ill., H. F. Burns, pastor	3
Carterville, Mo.	4
Galena, Kan., D. M. Harris, pastor	5
Washington, C. H., O., J. J. Cole, pastor	9

Columbus, Kan., O. P. Cook, pastor	15
Chanute, Kan., G. W. Kitchen, pastor	20
Carthage, Mo., Newell L. Simms, pastor	26

—Just as our preachers exchange services for protracted meetings, they may exchange help in placing "The Christian-Evangelist" in the homes of all Disciples. This House will meet the expense of the visiting pastor. To illustrate, let B. T. Wharton go to Sedalia, Mo., and, accompanied by Pastor J. M. Rudy, canvass every Sedalia Disciple for his subscription to "The Christian-Evangelist." Then let Brother Rudy go to Marshall, Mo., and Brother Wharton will accompany him as he visits the Marshall Disciples with this same good proposition in view. Preachers all over the United States may form these combinations and very soon 100,000 Disciple homes will be helped into larger Christian usefulness by the visitations of this paper.

—We sell W. T. Moore's Preacher Problems for $1.50, and Man Preparing for Other Worlds for $2.00. We also have his latest book, of which G. A. Faris thus speaks in a recent issue of The Christian Courier of Dallas, Texas:

At Seventy-five and Other Poems.—Such is the title of a book of poems by the venerable and scholarly W. T. Moore, of Columbia, Mo., and printed by the Christian Publishing Company, of St. Louis. Many of Brother Moore's intimate friends were aware that he sometimes wrote poetry, but few knew the amount of it, and not all of the real merit of it. Several of these poems are of a very high order and would do credit to a man who was chiefly known as a poet. It is a book of 175 pages, and one of the most beautiful volumes we have seen in many a day. The printer and binder seemed imbued with the same high, refined sentiments that characterize the contents of the book. This book is a souvenir of Brother Moore's seventh-fifth birthday and in beauty is represents the spirit of its author. Many of these poems are helpful, uplifting, inspiring. It has a preface, written by Paul Moore, son of the author, and in every sentence there is the blending of filial love and gentlemanly modesty. The book does credit to every one who had to do with bringing it out. We learn that it cost $3 per volume to manufacture the book, but a special arrangement is made by which it will be sold for $2.

—For two new subscribers to The Christian-Evangelist we will give a ladies' imitation alligator-skin handbag, 5x 11 inches.

MOHAWK BRUSHES.

For one new subscriber to The Christian-Evangelist we will send two ebony-finish military hair brushes for gentlemen.

For two new subscribers, a 3-piece gentleman's set, consisting of two ebony-finish hair brushes and one cloth brush.

The Centennial Committee's Report

One of the most interesting reports presented at Norfolk was that of the Centennial Committee, read by the National Secretary, W. R. Warren. We print some of its salient points herewith:

The marvelous achievements of the Nineteenth Century must not be allowed to charm us into inaction. Two-thirds of the world is still unevangelized. Where one strong Church of Christ should embrace all the people and send forth the Gospel to the uttermost parts of the earth, three, four and a dozen are doing nothing, but neutralize one another's labors. The bitter partisanism of past generations has in many places yielded to indifference that is scarcely less deadly. The curse of the lukewarm and the barren has fallen upon most of the country churches. There is no remedy this side of unity.

The definite plea for liberty and union, restoration and loyalty, evangelism and education, most perfectly presented of old in the Declaration and Address, is unknown to most Christians and misunderstood by nearly all the rest. Ask the next man you meet. The majority are ignorant of all churches. Most of the rest live in the forty states where our strength is slight and more than half of them never heard that an effort has been made to restore the Christianity of Christ. Even our best informed and most kindly disposed neighbors have failed to grasp our purpose and plan. If they knew the plea they would accept it.

Meanwhile the finality of this plea's principles and the certainty of its methods have been clearly vindicated among its own adherents. Zealous efforts to make particular men popes, special interpretations authoritative, indifferent practices tests of fellowship and superficial distinctions ground for division have signally failed.

We celebrate the Centennial by restoring the Restoration. We must renew and redouble our threefold witness to the sufficiency and the necessity of Apostolic Christianity. By our words, our works and our lives we must testify.

Early and frequently every preacher should speak on the history, the principles and the progress of the movement back to Christ. Not only public sermon, but private conversation should return with primitive earnestness and constancy to the Gospel. Let the Centennial bring a restoration of the enthusiasm that reckoned the faith not a matter of taste or convenience, like architecture or dress, but the supreme concern of immortal souls. Tracts, books and newspapers should be circulated with tenfold zeal. What matter if an occasional page is lost? How many acorns fall from every oak that matures?

Mightier still than our words, our works must not only advance the cause of Christ, but testify to the truth. We shall not be heard at Pittsburg or elsewhere unless unmistakably we are doing the work of the Christ. Success in reaching the Centennial Aims for Bible Schools, Evangelism and Tithing; Missions, Education and Benevolence will not only directly accomplish our Redeemer's will and glorify His name, but it will command attention for the truth we preach and publish.

We have undertaken to organize normal Churches of Christ. We have striven to maintain a full, pure and symmetrical Christianity. Now we shall be worse than ridiculous unless we are among the foremost in every good work. What more natural than that the judge who first declared the liquor business unconstitutional should be simply a Christian? Of course, the territory in which Disciples are numerous comes into the union of states clear of legal partnership in the drink traffic. Well might we have been branded with insincerity or stupidity, or both, if we had not gone to the front in Christian Endeavor.

We confess that we have awakened tardily to the vital importance of both the Bible school and the union Bible school movement. We have given a few conspicuous leaders to the Sunday-School Association, but our representation in country, state and international conventions has been pitifully small. Here is the mightiest agency yet brought into the field for the accomplishment of the task at which we were set a hundred years ago. Here we can train all our people for efficient service. Here we can promote Christian union by its practice. Here we can transform bitter opponents and tolerant neighbors into devoted allies. Let us throw ourselves into the great Bible school revival without reserve. We have nothing to teach but the Bible and nothing to do but teach the Bible.

There must be definite, direct and aggressive organization, persistent, unanimous and enthusiastic labor for the accomplishment of the appointed aims. Organize your work. Work your organization.

The activities of the Centennial Bureau have included addresses in 23 states and national convention, 46 district conventions and rallies, 79 churches and 13 colleges. The enlistment of tithers has reached 91. The circulation of leaflets was 215,000 and 45,000 circular letters were sent out. Numerous articles were sent to our newspapers. The secretary traveled 33,734 miles.

At our request the brethren in Canada elected J. M. Van Horn of Toronto to serve on the General Centennial Committee. The Churches of Christ in Greater Pittsburg have appointed a large committee of representative men which has been organized in many subcommittees. Thorough preparation is being made for all the local interests of the Centennial Convention. Fifty thousand delegates are expected.

Splendid progress is being made in building and paying for church houses. We have learned that comfort and beauty are not incompatible with spirituality, and that the best tool is not too good for God's work. In another hundred years we may develop enough sense of solidarity to enable the gathering of reliable statistics.

Four Bible schools, North Tonawanda, N. Y., Santa Barbara, Cal., Bellefontaine, Ohio, and Bolengi, Africa, have reached the Centennial Aim of "All the Church and as Many More in the Bible School." As all the Bible school comes into the Church this aim advances before it. It can never be outgrown. Five thousand full course graduates in teacher-training were asked this summer for 1909. Almost the whole number has already been definitely promised.

Current Events

Close of Hague Conference.

The second Peace Conference at The Hague closed its four months' session on Friday, October 18. There is a general feeling that the session was a failure and that it accomplished nothing. It is true that it did not do all that it might have done, but progress in the settlement of a vast problem like this must always be slow. If governments learn within the next hundred years how to dispense with war, they will be doing very well. The conference, simply because it was a conference and not a legislative assembly, or even a court, could do nothing but talk. Even in the matter of talk about international peace it is prepared to report progress rather than to announce results. The establishment of an international high court of justice was recommended, and the plan will doubtless be put into effect as soon as the nations involved can agree upon some satisfactory method of appointing judges. The general principle of compulsory arbitration was approved, especially with reference to disputes growing out of differences of interpretation of treaty agreements. There was almost unanimous agreement to the proposition that no nation should attempt to collect debts by force until the claim had been submitted to arbitration. A number of resolutions were adopted looking to the more humane conduct of necessary wars and the prevention of injury to commerce and to neutral nations. No government is bound by the resolutions of the peace conference except in so far as it may hereafter accept the principles and rules which it has adopted. But the fact of the adoption of such resolutions by a representative body of statesmen from forty-four nations, renders it highly probable that they will be generally accepted and will become a part of the law of nations. On the day of the final session of the conference a resolution was adopted authorizing the sending of the following telegram to the President of the United States: "The delegates to the second Peace Conference, having finished their work and remembering with gratitude the initial proposition made for its convocation by the President of the United States, present to him their respectful homage."

The President at Vicksburg.

The President has finished his inspection of the lower Mississippi and his bear hunt and has returned to Washington. On the way home he delivered an important address at Vicksburg. Departing from his usual custom, he made a definite promise as to what he would recommend to Congress in his next message. He proclaimed himself an advocate of the plan for a comprehensive scheme of improvement of the Mississippi River by the federal government. There must be a substantial system of dykes and levees which will protect the alluvial lands adjacent to the river as thoroughly as Holland is protected by her dykes. "In my next message to Congress," he said, "I shall advocate as heartily as I know how that the Congress now elected shall take the first step to bring about that deep channel-way and the attendant high and broad levee system, which will make of these alluvial bottoms the richest and most populous and most prosperous agricultural land, not only in this nation, but on the face of the globe." The great danger, as he truly said, is that the plan will be allowed to degenerate into a scramble for little improvements for particular sections. The zeal of congressmen to secure appropriations to be spent in their respective districts must not be allowed to interfere with the effective treatment of the problem as a whole. It is not a question of improving a harbor here and a bit of river there, still less of spending money in this or that congressman's district for the sake of temporarily putting a little more currency in circulation among his constituents, but of planning and executing a comprehensive system of works which will result in making the river the great interior waterway which it ought to be, and in freeing the people who live near it from the fear and danger of annual inundations.

Arguments for Third Term.

A thousand-dollar prize has been offered by Senator Bourne, of Oregon, for the best written argument to prove that Roosevelt ought to be nominated for a third term. Senator Bourne does not call it a third term, but a "second elective term," but we all know what he means. The question is whether he should retire after seven and a half years in the presidential office, or should extend his period of service to eleven and a half years. Eleven and a half years is so little short of twelve that perhaps one does not err seriously in considering that it amounts to three terms. Senator Bourne wishes the contestants to set themselves to the demonstration of the following propositions: First, that the sovereign people, and not Mr. Roosevelt, should and will decide who his successor shall be; second, that Mr. Roosevelt can not decline to serve without making his own private and selfish preferences paramount to the will of the public and the wisdom of the party; third, that, in view of the fact that the business interests of the country will be damaged to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars by the loss of confidence which would follow his retirement from the presidency, Theodore Roosevelt must and shall be elected for another term. The award is to be made on March 15, 1908. It may be taken for granted that no essay will be seriously considered in the competition if its author is so impertinent as to refer to the fact that Mr. Roosevelt has some dozens of times declared that he would not again be a candidate to succeed himself. The last point in the above outline will be a difficult one to prove. It is hard to prove that any man is the only man who can do a given thing. It is hard to prove because it is almost never true. It is always possible to find a successor to the indispensable. The "Self-Made Merchant" was not far wrong when he said: "I never had an indispensable man in my establishment. If I had, I would discharge him."

Educational Endowments.

An endowment of $5,000,000 has been left by the will of the late Robert N. Carson, of Philadelphia, for the establishment of a school for girls. The plan of the proposed school closely follows the lines of Girard College for boys, except that the teaching of religion, instead of being prohibited, is explicitly provided for. The school will receive only white girls both of whose parents are dead. The age of admission will be from six to ten, and they will be kept until they are eighteen. The fundamental doctrines of Christianity are to be taught, but the school is to be under the control of no denomination. The bequest becomes available on the death of the widow. A bequest amounting to about three million dollars has been left to Swarthmore College, a prominent institution near Philadelphia, controlled by the Friends, on the condition that the college abandon all participation in intercollegiate athletics. There seems to be no way to curtail the liberty of testators to make foolish bequests and foolish conditions. The abolition of intercollegiate athletic contests may be a very good thing. We are much inclined to think it is. In many colleges we are sure it would be a good thing. But it is none the less a foolish condition to put in a will. With all due respect to the testators in this case, it is obviously true that a maiden lady of advanced years and no very intimate knowledge of the inner workings of educational institutions cannot prepare plans and specifications for running a college without great risks of running it wrong. Many an institution has been similarly hampered by the weight of a dead hand. If, as has been facetiously suggested, a school for testators should be established, a good part of the curriculum ought to be devoted to teaching confidence in carefully chosen boards of trustees.

AFTER THE CONVENTION

[Editorial.]

Prophecy has been turned into history. The Christian-Evangelist, in the midst of war and rumors of war, prophesied a great, harmonious and epoch-making convention at Norfolk. It was all that. It was great in numbers when the location is considered. The enrollment reached 2,250, and a great many failed to register. It was great in the reports of work accomplished, and in its aims and plans for work to be done the coming year. It was great in the character of the regular addresses on the program, none of which was commonplace. As a series of addresses they have never been excelled, if equalled. Some of the voluntary speeches rose to the height of real oratory. It was great in its enthusiasm and its all-pervading optimism, which, after all, is only another name for faith in God and confidence in the truth of our position and its adaptation to the needs of the world to-day. When a religious body ceases to believe that it has a divine mission in the world, and turns away from its original purpose, it ceases to be an aggressive power for human good. Dr. Henry Barrows said to one of our brethren that the Disciples of Christ were the only religious body in this country known to him which was satisfied with its position. He did not mean, of course, that we are satisfied with our attainments or achievements, which would have been a severe and unjust criticism, but that we are satisfied with the ideals for which we are contending. This must be reckoned among our most valuable assets.

The harmony of the convention was not the result of side-tracking questions which have been the subjects of discussion among us. It was the harmony of deep convictions, strengthened by much thought and illumined by the light of recent experiences. There was no desire to side-step to avoid facing a vital issue concerning which there might be differences of opinion. It was felt that the time had fully come when the brethren must voice their sentiments on certain controverted points which affect our work in a practical way. It was a surprise to many that there was such unanimity of sentiment among those who are leaders in our work, and who are making our history. But this was exactly what was expected, and it was on this belief in the practical unanimity of thought among the men and women who are facing the future that we based our prophecy of a harmonious convention.

But we have said it was an epoch-making convention. Perhaps some would prefer to call it an epoch-marking convention, on the ground that conventions only register decisions and judgments which have been previously wrought out in discussion and in the silent processes of prayer and meditation. Waiving that distinction, it must be confessed by all careful observers, that at Norfolk, not of course without previous preparation, but as the result of much prayer and serious thought, it was given to us, in convention assembled, to see some things with a clearness of vision which must necessarily influence our future course. In other words, if things should go on among us in the future just as in the past, we would not be obedient to the heavenly vision as it was given to us to see it, at the Norfolk convention. May we venture to mention some of these things which stand out with increased distinctness in the light of the Norfolk convention?

1. The claim that it is morally wrong to receive and devote to religious uses money from individuals identified with corporations whose business methods are believed to be unlawful and unjust, was distinctly and unanimously repudiated. This was due to the fact that the proposition to refuse such gifts and to return those already received involves a very serious moral responsibility, namely, that of preventing a man who feels he ought to devote a part of his fortune to missions, from doing so, and thereby compelling him, so far as we can do so, to devote his wealth to selfish and unworthy ends. A man who does not see the unwarranted responsibility involved in such action has not looked below the surface of the question. The concession, on grounds of expediency, to brethren who object to the solicitation of gifts from this source, to make no further solicitation, was a beautiful exhibition of Christian charity on the part of the brethren, but it remains to be seen in what spirit this settlement of the matter will be met. But in any event there will be no further effort made to compel the executive committee to return Mr. Rockefeller's gifts, nor will the executive committee solicit further gifts from him unless instructed so to do. "It seemed good to the Holy Spirit," and to the brethren assembled in convention, that this basis of agreement be affirmed.

2. Newspaper popes are discredited and repudiated, no matter through what journal they may seek to exercise their papal function of deciding questions of faith and morals, making and unmaking preachers, dictating the appointment and dismissal of college professors, controlling missionary societies, and otherwise regulating the operations of the brotherhood. Preachers, colleges, missionary secretaries and other officials have issued their declaration of independence from all newspaper tyranny, and they are, and of right ought to be, free and independent agents, under Christ, for the advancement of his kingdom. It would be difficult to exaggerate the importance of this change. The Norfolk convention said to our missionary, educational and benevolent boards, and their officers, "Go ahead, and prosecute the work committed to your hands, as Christ's freemen, and we will stand by you, and not a hair of your head shall be singed by newspaper opposition." What right have we to put padlocks on the mouths of our missionary and other secretaries, so that they are not supposed to have any opinion on any living question of the day?

This is the meaning of the action in relation to the committee of twenty-five to consider the propriety of a publication society. What that committee will recommend we do not know, nor does anybody else, but we are sure that their action will look to the larger freedom and greater efficiency of our missionary societies, and the greater unity of the brotherhood.

3. The basic principles of our plea for unity received great emphasis at Norfolk, and the two great key-words that rang out in addresses and sermons were Liberty and Loyalty in order to unity. The response to the overture to a closer union from the interchurch conference was itself the most important union note sounded in any of our conventions, as we never before had the opportunity of placing ourselves on record in relation to so wide a movement toward unity. While this was not the action of any missionary society, it was the action of the people making up all our missionary societies in so far as they were represented at Norfolk, and it was a magnificent representation.

4. As a result of this superb emphasis on the fundamental principles of Christian union, and especially of the endorsement of the plan of working together with other religious bodies as far as it is practicable now to do so, for the accomplishment of common ends and aims, there is certain to be more practicing of Christian union than we have hitherto had. The splendid address of Dr. Stackhouse, from the great Canadian Northwest, pleading for reinforcements from the Disciples of Christ to co-operate with the Baptists in winning that vast region to Christ, together with the speech of his co-worker, our Brother Romig, made a thrilling episode in the convention and made us all feel that not simply in some far distant time, but even to-day, we may begin to put into actual practice the plea for unity which we are making. We can not doubt that this union movement in Northwestern Canada is going to powerfully affect the work of union in the United States and elsewhere. In view of these facts, we feel justified in saying that the Norfolk convention marks a distinct step forward toward the realization of the great animating purpose of this reformation—the unity of the people of God.

5. Finally we have entered upon an era, not only of larger liberty in Christ, but of larger works in his name. Old standards of giving and of living will not suffice to meet present and future demands. "New occasions teach new duties." The "new occasions" loomed up before us at Norfolk, like mountain peaks, and we came down from the holy heights of that convention girded anew for the larger tasks that lie before us.

Convention Notes and Comments

All honor to the plucky little church at Norfolk and to its plucky pastor, J. T. T. Hundley, for their faith and courage in tackling the task of playing the role of hosts to one of our national conventions, and for the satisfactory manner in which they discharged their onerous duties. Every possible provision was made for the comfort of delegates by the various committees, and Brother Hundley was always in evidence at critical moments, with a quieting or assuring word, or a necessary announcement, and he was always heard and heeded.

The music of the convention has seldom, if ever, been excelled. Hackleman and his great chorus was supplemented by the Netz sisters, and by a few solos from Miss Una Dell Berry, of Lafayette, Ind., who charmed us with her fine voice. Brother Hackleman makes a fine chorus leader.

The convention was dignified by the presence of such veterans as Prof. C. L. Loos, W. T. Moore, J. B. Briney, D. R. Dungan [disguised in a smooth face], B. M. Blount, Prof. Jabez Hall, D. R. Lucas, Dr. R. T. Walker and a number of others less venerable in years, but wearing their crown of gray. May the older men among us never lose their interest in our conventions, nor cease to attend them while health and strength permit. These men rendered valuable service to the convention, not by their presence alone, but several of them by their action as well.

Referring to the meeting of the Board of Managers of the Foreign Society, and the peaceable adjustment of the Rockefeller question, it is reported that Brother Phillips remarked, after the meeting was over, that he knew when Bro. W. T. Moore proposed a season of prayer, following the reports, that it was all up with his resolution to return the Rockefeller money, saying: "You can't reason with a prayer-meeting. There is no logic in it!" It must be confessed that the prayers which were offered by the brethren in that meeting would be pretty hard to overcome. The logic of the heart is mightier than the logic of the head, but when the two are united they are truly invincible.

There are brethren who insist that the most humorous thing in the convention, though it was wholly unconscious humor, was the statement of a brother at the federation meeting, that we should cease this advocacy of closer unity and fraternity with our brethren in other religious bodies on the ground that it would be an "apple of discord" among us! That a plea for a closer union with other Christians should become an "apple of discord" among those whose specialty is to plead for such union, was indeed a fine specimen of unconscious humor, and the brother perpetrating it never cracked a smile!

Every convention reminds us that a little instruction is needed on the ethics or at least the aesthetics of applause. It is a good thing, no doubt, for a convention to have some way of expressing its approval of any sentiment uttered by a speaker. It helps to put the speaker and his audience en rapport, and makes the sentiments of the speaker the sentiments of the convention. There ought to be some discrimination, however, between what is funny or ludicrous, and what is regarded as worthy of endorsement. But the chief offense against good taste, as it seems to us, is the applause following a tender, devotional solo or quartette. It is this that shocks the sensibilities of those who think of such songs as worship and consecration, and not as exhibitions of vocal excellence.

The supreme moment of devotion, when all hearts seemed to flow together in tenderest emotion, was at the great communion service in the hall, on Sunday afternoon, when Miss Una Dell Berry sang so impressively that sweet and touching solo, entitled "Crucified." The whole service was admirably planned and carried out, and the absence of any sermon was no defect in a meeting whose chief attraction was the Lord's Supper, in which the Christ himself would speak to our hearts through this institution of his own appointment. It is always an inspiring scene to witness when brethren and sisters from all parts of the Union and from lands beyond the sea sit down together in the presence of the uplifted Christ to have fellowship with one another and with him in this sweet memorial service. People go away from such a meeting with a new and deeper meaning of "the communion of saints," and feeling that they have had a foretaste of what it will be when all the saints of God get home and sit down together at the marriage supper of the Lamb and under his banner of love.

The Norfolk churches gave our ministers great audiences and a most appreciative hearing on Lord's day, and we do not doubt that they received impressions of the religious movement which the convention there represented, which were entirely new to many of them and which will give our cause a standing and influence not only in Norfolk but in all the region round about that it never had before.

It was a matter of general regret in the convention that our beloved Brother E. L. Powell, after delivering a powerful sermon in the forenoon to a great audience, in the Armory Hall, was taken ill with a severe pain in his side, which rendered him unable to attend any further meetings of the conventions. He was soon made comfortable in his hotel, however, where many of his brethren visited him. We hope he will soon recover his usual health. At the same place in the evening another great sermon was delivered by C. S. Medbury, of Des Moines, Ia. Brother Medbury was appointed to this duty after his arrival on the ground, but did not fail to meet the high expectations of those who heard him. There were good reports of the sermons from all the churches.

In a series of addresses of so much excellence, it might seem invidious to give any one a special meed of praise, but if seems proper to refer to one whose unique purpose was to do honor to our heroic dead. Never in our knowledge was this done more admirably than in the splendid address of J. H. MacNeill of Winchester, Ky. He made us all feel what a sublime thing it is to live and labor under the inspiration of faith for the extension of God's kingdom, and to die at one's post. The names of G. L. Wharton, who died in India, and Miss Ella Ewing, who gave up her life in Africa, were listed with the great missionary heroes and heroines, who have not counted their lives too great an offering to make for the redemption of the heathen world.

Some of the mottoes which looked down upon us from the walls of the hall in which the convention met, were: "A gift this year from every Disciple"; "Every preacher preaching"; "50,000 Pittsburg 1909"; "Not less than my income's tithe to God"; "Each one win one this year"; "All the church and as many more in the Bible school"; "Daily worship in every home"; "Mission buildings $250,000"; "$10,000,000 increase in assets." These and others, with the missionary maps, were constantly preaching to the people through their eyes.

The spirited and good-natured contest between New Orleans and Topeka for the next convention was largely spoiled by being introduced at the hour of adjournment. It should have gone over. As it was, Brother Briney got "the drop" on the Sunflower brethren in a ten-minute speech for New Orleans, which carried everything before it, and Brother Taylor, of New Orleans, nailed it down. Brother Finch made a brave attempt to save the day, but it was too late. An adjournment was the only hope, and that was spurned by both parties. It was a graceful thing in Finch to move to make it unanimous for New Orleans. Now, let us all join hands to make the New Orleans convention a banner gathering.

One of the most notable addresses at the convention was that of Dr. Stackhouse, superintendent of Baptist missions in Northwestern Canada. He believes in Christian union, not as a theory merely, but in practicing it just as far as possible. He reports that the Baptists and Disciples of Christ in Northwestern Canada are actually uniting in Christian work, and where there are groups of Disciples and Baptists in the same community, they are uniting in forming local Churches of Christ, and that they will continue to do so regardless of what the mission boards say or do on the subject. Keep your eye on the Canadian Northwest.

George H. Combs was a good presiding officer. He took that action which we hoped other presidents would take—he insisted on the doors of the convention hall being closed while speaking was going on. This prevented a great deal of the usual visiting and conflicting hub-bub. Brother Combs believes in doing all things decently and in order, and the convention is much indebted for his firm stand in controlling the situation. A large audience listened to his fine presidential address. His theme was one for the hour, and he fearlessly proclaimed his thought, not only upon the calling of the minister but also upon some of the things that have been troubling the brotherhood. We present his speech in this issue of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Brother Combs received a telegram just before the session for the delivery of the presidential address, announcing the death of a close friend of the family. This occasioned the speedy return of Mr. and Mrs. Combs and Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Long to their home city—Kansas City, Mo.

Editor's Easy Chair.

The Easy Chair's record of the itinerary of our special party returning from Norfolk ended, last week, at Washington—the national Mecca for all politicians, and the goal of ambition for so many thousands of young Americans who hope some day to sit in one of the halls of Congress, or perhaps be a resident of the White House at the other end of the avenue. We had one day and evening for sightseeing in and about our national capital. A party of us chartered a special automobile, and under the direction of a guide and of Bro. J. A. Scott, a resident member, and agent of The Christian-Evangelist, took in the principal sights and historic buildings of the city, in the forenoon, including the Corcoran Art Gallery, where we spent an hour enjoying some of the great paintings by some of the world's famous artists. As the President was out bear-hunting, we made no formal call at the White House, but passed through the grounds and through the rooms of the lower story, where policemen are stationed to see that no harm is done to the premises. We were impressed, as never before, with the greatness and with the beauty of our national capital. It is called, by many, the most beautiful city in the world, and this praise is, perhaps, no exaggeration. But what massive structures are these great national buildings! What magnificent streets, with their double rows of shade trees and their palatial residences! The Congressional Library, which we visited at night when it was lighted up, is a marvel of architectural genius and of decorative skill. Architects, painters, sculptors, designers and decorators, all seem to have been given a free hand to embody their most beautiful conceptions. Other great buildings of scarcely less beauty and magnificence are in process of erection near the Capitol for the accommodation of our senators and representatives, and these are being connected with the Capitol by subways. How the Father of his Country, who selected this sight for the capital of the nation, would open his eyes in wonder if he were permitted now to revisit the city which he founded!

In the afternoon of Saturday our party visited Mount Vernon, going the quicker route by trolley car down the south bank of the Potomac through Alexandria, rather than by the more picturesque but slower route— by the little steamer on the Potomac. It was a glorious autumn afternoon to saunter through the grounds and among the great trees which make up the estate of Mount Vernon, the home of Washington. One can not but admire the taste which selected this spot on the banks of the broad Potomac, amid the lordly trees of the forest, with a commanding view up and down the river, and across into Maryland, for a home. How sweet it must have seemed to the great general and statesman, after he had led the American army to victory, had organized the government and had served eight years as president, to retire from the strife and turbulence of public life to the quiet and restfulness of such a home as this here on the river-side! Although Washington is said to have been the richest man in the United States at the time of his death, this old-fashioned building, in spite of its ideal location, would hardly be occupied by a man of wealth to-day, with its little, quaint, cramped rooms and windows; and yet there are not wanting the evidences of wealth and culture in the furniture and belongings of the place. We noted much change since a former visit, which we made during the Centennial Exposition at Philadelphia, in 1876. The Mount Vernon Association, which has been formed since, is keeping the place in better repair. One can not but feel more vividly, as he walks over these consecrated grounds and looks upon these historic buildings, the greatness and lasting power of a noble character. Washington himself has passed on, but, after all, how much of him remains with the country he loved and served! Not only is here the home in which he lived, the bed in which he died, the tomb in which his body rests, and close by the capital which bears his name, and the towering monument, "simple, silent and severe," which perpetuates his memory, but what is vastly more, here is this great, free, independent Republic, which, under God, owes its existence more to Washington than to any other human agency. And all this he wrought, not so much by his genius and brilliancy, as by the true nobility of his character.

Of course, Lord's day morning found us in our Washington churches. Several of us attended the Garfield Memorial Church, where, for a generation, Bro. F. D. Power has ministered. We might pause here again to remark on the greatness of character, but we shall not embarrass our modest staff correspondent by any eulogy, for he is known and loved by us all. The morning sermon was delivered by Bro. W. T. Moore, one of our party, who, though suffering from a cold, preached to us a helpful sermon from Isaiah, without stopping to tell us whether there were one or two Isaiahs. Younger ministers will please take notice. There were in the audience that morning visitors from various parts of the country, and it was a delightful communion service which followed the sermon, bringing us all into closer fellowship at the foot of the cross. After dismission, the visitors were shown the pew which the lamented Garfield, with his family, used to occupy during his presidency, and in the years preceding while he was serving his country in the House of Representatives. This church has been a mother church, sending out daughters, one of which, the Ninth Street Church, has perhaps outgrown the mother. George A. Miller ministers there now, and was just beginning a series of evangelistic services. At 4 o'clock in the evening our train left the city for St. Louis, and we were glad to find that we still had a sleeper filled with the delegates of our special party. In the evening we had our service of sacred song, thus bringing the convention spirit back with us across the Alleghenies. The daylight ride from Cincinnati to St. Louis showed a marked change in the forests since we went over the same road on our way to Norfolk, for Jack Frost, the autumnal artist, had been at work meantime painting all the trees and shrubs in the gorgeous colors of which he is master.

Thus ended one of the most pleasant, interesting and inspiring trips we have ever made. In beauty and magnificence of scenery, in historic associations, in congenial company and ideal weather, it would be difficult to duplicate it anywhere on this continent. Nor was there an accident or incident on the entire journey to mar the pleasure of the trip. And certainly no convention we have ever attended has sent its delegates and visitors home with higher hopes for the future of our religious movement. Never have we witnessed greater enthusiasm on the part of our young men, many of whom said to us: "We can now go home and work for the Master with a hope for the larger success of our reformatory movement in the future which we have never felt before." Older men shared in this feeling of optimism as they were assured by the action of this convention that our movement is not to be sidetracked from its original purpose, but is to remain true to the spirit of the fathers whose all-controlling desire and purpose was to promote the unity of the people of God. To lose the spirit of unity and hold only to a mere formula of words, out of which have gone all life and meaning, would be a calamity incalculable. This would be even worse than to maintain the spirit of unity without due regard to its essential conditions. We thank God for the evidence that we are to maintain both the spirit of unity, and the New Testament conditions of unity, sacrificing neither the one nor the other, while we trust God to bring to pass, in his own time and way, his great purposes concerning his Church and kingdom.

Now that we have come down from the mountain top, where we caught a vision of the transfigured Christ, shall we not in his name and strength move forward confidently and courageously along the lines of progress which seem to stand out so distinctly before us? Our missionary, educational and benevolent work should be enlarged, our non-co-operative forces enlisted, our evangelistic work deepened and widened, our Bible schools enlarged and improved, our ministry recruited and reconsecrated, the spiritual life of the churches deepened, so that under Christ's leadership we may go forward to a year of unexampled progress in the work of the kingdom of God.

THE PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS AT THE NORFOLK CONVENTION

We are in convention assembled to consider the greatest problem that has ever pressed upon the Christian heart. The evangelization of America is at once the most stupendous task and the most thrilling opportunity that has ever been thrust upon the Church of God. If our convention deliverances for half a century have been more than the mere jingle of pious words; if our speeches have clinked not with the weightless coin of shallow rhetoric but with bone-bare truths; if, as we have said, our country is to dominate the nations and to Christianize America is to Christianize the world; then, at whatever cost, we must set ourselves to this mighty program of Christian endeavor. This is the supreme mission of the Church. For this in God it lives and moves and has its being. Impressiveness of material equipment, appealingness of colorful service, correctness of theological thinking—all this is but the prologue to the imperial missionary theme.

Here is the sovereign test of values whether of organization, sermon, Christian program; that which ministers to evangelism is of worth, that which fails in this ministry fails in all.

This, too, is the measure of accomplishment. With whatever else that church or sermon or seminary or biblical criticism or theological system that gives no mighty inspirations to missionary activity shall come to naught; but if it quicken the missionary spirit it will win, and to essay to check its progress were as futile as the child's protesting palms to stay the advancing tides.

Let us not, however, be the dupe of a word. There is evangelism and evangelism. The term in popular use stretches all the way from the quickening of Felix Adler-moralities to the spasm and hysteria of a camp meeting. What then precisely do we mean by the word? In large and in brief, the bearing to the world of the story of Jesus with the stout insistence that men must live his life. This is avowedly a plea for "applied Christianity," a Christianity of conduct, a Christianity of the every days. The main trouble with Christians is that they are not Christians. Our religion hangs like Mahomet's coffin—in the air. The sobering truth confronts us that there will never be any mighty effort to take our Christianity to others until we have a better brand to take. It is the supreme weakness of the Church that its Christianity is conceived primarily in the terms of doctrine or emotion and only secondarily in the terms of life. For one I am not afraid of the phrase "ethical revival," for it is just this we need—a revival of business and political and social moralities inspired by Gospel story—a revival that shall make of the very name Christian a synonym of honor, of straight-going, of fair dealing, of justice of man toward man.

To Christianize America we have got first to Christianize Christians. We must get religion out of intellectual cold-storage, out of the thin-misted swaths of the emotional, out of the far-wreathed cloud of the unreal, out of the mummied bandage of the dogmatist, out of the brain-benumbing atmosphere of the ecclesiastical, out of the simpering masquerade of Sundayishness, and into the bone and blood of a real man in a real world. Christianity is both creed and deed but the creed is the root and the deed is the flower and the value of the root is in the beauty of the flower. Christianity is both conduct and emotion, but the conduct is the port and the emotions the winds and tides that sweep the good ship in. Our need then, in a word, is an evangelism that shall go not only wider but deeper; that shall not only count but weigh its converts; that shall produce a type of Christian life so entrancingly beautiful that under its relentless spell the world shall press forward to Christian altars seeking the secret of Jesus.

America waits for such an evangelization. But the way? In all modesty of deliverance I think we have missed the way. We have blundered in that we have put the emphasis upon money rather than the man. We have forgotten the divine order, "Pray ye the Lord of the Harvest that he send laborers"—reapers, mark ye, and not the reapers' hire. Money is not primary, but man; the worker, and not the wage. Yet confessedly our convention emphasis is upon dollars. The constituency of our societies is determined by dollars. The success of a secretary is measured in dollars. The appeal to our enthusiasm is dollars. The chief wrestlings of our boards are with dollars. Our very convention mottoes have to do with dollars. Year after year our assembly slogans are so many dollars for the missionary cause. Dollar marks are on our speeches and our programs and our prayers.

George H. Combs, pastor of the Independence Boulevard Christian Church, Kansas City, Mo., and President of the American Christian Missionary Society, 1906-1907.

Our aims are high, but our blunders are well-nigh tragical. So much have we dwelt upon the "means" of gospel support that we have forgotten that men themselves are "means." We need—above all else we need—a new emphasis, an emphasis upon the preacher and not the preacher's pay. Let us come together five thousand strong, not chiefly to consider dollars and their getting, but to lift up our hands to heaven with the heart's yearning prayer, "God send us men." In the stead of fast-wearing mottoes, "$1,000,000 for missions," let us sound a definite call for a definite number of evangelists in a definite time. Fling out a mere money motto and you have but set to grinding a great machine; sound the trumpet call, "Ten thousand of our young men for the ministry of Jesus Christ," and you have stirred the sleeping pulses of a brotherhood and ushered in a new crusade. Let us work and pray for money, but, above all else, let us work and pray for reapers in the whitening harvest fields.

This should be the burning question before the churches represented in this convention. Busying themselves as they must about the matter of revenues, they must not forget their divine calling to become the spiritual mothers of missionary sons. Let them know that the missionary spirit of a church is to be determined not only by its gifts of dollars, but by its gifts of men. Let them know that their "offering" is not chiefly the offering of money, but the offering of their sons and daughters upon the altar of the missionary cause. Let the telegrams to our papers tell no longer solely of money, but let them read like this: "Yesterday the churches of Louisville made their offering to missions. Fifty of our young men consecrated themselves to the ministry of Jesus Christ, and to-day are trustingly singing, 'We'll go where you want us to go, dear Lord; we'll say what you want us to say.'" Ah, that were almost to usher in the millennial days!

And this is the way to enlarge our missionary treasuries. When our churches give their men they will give their money. Let the evangelist come forth a real preacher of the cross of Christ and the dollars will pour into the treasury for his support. Given the enthusiasm that creates an army and you have the enthusiasm that will create the commissary department. Given a consecration that will send sons to the battle's front and you have a consecration that will also give the staff of bread and weave in trembling looms garments of wear and sheltering tent. For as surely as the night follows in the footsteps of the day, so surely will a church that sends forth its sons to missionary service provide the means for their support.

But in the divine as in the human warfare, mere bulk will not suffice. The effectiveness of an army is in its quality—no less than in its numbers. We need more preachers—of a kind. God's army must be of selectest men. What then are the distinguishing marks of the ministry we need? Only in partial and outline way can there be an answer to this question. Some things are taken for granted—unlike the western church that in newspaper advertisement for a preacher after lengthily setting forth the qualifications all seekers for the place must have, gratuitously added, "he must be a man of good morals." In this address it is taken for granted that the preacher must at least be civilized and decent—it is presumed that he does not get drunk, that he reads his Bible, that he prays.

But the ideal preacher—the ideal at once an inspiration and a goal—What is he like? I have seen an ideal preacher. Physically he was a perfect specimen of manhood, blemishless as the priests before the altars of old. Mentally he was richly dowered, every faculty full-orbed and vital with almost cosmical range. Spiritually he was gifted with rich insights and above all had bested the beast within, having wrought into his own life all the power and all the beauty that burned and sang in his heaven-sent speech. His voice was God's perfect instrument, full with the rich massings of the organ, sweet with all the softness of a thousand summers, and when he spoke, that voice that held all the laughter and all the tears of men, went to my soul's soul. He was an incomparable orator—no vulgar trickster beating words into froth of rhetoric, but moving men to action by the dynamic of a passionate plea. How masterful he was, how sun-like, how clothed in all purple royalties of speech, how throned his word and life in the heart of the people. Alas, that he lived only in dreams! But though the real will never blossom into the ideal, for the poorest and weakest of us all there shall stand some excellencies we may hope to put into our lives.

What then are some of the marks of the ministry we need? To begin: A ministry called of God. Spite of all past perversions this truth remains unshakable, that no man is fit for the ministry who has not received to that ministry the sovereign call of heaven. For who are we that without credentials shall stand as the embassadors of the King? Who are we that without the divine mandate shall carry the message of the cross? Who are we that without a call shall stand in that sacred place above which rainbows flame and the heavenly hosts one chorus sing—a Christian pulpit? Who are we, aye, who are we, that would snatch with our own fingers the living coals from the altars of God? Back of all, first of all, there must be the imperial sanction of Heaven. From out the heart of the unseen, clear, clamant, compelling, must come the voice that bids me preach. In the still large hours, when the Eternal Spirit broods as a felt thing over a pulseless world there must come in the dream that is truer than thought the vision of the Ineffable Beauty, and in that hour of vision the divine anointment and the consciousness that the soul is chosen of Heaven to declare the gospel of the grace of God.

This call of God is the call of power. Go forth to preach without the divine sanction and for Titan tasks there is only baby strength. Go forth to a task of divine appointment, then the very stars shall help you on and through the tiniest inlet of human endeavor shall beat the resistless ocean tides. A self-constituted ministry is the devil's supreme impertinence.

If only God may call the preacher, then how, you ask, may our churches enlarge that ministry? We may pray God to send forth reapers, but above all may bring our sons to listen to the call that is for them. Fear not the limitations of the divine purpose shall be less wide than human wish and prayer. This, then, shall be the beginning of all holy ministry, the sovereign call of God. Now all the distinguishing marks of the preacher are but the corollaries of this truth.

A ministry called of God is a prepared ministry. The divine call is no consecration of callowness. The ready-made preacher is an anomaly in the divine economy. The sun calls the harvest, but it calls through the media of fertilized field and labor of the husbandman. God called Moses, but ere he might speak he must know the brooding silences of two score years, the rich tuitionings of desert lands and wildling places, and, above all, the felt-communion of the ever-revealing God. He called the Tarsian tentmaker, but though there was granted to Saul the vision of the glorified Lord, and though the flame-like words of that unforgettable hour were etched into his very soul, not even he might preach until, in travail of soul, through ministering thirty years, he learned more perfectly the way of the Lord. The carpenter, the dentist, must serve an apprenticeship, and if one may not pull a tooth or drive a nail without this training, shall a man, all unschooled, attempt the heavy tasks of preacher life?

To disbelieve in a trained ministry were to pour contempt upon the divine method. The preacher should be man at his fullest, man at his highest, man at his best. That trained men should sometimes succeed reflects not the argument. The exceptional proves nothing. The plain truth remains that the Christian minister should be a learned, rounded man. For all our cheap jibes at culture, it is a grace of grace. Culture has changed a small and seedy thing into the large and luscious blackberry, and what culture has done for a blackberry it can do for a man. It may fall out that our old psychological similes were faulty, and that education does not pull out the mind somewhat after the manner of an accordion, as we used to think, but at least it gives a finer edge to native faculty and so makes work easier of accomplishment. Culture is strength, scholarship is power. The preacher should be a prepared man, trained in books, in schools, in knowledge of the ways of men.

It follows then, compellingly, that the educational problem is one of the gravest that confronts us as a people. A prepared ministry is at the very threshold of all Christian programs, yet the inadequacy of our equipment for the training of the preacher is equalled only by the weakness of our faith. If God, through some miracle of grace, were to answer our prayers tonight for ten thousand recruits to the ranks of the ministry, we are totally lacking in that largeness of equipment that would fit them for their work. Foolish almost to idiocy have we been in our stolid ignoring of the primary need of missionary ministers and their proper training for Christian service. The educational problem to the front!

Another corollary is clear: A ministry called of God is a ministry of authority. There can be no hesitancy, no timorousness, no weakness in the message, seeing it is from God. The preacher is not so much a reasoner as a revealer. The evangelist is no huckster of opinions; he is the voice of Heaven-sent truths. Not to be positive is to be pernicious. The divine injunction, "Go, tell the world what your eyes have seen and what your ears have heard of the wonderful works of God," can never be paraphrased into the dilettante inanity, "proceed at your convenience and hesitantly announce to those who politely listen that you beg to disturb the serene stillness with the babble of an infantile guess." No, the preacher is not sent to propound a hypothesis, but to declare a truth. No ladder woven of mist and cloud can ever lean against the stars. The preacher that apologizes is damned—and damns. Authority is power. Wear with conscious dignity the mantle of the prophet; sound with no uncertainty the oracles of God, and all the clamors of trade and cries of pain and sobs of grief and awful yells of sin can not drown your message. Let but the live bolt of truth leap from the clouds and a drowsing world will wake to watch it rive the tree of ancient wrong. Yet that same old world will hold but as raindrop patter the message conceived in speculation, born of the weak, wan mother, doubt. Let the evangelist speak timorously, and though his speech be woven sunbeams, he will find himself the preacher to a disappearing audience. Let him speak with the accent of authority, and though his pulpit be the uninviting wilderness, like John the Baptist he will be heard. God grant us preachers all the unction of the imperative. God grant that at the cross-roads of human destiny we be no weather-vanes to mark the drift of speculative winds, but steady fingers to point out the ways for men.

Another corollary: If the preacher be called of God, to God only does he hold himself responsible for the ministry that is not his own. Receiving his commission to preach from no synod, convention, denomination, leader, but from God himself, to no convention, to no creed, to no book, to no leader does he hold himself in orders. He knows no fetters of human opinion or precedent. He is a free man. Pity for that preacher whose lips are padlocked by a creed that is not his own. Pity for that evangelist upon whose sermon the dead hand of the past lays its loathly weight. Pity for him who so misuses the past, eating for bread of to-day the rotting manna of yesterday, and no less pity for him who, fearing the clamor-censure of the new, trims his bark to the breezes of a present orthodoxy and sails not ever straight on! Pity, yea and shame! A real preacher has nothing to do with either heterodoxy or orthodoxy; he has only to do with truth, and that truth as conceived in his own heart.

There be whisperings that we are not all out of bondage, and that there be some among us who hold an esoteric doctrine, fearing to speak right out. If so, then there is need of a new Declaration and Address—the declaration of personal independence. If a preacher's lips be muzzled, if he fear a cudgel, whether swung at Nashville, at Cincinnati, or Chicago, he is unworthy a place in freemen's ranks. In the beginning our movement was marked by the fearless, magnificent plea for personal freedom, and to miss that freedom is to miss the special glory of our heritage. Blessed among all others is the minister among the Disciples—he is free, and that freedom we shall not let go. It was purchased with a great price, and in the oaken words of the royal motto, "we will maintain." For myself, the words "progressive," "conservative," have no terror. I refuse to be labeled. My commission to preach came neither from Drake nor the University of Chicago, neither from Cincinnati or St. Louis, but from God, and to God alone will I render an account of my stewardship.

In all religious movements there is ever a necessity for great rebirths of freedom. All unconsciously the past hems us in; all unconsciously are our horizons fixed by that which has been spoken, that which has been done; all unconsciously do we sail toward the mystic pillar with the ne plus ultra that is not for an immortal soul; all unconsciously do we grasp the skirts of the seeming ultimate and the comfortable conclusion that the deification of the yesterday is the duty of to-day. Against this tendency our ministry must set itself. Let there be no panic over the advent of a new thought, nor aught of malice toward those who hold it. Gamaliel's wisdom yet holds. Errors go, truth remains. Time sifts all things, and the Christian pulpit would be as wide as the charity of God. We dare not make it smaller. In this pulpit there is room for all our brethren with differing opinions, yet with a common faith and love—room for our Lipscombs and Sewells and Hardings, opponents of missionary societies; room for our Rains and Muckleys and Wrights; room for the scholarly Grubbs and all who, like him, oppose the use of the organ in our worship; room for B. B. Tyler and his orchestra; room for the brilliant Willett; room for that patient student and grand old man whom all delight to honor, J. W. McGarvey; room, room alike for those of our brethren who fear the contamination of Standard Oil and that earnest apostle of world-wide missions, Archibald McLean.

DAY BY DAY.

When you go out in the morning,
To begin the work of the day,
Don't neglect the little chances
You will find along the way;
For in lifting another's burden,
And speaking a word of cheer,
You will find your own cares lighter,
And easier to bear.

THE IMPERIALISM OF CHRIST

An Address before the Foreign Christian Missionary Society at Norfolk

By Peter Ainslie

I care not what men may think of political imperialism, but the imperialism of Jesus Christ holds precedence over every other theme. The annexation of lands and peoples may arouse the enthusiasm of politicians and citizens of monarchies and republics, but the annexation of soul soil to the kingdom of God is the most fascinating task in the pale of human activities. Nebuchadrezzar ruled the mighty empire of Babylon, Alexander the Great that of Greece, Augustus Caesar that of Rome and Napoleon Bonaparte that of France, but Jesus Christ is the mighty emperor of life and the whole soul field is his rightful realm.

His appeals are couched in inexpressible pathos and his mandates are marshalled with heavenly majesty. He makes no apologies for his demands, but straightway enters upon the field of bloodless victories. The proud, the revengeful, the passionate of all races and in all ages have bowed submissively before the Prince of Peace. He does not touch the sword of human passion and sin of those whom he conquers, as Grant courteously did to Lee at Appomatox, but he says to the whole mad world, as he said to Peter in the garden of Gethsemane—"Put up thy sword," suppress thy evil passions, put down thy sin, take my recipe for living and you shall find peace.

Pre-eminent among all the instances of human greatness stands Jesus Christ as the most imperialistic personage of all ages. Of divine origin and of royal lineage, yet born in poverty, reared amid toil, rejected of men, nailed to the cross as a common outcast of the depraved race, and buried in a borrowed grave, yet God broke the seal of death and raised him from the dead, making him both Lord and Christ. He now sits upon the throne with his Father, waiting until he shall return, "when he shall show who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of Kings and Lord of Lords." This world for which he died, this world which so grievously misunderstood him when he walked among men, misunderstands him now, for it has failed to estimate the grandeur of his character, to see the blessedness of his atonement and to heed the absolute mandates of his will, but this world has been marked for conquest. While once they spurned him as he sat among them in modest garb and they spat upon his holy face, they will yet see him when he comes in glory with his holy angels and then they may well exclaim with Heber:

> "Is this the man who once did stray
> A pilgrim on the world's highway,
> By power oppressed and mocked by pride—
> O God, is this the Crucified?"

Then "the kingdoms of the world shall become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ," for "his kingdom is an everlasting kingdom and all dominions shall serve and obey him," and "He shall reign forever and ever."

In the interim, between the time that he gave his commandments as he walked among men to the time of his conquest, when his feet shall stand upon the Mount of Olives, are the days of absolute obedience of every believer to the royal orders of Christ and unflinching fidelity to every task. There is no time for quibbling nor sulking—the king's business requires haste—and brothers have no right to look into the face of brothers with any other than the look of love. The badge of our heavenly created citizenship is kindness and courtesy, forbearance and forgiveness and oneness of mind and heart. Personal feelings and opinions are subservient to the divine thinker, whose thought must give complexion to all human thought, if out of these poor blurred specimens of our present day lives is to come the fullness of God's power and glory. "He most lives, who thinks most, feels the noblest and acts the best."

Obstacles and disappointments are nothing other than lessons for the soul. If a door closes to-day, it must not be forgotten that another door will open to-morrow; if one fails to-day, remember that there is power for to-morrow's victory; if one's vision be short to-day, ask for the light of heaven to illuminate the pathway to the far-off goal, where sacrifice will mark the crown of service.

Human guides are incompetent in the battle of life. Vox populi, vox dei is no criterion for the world's conduct. I care not what men may say, whether they be few or many, but in the babel of human voices I ask, "What does God say?" Except the accumulations of scholarship in literature, art, science or philosophy receive their moulds from the sacred heart of Christ, they are but dust in the hands of a dying genius. Christ is supreme and the church is his servant, his bond servant, if you please, but men talk to-day a good deal more about what the church demands than about what Christ demands. More deadly than the heresy of doctrinal formulas is the heresy of unholy living and because of this heresy of worldliness the visible servant has displaced the invisible head.

The church, which Christ founded upon himself and which was designed to prepare the way for his universal kingdom and against which the power of evil shall not entirely prevail, has removed Christ from its front and amid its divisions it has itself become filled with the rubbish of ecclesiastical traditions, written and unwritten creeds and

TAKE THEM OUT

Or Feed Them Food They Can Study On.

When a student begins to break down from lack of the right kind of food, there are only two things to do; either take him out of school or feed him properly on food that will rebuild the brain and nerve cells. That food is Grape-Nuts.

A boy writes from Jamestown, N. Y., saying: "A short time ago I got into a bad condition from overstudy, but Mother having heard about Grape-Nuts food began to feed me on it. It satisfied my hunger better than any other food, and the results were marvelous. I got fleshy like a good fellow. My usual morning headaches disappeared, and I found I could study for a long period without feeling the effects of it.

"My face was pale and thin, but is now round and has considerable color. After I had been using Grape-Nuts for about two months I felt like a new boy altogether. I have gained greatly in strength as well as flesh, and it is a pleasure to study now that I am not bothered with my head. I passed all of my examinations with a reasonably good percentage, extra good in some of them, and it is Grape-Nuts that has saved me from a year's delay in entering college.

"Father and mother have both been improved by the use of Grape-Nuts. Mother was troubled with sleepless nights, and got very thin, and looked care worn. She has gained her normal strength and looks and sleeps well nights." "There's a Reason." Read "The Road to Wellville" in pkgs.

pagan and semi-pagan sacraments. In struggling feebly against these conditions, I have felt as did the late Prof. A. B. Bruce, of Scotland, who said that the church is now the greatest hindrance to the coming kingdom of Christ. Were the Holy Spirit to be freed from human limitations and armed with the enunciations of the principles of Christ, a heart-sick world might turn more willingly to him who is their Lord and redeemer.

Armies in the trenches have faced no greater problems than we face to-day. It is not the question, will Christ conquer? For he has been for nearly two thousand years marvelously remaking mankind in these daily shops of human experience, and Isaiah boldly declared that "He will not fail nor be discouraged, till he have set justice in the earth; and the isles shall wait for his law"; but the supreme question is, Whether the individual believer is doing his best in obeying the divine orders—not one command nor two, but every command in his sovereign mandates. Religion is not a document; it is a life and that life born from above and then setting itself passionately to reproducing Christ on earth, for said the Apostle Paul—"for me to live is Christ"—for me to live is to reproduce Christ, and that reproduction to be so evident that men shall say of this man and that man, he has been with Jesus, as one knows by the dust upon the clothes of the miller that he has been in a mill, or by the fragrance in the garments of the florist that he has been among the flowers.

The religion of Christ is being put to a tremendous test in this day. By the side of his unalterable mandates, which have remained as living tongues through the centuries, the world for which he died and to which we are messengers, is demanding that life shall displace profession and that worship shall be substituted for hollow forms. Said an English bishop: " . . generation which is about to take . place, will certainly judge the church by her works. I see them rising to their feet, the greatest host that time has ever known, and hear the murmur of millions speaking to millions across the sea in many languages. What there is in the gospel to rectify the relation to human life, to elevate the selfishness of capital and chasten the selfishness of labor, to carry to the homes of the poor improvement in the present and hope in the future, that will find eager listeners. But to the men of the near future, religion will appear a barren and worthless stem, unless it be taught to clothe itself with the blossoms of worship and bear the fruits of human love."

Emerson said, "America is another name for opportunity," and God appears to have planted the Anglo-Saxon over the wide plains and along the picturesque water courses of this great continent to do a service in holiness, second only to that which he appointed Israel, but our national escutcheon is stained with a thousand blots—drunkenness, extravagance, easy divorce, irreverence, sensuality, pride, greed for gold, love of pleasure—sins political, social, economic, religious and personal—these and their companions lie upon the door steps of our nation like lepers among the rocky caves of Syria, and, as Palestine was called the land of milk and honey, America may appropriately be called the land of ink and money. Our great cities are the colossal bulwarks of sin. Wealth and poverty, although separated by that mighty chasm of money, nevertheless tread shoulder to shoulder the same boulevard of unholy passion and godlessness.

"In the glooming alleys, progress halts on palsied feet;
Crime and hunger, cast out maidens by the thousands on the street.

There the master scrimps the haggard seamstress of her daily bread;
There a single sordid attic holds the living and the dead.

There the smouldering fire of fever creeps across the rotted floor,
And the crowded couches fester in the warrens of the poor."

The church, though scarred, divided, lame, imperfect, nevertheless has a holy task—the holiest ever given to mortal man, and it is sad that this church made so sacred by the sacrifice of Christ has come to have more conscience for fashion, power and pelf than it has for grace, giving and righteous living, but the time is coming when it is going to supplant worldly pleasure and the greed for gold, and then riches will cease to be the end and aim of life and the gratification of human passions and human desires will be regarded as the heirlooms of demons. When every man has thus comprehended life, with its objects and its aims, the doors of the universe are not strong enough to hold back the chariot wheels of God's power.

All races are our kin and there are no national boundaries. God hath made of one every nation that dwells upon the face of the earth and in our refusal to carry the gospel into Europe, Asia, Africa and the Islands of the Sea, God has sent the Europeans, the Asiatics, the Africans and the Islanders to our gates and they are so rapidly populating our land that already two-thirds of the American population is non-Christian, against only one-third non-Christian in the first decade of our Republic. As the magi crossed the hot sands of Persia and the waters of the Euphrates in search of the Child of the Star, so these streams of immigration in crossing the seas in search of bread will find in this land of our adoption both our Redeemer and theirs if we be faithful with what has been committed to us. There is no such word as foreign in the language of the Christian, as applied to other nations, only all believers are at once foreigners and pilgrims in this world.

Whether these multitudes crowd the centers of our cities or live upon the plains, or half live in their native countries, to them we owe a debt, and he who pays his financial obligations in the markets of the world and his performance to every humanly appointed task and yet leaves unpaid his debt to the unsaved millions is both dishonest to his highest obligations and unfaithful to the most divine trust. Debts for bricks and mortar, for food and clothes are no more sacred than the inalienable debt to bear Christ to the un-Christed masses.

Over half of the world never heard of Christ; over half that have heard are not Christians; over half that call themselves Christians are only nominally so, and still the living Christ is speaking as of old from this unfettered Bible, commanding and encouraging his followers to advance while the great lost world is dying all around us. The scandal of the trial of Christ is still gossip upon the lips of the citizens of Jerusalem; the tragedy of the cross is still fresh in the human mind; the broken tomb still stands there in the garden of Arimathaea and all the trowels of earthly masonry can not mend it. Yesterday and to-day have blended into one. The morning of this dispensation is mingling its golden light with the saffron and crimson of sunset. A single day spans the time. In the morning he suffered; at noon he leads his forces for the earth's redemption, and in the evening he shall come with myriads and the glory of the world will hang upon his chariot. Christ is crowding in with his

TROUBLE FROM COFFEE

People Beginning to Learn About the Drug.

"Coffee treated me so badly that I want to tell people about it, and if you can use my letter, I will be glad.

"I am 45 years old and have drank coffee all my life. I have felt bad for years and did not know what ailed me. Sometimes I would have to press my hand against my heart, I would be in such pain and I got so I could hardly do my work. My head would feel heavy and dizzy, and many a time I got so blind I just had to drop down or else I would have fallen.

"I felt bad all over. My feet would swell and hurt me. A friend of mine asked me to try Postum and stop drinking coffee. I tried the Postum, but it was some days before I got hold of the right way to make it. My heart disease and dropsy disappeared and I got entirely well.

"There is much in making it. It has to be boiled longer than ordinary coffee, but when I got it made good, it was fine, and now I wouldn't have coffee in my house at all. I am sure that Postum saved my life, and I am now perfectly well. I send you the names of about twenty people that have been helped by leaving off coffee and using Postum Food Coffee."

Quite a number of prominent business men were present. Among them: R. A. Long, of Kansas City, Mo.; A. R. Teachout, of Cleveland, O.; J. H. Allen, Palmer Clarkson and Lee Grant, of St. Louis, Mo.; R. M. Denholme, of New Orleans, La. Among the prominent business men who have been habitual convention goers, we noticed F. E. Udell, W. S. Dickinson, S. M. Cooper, Chas. B. Sala, S. G. Boyd and B. R. Davidson.

There was a brief meeting under the auspices of the Business Men's Association, but no regular program. After a statement by the president, it was voted to continue the association and seek to get a better organization.

The Foreign Society is looking toward enlisting the men. The committee on the business men's missionary movement reported in favor of creating an order with dues of $10, ten years' contributions entitling to life-membership with a gold badge.

Archibald McLean has served the F. C. M. S. twenty-five years, seven of these as president. He was, of course, elected again to the presidency. The newspaper man, who a few weeks ago suggested that Brother McLean had accomplished his work and should be retired, entirely mistook the temper of the convention. President McLean was greeted with a storm of clapping and waving of handkerchiefs. Despite this expression of the confidence of his brethren, there were many indications that our foreign missionary leader has been much saddened by the ordeal through which he was recently compelled to go. Many times was seen the look on his face depicted in a snapshot secured by one of our staff.

One thousand station ropeholders by 1909 is one of the aims of the F. C. M. S.

The symposiums, conducted by the secretaries of the F. C. M. S. and the A. C. M. S. were, as usual, among the best things on the program.

More time must be found on the program for the missionaries. The people are interested in them more than in set speakers, and it is a pity to give only five, or at most only fifteen, minutes to one who has been for twenty years representing us in China. Fewer set addresses and more time for the business and spirit of the moment must be in our plans.

It was thought by some that in blending the convention with the Jamestown Exposition, the attendance at the regular sessions of the convention would be reduced. This, however, was not the case. Very few of the delegates made the Exposition their chief concern. Many, no doubt, gave some time to it, but they did so when their attendance at the convention was not specially needed. One or two exceptions ought to be made when there was concerted action to give the Exposition or some other attraction the preference.

For instance, one leader of a party is known to have encouraged those wearing his button to have an extra day in Washington rather than attend the exercises on Disciples' Day at the Exposition grounds. The Norfolk brethren were very much provoked that their efforts not only to give us a good time but to make a great impression on the city and the Exposition goers was, to some extent, minimized by the large number of absentees that might have swelled the crowd we did take. The length of line extended several squares as we marched from headquarters to the boat, and there were about 2,000 people present at the exercises in the auditorium. But Brother Hundley and his people wanted an overflow crowd.

The fellowship of the convention was delightful. This was not confined to the Lord's day service. It pervaded the entire week. The Monticello Hotel, where the headquarters of the convention were located, lent itself to an expression of this fellowship. The large corridors of the hotel were frequently crowded with delegates when an interchange of opinions was freely given and many important matters were discussed. This was done in a lovable spirit and often prepared the way for harmony in the convention.

The character of the speeches has already been noted, but there were a few features which need to be emphasized. Perhaps no greater growth is shown anywhere among our people than in the speeches which have been delivered in conventions in recent years. It was a remark of a gentleman accustomed to attend religious conventions in England that the speeches at Norfolk averaged well with those delivered at the best religious conventions in the old country, but he could not have said this of our speeches even ten years ago.

It is worth while to mention the fact that while our convention was in session the Episcopal conference was also in session at Richmond. The contrast between these two assemblies must have been very striking to the people of Virginia. These people are generally familiar with the Episcopal way of doing things. But from what we heard on all hands, the convention of the Disciples was a revelation. There was a freedom and ease about our methods which astonished some and commanded the admiration of many. Some of the delegates were present at both of these assemblies, and, from what they report, nothing could have presented a greater contrast than these two conventions. One was a convention that was truly conventional and the other was a convention without conventionality.

Some have criticised the college men for crowding their banquets into the time of the convention. This ought not to be carried too far. But these banquets furnish an occasion for old college friends to meet together as only college friends know how to do. The Bethany banquet had a very serious object in view. Its aim was to emphasize the importance of raising the Centennial offering of the brotherhood to endow the college. Judging from the effect, something was accomplished in this respect. One brother, at least, announced that he would give $10,000 to this endowment fund, if necessary, while many others pledged their churches for at least $1 subscriptions from each member.

While the subject of federation was not discussed in the convention proper, it received earnest attention in a mass-meeting called for its consideration. We are calling attention to it here for the purpose of remarking upon the inconsistency of those who oppose federation. It is a well-known fact that in an important sense we have been federating for many years with many of the churches that are represented in the federation conference. There were several persons at the Norfolk convention who have frequently served as delegates sent from our own conventions to attend the conventions of other people, and yet no one has ever questioned the propriety of this fraternal intercourse. Is it proper to federate just a little, but, when we have a chance to federate a little more, to hark back and refuse to do the very thing which we have always desired to do, but lacked opportunity? Surely the legs of the lame are not equal in the kind of logic used by those who oppose federation.

One of the conspicuous figures in the convention was the Hon. T. W. Phillips. At the Monticello Hotel he was among the last to retire. He was indefatigable in defending his view of the Rockefeller money. His position became very lonesome, as even some of his most trusted friends forsook him at the critical moment. This, however, made no difference to Brother Phillips. He stuck to his guns and from early morn till midnight he sought to impress his ideas upon those who would give him a hearing. His courtesy and kindness were always marked features of his advocacy. He was the personification of a Christian gentleman, though very few were ready to accept his conclusions. In some respects he excited the sympathy of even those who strongly opposed his view of the question. Notwithstanding the earnestness of his advocacy the overwhelming conviction was that his was the case of a good man advocating an impractical cause.

There were some people who could not be repressed from saying that Brother Phillips' chaperones forsook him at the crucial test. When it became evident that the Foreign Board was practically unanimous in its support of the executive committee the sinking ship of opposition was soon deserted, and it was really a touching sight to witness Brother Phillips on the floor begging for some one to second his motion to instruct the committee to return the Rockefeller money. So pitiable was the sight that one brother agreed to second the motion in order that it might be discussed with the understanding that personally he was not to be counted with the opposition. When it was intimated that he might be regarded as with the mover, he declined to second. There was at least one other present who was a member of the board who had loudly proclaimed in the public press that Brother Phillips' position was right, but for some reason this brother was silent when Brother Phillips needed him the most.

When J. H. Allen, president of the Business Men's Association, made his report, he said his society did not ask for money, but that the organization be continued as local chapters formed in the churches. The motion was made to continue the same officers for the coming year. Dr. W. T. Moore, who seconded the motion, said he did so the more heartily because it was the first and only society he had heard of that did not ask for money. The motion was unanimously adopted.

"Please let your readers know why the national convention decided to take no more money from J. D. Rockefeller for foreign missions when there was only one lone man to champion that impracticable idea."

Salina, Kan. J. C. McArthur

No such decision was made. In the report of the executive committee, it was proposed in view of the objections urged by some good brethren against the donations received from Mr. Rockefeller, not to solicit any further contributions from that source. This concession was based on expediency and was made in deference to brethren who object to such solicitation. It was the proposition to return the money received from Mr. Rockefeller that was championed only by "one lone man." There would have been the same unanimity, however, in rejecting any res-tion condemning the acceptance of unconditioned gifts from such source, as wrong in principle. It should be distinctly understood that the proposition not to solicit further gifts from Mr. Rockefeller carries with it no admission that such solicitation was wrong, but that the concession was stated to be a matter of expediency in the interest of unity.

The committee appointed a year ago to report on the readjustment of days for special offerings, submitted its report to the general board, but at too late an hour to receive the attention it demanded. The discussion which took place centered about the proposed merging of the Ministerial Relief Fund with the Benevolent Association—a proposition which, while finding considerable favor among the brotherhood, is opposed by the Board of Ministerial Relief and by many of its earnest supporters. That matter might be eliminated from the report of the committee, with such change as this elimination would involve as to days. If that were done, and the matter of the unification of our state missionary societies with the American Christian Missionary Society as auxiliaries, could be arranged on satisfactory terms, it would seem possible to bring about a needed re-adjustment of set days for the various offerings. There is general agreement, we believe, that the work of state missions and that of the general Home society, is one work, and that this fact should be recognized in the organization of our home forces. It is only a question as to the division of funds between the General Home board and those of the several states, which awaits some satisfactory solution. We can hardly doubt that such solution will be found, and that all the states will fall into line as integral parts of one great Home missionary society, and that each several part will be strengthened by this closer unification in organization and interest. The committee was continued to report next year.

The Foreign Society's Sessions

The general session of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society began on Monday morning with W. H. Allen, of Muncie, Ind., conducting the devotional service. W. E. Ellis, of Cynthiana, Ky., read the Scriptures and offered prayer. President McLean announced the committees. After a short prayer by J. W. Carpenter, Secretary Stephen Corey read the abstract of the report which appeared in our columns last week. After a call for fifty new missionaries, the audience rose and sang, "I Love to Tell the Story." Secretary F. M. Rains made a brief official statement.

In referring to the Sunday-schools, he said this was the first year we had ever got more than we asked for, and this was due to the zeal of Brother Corey. When he mentioned the fact that the number of living links was now ninety-four, W. H. Allen immediately said he would make it ninety-five next year. The watchword for the coming year's work was declared to be $350,000 and fifty new missionaries.

Here it was that Brother McLean received an ovation, the mention of his name being greeted with cheers and the waving of handkerchiefs by the standing audience. After "Blest Be the Tie that Binds" had been sung Brother Rains announced that Brother McLean had served the society for twenty-five years—the longest service rendered to any of our societies.

The treasurer's report was made by S. M. Cooper, and the auditor's by Brother Rains, both being adopted. Brother McLean emphasized the latter by stating that 50,000 people audit the books every year and if there should be a mistake the society would hear from it at once. "Now, friends, we are going to have some roast beef," he said, preliminary to the introduction of the missionaries. F. E. Meigs, who has for twenty years represented us in Nanking, China, was the first presented, bringing the greetings of forty of our missionaries in that empire, the center, as he declared, of the world and of political interest. When it is brought to Christ, all the world will be, he said. He hinted at the great changes which had taken place even during the time of his residence there. Every hamlet is now open to the message of the cross. Yet with only one missionary for 40,000 people we have hardly touched the fringe of this great empire. As to our own particular relationship as a religious people he said we were responsible for twelve millions of these and we have only one missionary for every 300,000 people. The only hope is to create a Chinese ministry who shall be readers and teachers, hence he made a plea for schools. Brother Meigs is president of the union college which has been formed of three colleges formerly conducted by different denominations. Miss Emma Lyon, who has been in China for fifteen years as head of a girls' school in Nanking, spoke of her work, and Fred Hagin, of Japan, told of the first baptisms in that idolatrous city. There are, he said, 52,000 Buddhist priests in the country and we have but thirty-two missionaries. There are 5,000 shrines and temples, but only 400 churches. Speaking of the union sentiment on the foreign field, he said that they used a union hymnal. Mrs. Hagin was introduced and said a few words. C. S. Weaver, of Osaka, Japan, had a great deal of humor, telling about some one who thought that place was in Missouri. It is a city of one million inhabitants and a city of idolatry. For eight years he and his wife have labored there with little equipment. We have one church with between eighty and one hundred members, and last November they dedicated their house of worship. Speaking of the converts, he said that nine Japanese men took part in the last prayer-meeting he attended, that they all contributed and none would come to the house of God without bringing his offering. Mrs. Weaver gave a short and interesting account of her work, and Miss Josephine Franklin, a granddaughter of Ben Franklin, and a daughter of Joseph Franklin, who is now the foster mother of 700 famine children, told how these are trained and what they do in seeking the salvation of their fellows. They contributed $60 last year for the F. C. M. S. and she brought with her an armful of letters from the orphans written to the Christian Endeavor societies in the home land. She read one written by a little boy to the Endeavor Society at Norfolk, which greatly touched the hearts of those who listened. Melvin C. Menges, of Cuba, who went forth from the Archibald McLean, who has served the F. C. M. S. twenty-five years.

Cincinnati convention, spoke of the great changes that had lately taken place in this land nominally Christian yet absolutely idolatrous. Mrs. Menges, who is the daughter of J. G. Waggoner (by the way, six of the missionaries presented were Eureka students) said she wanted to pity the home folk rather than have them pity the missionary for it was on the foreign field that could be seen best some of the great things accomplished by the gospel. Dr. Royal Dye received an ovation when he was presented. He spoke but briefly, and the substance of his remarks has appeared in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST during the past few weeks, in the letter which we have been printing.

Among the missionaries going to the foreign field were presented J. C. Archer, A. W. Place, P. A. Sherman, while Dr. Kevorkian, who has been in Turkey since 1884 was also introduced. Following this always interesting occasion came a solemn few minutes as J. H. MacNeill spoke of those who had given up their lives on the foreign field for their love of Christ. A man must not die to be immortal, he argued, and his was a word of encouragement to those on the field and inspiration to those going. He pictured Miss Ella Ewing as devoted to the mission field before her birth, while missions was the dominating passion of G. L. Wharton's life. This session was adjourned after the singing, by the Netz sisters, of "Far O'er the Waters Burns the Crimson After Glow," and a prayer by J. B. Briney.

Earle M. Todd read the Scriptures and led in prayer at the opening of the afternoon session when R. H. Thrapp read the report of the station plan which called for a forward movement, the motto being 1,000 station rope holders by 1909. This plan, he says, gives the small church the same opportunity and privilege of a larger church, the expense of a mission station being divided among shareholders. Further, it gives a definite field of study and a definite field for which to pray. The report of the business men's movement was read by J. J. Haley though it had been prepared by C. W. Throckmorton, of Richmond. The committee did not think that an independent movement was advisable nor that it was advisable to establish a separate department in the society. It suggested, however, that an order should be created with a definite purpose and with rules and regulations hereafter to be adopted within the organization and the business men of the brotherhood invited to join. It was suggested that annual dues be fixed at $10 to be paid directly to the society, or through the Christian Endeavor, Sunday-school or church, and that ten years' membership should entitle to life membership with a gold badge. The committee thought a large revenue would come from this and that at least 100,000 men ought to be enrolled.

C. S. Medbury presented the report of the committee on nominations, the following being elected: President, A. McLean; vice-presidents, B. C. Dewease, W. S. Dickinson, I. J. Spencer, J. L. Hill, J. D. Armistead, A. B. Philputt and S. M. Jefferson; recording secretary, Justin Green; treasurer, M. Y. Cooper; secretaries, F. M. Rains and S. J. Corey; auditor, G. Green; medical examiner, P. T. Kilgour. Brother McLean again received an ovation as he rose to read a telegram from Leonard Thompson, expressing the good wishes of the Colorado convention. It was voted to send a reply.

There followed the excellent address on "The Living Link Idea," by L. E. Sellers, which will appear in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and the somewhat unique address by Ira Boswell on "Missions the Heart of our Plea," which we published in our last issue.

After F. W. Norton had been granted a few words to explain the purpose of the Wharton memorial, F. M. Rains conducted a symposium, the chief subject of which was "How to Bring About a Forward Movement," "The Making of the Missionary in the Home" was the theme assigned to Ida. W. Harrison, and the fundamental thing, she said, is the attitude of the home-maker. The heads of the homes must be fully persuaded that the cause of missions is the cause of the church. J. D. Armistead, in speaking of missionary education in the home, suggested that missionary biography should be substituted there for foolish books. S. J. Corey spoke of the larger use of the missionary papers, urging that we ought to know our stations. He announced that the society was having a thousand sets of four maps made, each set to be had, in cloth, for $1, postpaid. L. G. Batman said that as a result of the missionary atmosphere of the church there was missionary activity. We have, he said, 7,695 churches in which there is not a missionary atmosphere, and unless this state of affairs is changed they are doomed to die. Wider circulation of "The Missionary Intelligencer" received a strong boost from H. C. Kendrick, while P. A. Cave in pleading for more prayer for the missionaries claimed that this subject touched the heart of the whole missionary enterprise. The missionaries' cry was "Pray for us," and we have, he said, no right to send them out unless we do. "Missionary Study in Every Church," was the theme of J. L. Hill. This, he said, would produce offerings and people would come to the conventions with intelligence. Pierce Atkins, in considering how we could have 5,000 contributing churches this year, said it is the whole business of the church to give the whole gospel to the whole world, as soon as possible. We should have 5,000 churches, he said, just as soon as we really deplore the anti-missionary spirit as we now deplore the denominational. "Heroic Giving" was presented by B. S. Ferrall in a bright little speech, and C. A. Finch followed with a glowing picture of the new watchward—$350,000. His speech will appear later.

A great audience assembled on Monday evening to hear Herbert Moninger and Peter Ainslie. It was the windup session of the Foreign Society. Mrs. Shirley Harvuot, of Cincinnati, sang a special solo and A. I. Myhr led in prayer. Brother McLean was bothered by the usual request and he handled it in the following fashion: "I need not read it. The ladies whose hats are paid for can take them off." Brother Moninger, whose speech was on "Children's Day," said the Bible school presents the normal evangelism. It is the richest, the ripest, the most representative service in the church to-day. In its scope it is definite. He thought we ought to take this great department of our church life into the foreign field, and he went on to consider how we might teach missions in the schools. Some of these ways are to give some treatment in the international lesson that will instruct in missionary truth, by creating a missionary atmosphere and by having missionary petitions and songs. In order to have a successful children's day he suggested the use of a missionary reading course ladder in which there should be a missionary suggestion on each round, a missionary scrapbook, a missionary target, the badge plan, the lecture plan, a "tell others circle" and a "sunrise call" which means the waking up of a town so that the people will have time to come to Sunday-school.

We will not attempt to give any outline of the fine address by Peter Ainslee on "The Imperialism of Christ," seeing that we print it in full on other pages of this issue. No one can afford to miss this polished and thoughtful deliverance. Brother Ainslie made a deep impression on his audience. He spoke without a note and in the style of the best oratory.

F. E. Meigs was, on this occasion, given another opportunity to present the work he is now engaged in in China. He first referred to the Christian union sentiment amongst the missionaries there and quoted a remark Bishop Bashford made to 1,500 missionaries to the effect that however much of love they might have each for his own particular organization, they must sooner or later come to know that it will be an impossibility to propagate these differences in China. Brother Meigs had attended another meeting and heard a sermon which he declared was as orthodox from our own standpoint on the subject of Christian union as he had ever heard. One of the recommendations that had to be voted upon was the name for the Chinese church. One prominent delegate moved that it should be called the Methodist Church of Christ, another that it be called the Presbyterian Church of Christ. Finally one proposed the Church of Jesus Christ, and this was carried without a dissenting voice. Brother Meigs is in this country in the interest of raising some money towards properly endowing the Christian University, of which he is president.

Permission was given to R. A. Long to make a statement to the convention, and in doing so he said he spoke only because every member of our church ought to be interested in the subject he had on his mind. This was the endowment of Bethany College. "Would it be consistent for us to go to Pittsburg in 1909," asked Brother Long, "and find Bethany, the college founded by Alexander Campbell and such a great factor in our reformatory movement, suffering from lack of support?" He pleaded that every member of our churches would make $1 subscriptions on behalf of this fund. He himself would give $10,000, if necessary, he said, to see this cause succeed, but he hoped that he would only have to give his $1 as he wanted his church and other members in our movement for once to be on a par with him and other reputed well-to-do men, and he promised to give the $10,000 to some other Centennial cause if the Bethany endowment could be secured without calling for his special help. Quite a number of pledges were made by ministers present to enlist their churches.

F. M. Rains in a brief word on the program for the new year concluded the session, the benediction being pronounced by A. D. Harmon.

The Interests of the Home Fields

The sessions of the American Christian Missionary Society opened on Tuesday morning though there had been a very lively board meeting on the Saturday before, when some of the questions that were to come before the general convention were discussed. President George H. Combs was in the chair and W. M. Taylor read the scripture, while J. A. Lord, in the audience, was called upon to lead in prayer. The chairman, in reading a telegram from C. R. Scoville, who was released from the program because of his meeting, said that it was fortunate that the initial note of the convention was not only a head note but a heart note as well, and introduced Miner Lee Bates, pastor of the Fifty-sixth Street Church, New York City, and president-elect of Hiram College, who preached the convention sermon. We can not attempt to summarize so fine a discourse, but hope we may be able to present it to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST readers in somewhat the style it deserves to be presented. It was a message for the hour, scholarly yet heart-searching. It was the outgrowth of the twelfth, thirteenth and fourteenth chapters of Corinthians, the chapters of Christian union, love and edification. A text was taken from the last verses of the twelfth and thirteenth chapters. A reference to current discussions might be found in his assertion that liberty of opinion is as vital to the church as unity of faith and that unity of faith is absolutely imperative. To preach the duty of Christian union is not, he said, to bring it about, and if we would see the power of united churches we must go where the churches struggle to live. When we come to love men for the sake of Jesus Christ we will have Christian union.

Following such an address was a fitting moment for the introduction of a representative of the resident ministry of Norfolk, and Dr. Booker, pastor of the Epworth Methodist Church, kindly put at our disposal for the C. W. B. M. sessions, was welcomed by the convention.

After the announcement of committees, Secretary W. J. Wright presented the annual report. This, the fifty-seventh, showed that there were no large gifts during the past year, but the receipts indicate that the cause of home missions has taken firmer hold upon the hearts of the people. The amount realized was $123,597.15, as against $103,647.34 in 1906, the best former year, which is in round numbers a gain of 20 per cent. Churches contributed $65,092, a gain of $10,846, and Sunday-schools $10,904, and in bequests $5,572. Annuity money to the amount of $7,400 was received. In permanent memorial funds there is now $59,000. A summary of the work shows: Missionaries employed, 418, eighty-two of whom were supported by direct appropriations from the treasury, and 336 by appropriations to the various state boards of missions; 124 churches were organized and 14,469 persons brought into the church, of whom 7,283 were by baptism and 7,186 by commendation or statement. A summary of the work of all state boards shows: Missionaries employed, 580; baptisms, 13,170; other, 10,625; unclassified, 1,175. Total, 24,970. Churches organized, 156; places visited and assisted, 2,150; amount raised for state missions, $199,935.80.

Brother Wright dwelt upon the recommendations of the Buffalo convention. These, the report stated, had been acted upon. The work in Canada had been taken in hand and the prospects there for our cause were said to be exceedingly bright, the chief difficulty being to obtain workers of the right kind. M. F. Harmon was employed as living link evangelist in Mississippi and C. S. Osterhus assisted in his work among the Scandinavians. The acting board believes this work should be enlarged as rapidly as possible. The report of P. C. Macfarlane on the San Francisco reconstruction fund was incorporated to show that the board had made a serious effort also to carry out the recommendations of the Buffalo convention. The fifth recommendation was that a secretary should be secured to forward the centennial aims of the A. C. M. S. H. A. Denton has taken up this work with enthusiasm.

Brother Wright did not make a speech but contented himself with pointing out some of the salient features of the report and calling attention to some of the banners and clarion calls that were hung around the building.

Secretary George Ranshaw introduced some of the society's field workers. W. M. Taylor, of New Orleans, was the first. He gave us a panegyric upon the Crescent City, where Europe is on one side of Canal street and Jerusalem on the other, with America wide-awake close by,—a city blighted by the sin of a great people not cognizant of our great plea. Here is one little church of eighty members that last year gave $600 to missions. Marcellus Ely spoke of his work at Charleston, S. C., where our church of 100 members last year paid off $1,900 of the church extension loan and sent $200 to mission causes. In the whole state we have but 30 churches (only three in cities) with a membership of less than 2,000. Claude E. Hill, of Mobile, spoke of the great opportunities in Alabama. He astonished many by his statement that the exports of Mobile last year exceeded those of Chicago by $20,000,000. Four years ago we had but fifteen members in that city, but now 250, with a property worth $30,000 and only about $6,000 indebtedness. To-day, he declared, the South is leading in a gallant fight in behalf of the Stars and Stripes. Whisky has been run out of Georgia and almost out of Kentucky and Texas and Tennessee, and it will be run out of Alabama. There will, he said, be a new South. Grant K. Lewis, one of those little live wires that generates enthusiasm, and a representative of 10,000 Disciples in California in line with the A. C. M. S. and its revised constitution, sang the praises of his wonderful land, with its spineless cactus that is to "nourish the juicy flesh that Easterners love to eat." California does not know what a non-co-operative church is. In three years a self-supporting church can be produced there under the fostering care of the State Board and A. C. M. S. In Los Angeles, where twelve years ago we were represented by one church, we now have sixteen. Another great undeveloped state was heard from when F. B. Sapp was introduced. He came from Aberdeen, S. D., where Secretary Ranshaw preached his first sermon. There is no saloon in this great state, but we have only one church building, though we have twenty-five organizations. W. B. Craig, of Denver, confessed to a thrill of enthusiasm and anxiety as he studied the map and thought of two-thirds of Colorado untouched and Wyoming and North Mexico virgin fields. But J. A. Romig had a still "bigger proposition." All the states mentioned could be put into his territory and not cover half of it. Then he spoke of the religious conditions. Some thirty-three years ago the Baptists started work there, and now they are using $50,000 a year in mission work and have college property worth $250,000. Brother Romig said he had discovered during the last six months 800,000 Disciples of Jesus Christ wearing the name Baptist. There had been no dissenting voice heard when he presented to them the teaching of the Disciples of Christ. The Baptist Missionary Society had paid the expenses of some of our brethren and told them to preach just what they believed. The differences between us are not, he said, in practice, but in name. This subject came up in another session, when Dr. Stackhouse had the opportunity to speak for the Baptists.

H. L. Calhoun gave his address on "The Scriptural Basis of Home Missions." If, he said, there be a Scriptural basis for them, every loyal Disciple ought to practice home missions. Then he went on to show that there was as much Scripture for home missions as for foreign missions and plenty for both. He did not wish to be understood as opposed to foreign missions because he emphasized those in the home land. At one time an "anti" himself he plead for courtesy, patience and brotherly love towards those who, thoroughly honest, did not see the light as we see it. Then followed quotation after quotation until Brother Calhoun said that to go on would be to reproduce the entire Bible in the space of thirty minutes.

The evangelists failed the convention, Herbert Yeuell was on the program to speak on "Evangelism," but sent a telegram instead of bringing himself. Charles Reign Scoville did the same, being engaged in a meeting. G. A. Hoffmann, therefore, had ample time to present his statistical report, but contented himself with calling attention to the report as printed, emphasizing the discrepancy in gain in numbers, due to inaccurate reports of the past, and stating that he withdrew the paragraph before the last in the printed report. This expressed a matter of mere personal opinion which many thought it was not within the scope of the statistcian's duties to pass upon in an official report. The amended report will appear in our columns later.

President Combs presented H. A. Denton, the lately chosen centennial secretary of the A. C. M. S., a man "known for his enthusiasm, a man who does things." Reading the centennial aims he finished with a eulogy of America, the country where every prospect pleases. The aims for this year are (1) to double the number of Bible schools observing children's day for American missions the Lord's day before Thanksgiving; (2) to gain 500 new contributing churches to the regular fund for American missions. But the aims go further than next year. They include: By Pittsburg, 1909—(1) Every Bible school in line by 1909 for children's day for American missions the Lord's day before Thanksgiving. (2) To add 2,000 new contributing churches. (3) The regular annual receipts of the society increased to $250,000, and special in addition to the regular receipts by 1909, (1) $25,000 for the inauguration of a bureau of Scandinavian peoples in America; (2) $10,000 for the inauguration of the work in Alaska; (3) $10,000 for the Canadian Northwest; (4) $10,000 from the Endeavor Societies for Idaho, Wyoming and the Dakotas.

The numerical aims for the year 1909: (1) 500 new churches organized by the missionaries of the American Christian Missionary Society; (2) 30,000 baptisms by the missionaries of the American Christian Missionary Society; (3) 1,000 evangelists and missionaries supported whole, in part, or jointly with state boards.

"To sing just to kill time is a sorry way to serve the Lord." Such was the striking reply of President Combs to some one who suggested a song to drown the noise of the incoming rush of the many who, shut out through their tardiness, were now eager to hear Dr. Stackhouse, a representative of the Baptists of Northwest Canada. Gaunt in his six feet three or four inches, his is a striking personality. He has a keen intellectual face and is blessed with a personal magnetism of speech and manner. He was received most cordially, the audience standing, waving their handkerchiefs and bursting forth into "Blest be the Tie that Binds." He had the sympathy of his large audience, men and women schooled for years to plead with others for what he was now pleading with them. He brought, he said, the greetings of the brotherhoods of the Baptists and the Disciples of the four western provinces of Canada. Yet they were not divided. "Palsied be the arm, palsied be the brain, and powerless the body that shall dare to create enmity between these two great branches of one great people," he exclaimed amid loud applause. He came not to discuss doctrinal differences between us, for there are none, and we have not, he added, time to make any. But believing that when we enter into co-operation the inevitable result will be Christian union, he set himself to discuss some of the reasons for such co-operation. The primary purpose of our work—the conversion of the people—demands our co-operation, and agreement with the agencies employed in missionary effort demands our co-operation. We aim to give the Word of God to people without creed or communion and to send out missionaries called of God to preach the gospel everywhere. The greatness of our missionary field in Northwest Canada invites our co-operation. The two countries are bound together geographically, commercially and are one great people on the American continent. The power of the gospel of Christ is supreme in the solution of the problems of every nation, and co-operation in our churches is urgent. "The achievements attending the missionary operations of the Baptist body in Western Canada so far are also incentives for church co-operation," declared the speaker. Going into interesting statistics Dr. Stackhouse told of the wonderful growth of the Baptist missionary work in Northwest Canada since the first mission church was established there thirty-three years ago with a membership of only seven, at the same time telling how the Baptist and Disciples mission churches have united and how the membership of these have declared for permanent union "no matter what the church boards might have to say." These mission churches upon coming together found that they had indeed far more in common than they ever imagined they had and that there was practically nothing that held them apart. It took but a short time to bring about union and this union is now in many instances permanent and complete. The church work accomplished following these unions of congregations and workers is wonderful, he declared. Dr. Stackhouse was followed with the greatest interest and the enthusiasm could not be kept silent, when he said: "I speak with a full knowledge of the import of my words. I am ready for the greatest co-operation that can be inaugurated between these two great bodies." The "amens" came from all parts of the hall, and the audience rose en masse to sing, "Praise God from whom all Blessings Flow." And there were tears from overflowing hearts when Dr. Stackhouse added: "Brethren, I am only half through. I thank you for this kind reception. I am coming again to your next convention." Then followed a motion by A. M. Harvuot with the singing of "Onward Christian Soldiers," and "Blest be the Tie." President Combs was moved to remark that never in all the years of our history as a people had there come to us an hour when a man from another communion came to us and plead with us to send a man to his field. "We have," he added, "been debating within the last few weeks, debating on some things that are not of so much moment. Can't we get together on great things like these?" And then he introduced both Brother Stackhouse and Brother Romig, the latter of whom added that this was the outcome of a meeting begun in fasting and in prayer.

From this mountain top peak of sentiment we came down into the valley to prepare for a discussion. G. B. Van Arsdall's address was on a theme to which opposition had already developed both at the state secretaries' meeting as well as at the meeting of the acting board. It had relation to the proposed new constitution, and Brother Van Arsdall's subject was, "The Unification of National and State Home Missions." We will not attempt to give any outline of his paper here, but will publish it in some degree of fullness so that readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST may know just what is proposed and some of the reasons for this change. Brother Van Arsdall's study is an independent one and in view of the opposition on the part of some state workers to one clause in particular in one of the articles it may be well for the whole proposition to be thoroughly sifted. In the general board meeting the overwhelming opinion was against the opposing state secretaries, as also was the predominant vote, probably, of the convention. But after considerable discussion, in which there were amendments and substitutes for amendments, a compromise, proposed by Brother Van Arsdall, was accepted and the new constitution adopted, saving clause C of article 10.

This was the most alive session of the whole convention. The great speech of Dr. Stackhouse, the keen analysis of the Cedar Rapids pastor and the gatling gun attacks of some half dozen state secretaries had kept every one interested. But there were two matters of controversy still to be settled. Where should the convention go next year? New Orleans thought the matter was settled at Buffalo. But just as the hosts were thinking about buying their railroad tickets a bustling Western town said it wanted the 1908 convention and Topeka came along with a whirlwind campaign and pinned the sunflower on every man it could lay hold of. We commend the earnestness of the Kansas delegation. They worked hard and they would have won but for two things—the memory of Buffalo and not the wisest tactics on the convention floor. The committee reported in favor of Topeka, as it was known that this was the choice of many of the national leaders. There was fear that New Orleans could not care for a large convention. But J. B. Briney and W. B. Taylor made eloquent pleas for the Southern city and when the vote showed a decided majority in its favor Brother Finch, on behalf of Topeka, moved that the vote be made unanimous. "Dixie" was under these conditions accepted without question as a religious tune, there being special words put to it by the choir.

And still there was "more to come." The recommendations of the acting board had to be passed on. The real discussion on these came in the meeting of the general board. The first recommendation looked to the spending of $10,000 in Canada and the appointment, if necessary, of a man to raise this money. This was adopted, as was also the second recommendation—that the acting board be instructed to take steps necessary to secure, either through purchase or erection, a suitable mission building in Cincinnati. At the board meeting E. L. Powell wanted to link this with the centennial and suggested a building worthy of one hundred years' of work. But R. A. Long and others advised caution and it was decided that this was a project—so far as an expensive memorial building was concerned—that required much further consideration. The matter of chief interest was the suggestion of a "board of publication." The acting board recommended its organization. W. T. Moore at once objected to the first sentence of the recommendation, feeling that such important action ought not to be taken in a hurry, but on that sentence being deleted, he accepted the rest of the recommendation, which was as follows:

"We recommend that a committee of 25 representative brethren be appointed by the president of the American Christian Missionary Society, and that this committee of 25 shall consider fully all the questions involved in establishing a board of publication, making use as they desire of the facilities of the American Christian Missionary Society for conducting their inquiries. After sixty days they shall report to a called meeting of the general board of managers and the acting board of the American Christian Missionary Society. These boards shall have power to act on the report, and to put into execution the plans determined upon."

Palmer Clarkson moved to amend by substituting for "60 days" "one year hence," and this was adopted. When the matter came before the general convention an effort was made to hasten the matter and to substitute "90 days" for "one year hence." But this was rejected and the former motion carried.

The final recommendation had reference to the articulation of the American Christian Missionary Society and the Christian Missionary Societies of the following states, territories and districts, as provided for in article nine in the proposed constitution of the American Christian Missionary Society: New England States, East Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Arkansas, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, the Dakotas, Idaho, Washington, Oregon, South California, Arizona, New Mexico, Nevada, Wyoming, Utah and Western Canada. It recommended that these articulations shall be effected at the earliest possible date. Likewise a similar articulation with the mission boards of other states as rapidly as a mutually agreeable plan can be devised.

This was carried, though not without dissent.

Vice-President R. H. Miller was in the chair on Tuesday evening, when H. King Pendleton led in prayer. George W. Muckley presented the report of the Board of Church Extension and announced—from the latest telegrams—that the fund amounted now to nearly $650,000. Hawaii, which had secured a loan, had now paid it back. The total new receipts were $56,524.66, being $4,589.21 less than last year, by reason of a falling off in annuities. There came from churches $30,863, and from annuities $15,150. The remainder came from bequests, Endeavor Societies, Sunday-schools and individuals. The total amount collected by the treasurer was $173,842.93. The fund statement, as printed in the report, showed $643,906.84, with 1,109 churches aided, 575 of these having paid their loans in full. During the past year 87 buildings were assisted with loans aggregating $121,250. These churches are distributed through 28 states and territories, some of the older states being the ones most assisted. Last year 83 congregations paid out. Five named loan funds were secured making now 25 towards the 50 of the centennial aim. Some 87 loans have been promised, aggregating $164,975. The annuity fund now amounts to $207,903.98, from 204 gifts.

Brother Muckley said that $150,000 must be raised next year and $200,000 the following year if we are to realize the million dollars. He characterized church extension as a case of arithmetical and geometrical progression combined with perpetual motion.

B. A. Abbott, or Baltimore, Md., made a great address on behalf of church extension, and as we hope to publish a part, at least, of this speech, we attempt in our limited space this week no outline of it.

George H. Combs craved the sympathy of the audience as he began his presidential address, because of the news he had just received of the death of an intimate friend. His theme was a great one and its treatment great. Brother Combs has the gift of saying striking things and he had plenty of scope for exercising the gift on this occasion. He is a sincere believer in the conversion of men. The evangelization of America, he declared, is the mission of the church, and it was in the right kind of a message bearer that his thought centered. Not ten millions of money, but ten thousand preachers for the centennial year was what he regarded as of chief importance. It was a straight-from-the-shoulder message that he spoke, and should be carefully read in its full form as presented in other columns. The personal magnetism of the man counted for much. His fearless denunciation of the divisive tendencies raised questions as to the effect of this on certain individuals, but with all this and its embellishments and literary graces, the address held the audience because first of all it was a great plea for the God-chosen and divinely led preacher of the glorious gospel.

A report of the federation meeting we must defer for lack of space this week. It has already been treated in an editorial way.

On Wednesday morning there was a second presentation of the statistical report, which will in large part be printed in our columns. A. L. Orcutt commented upon some of the points in the report on ministerial relief, and A. B. Philputt made a very fine address on the same subject. Some of his statements in opposition to the proposition to merge this work with that of our National Benevolent Association might have been challenged, but surely there was no one who could fail to be thrilled by this brilliant plea and the convention was ready enough to adopt the suggestion of W. T. Moore that it be published and given permanent form in the minutes. Seventy persons and their dependents were helped last year, scattered over twenty-two states. The amount of receipts to the general fund was $11,528.

P. C. Macfarlane spoke for the San Francisco reconstruction fund, where five church buildings are now going up at an aggregate cost of $150,000. We must, for lack of space, this week defer a fuller presentation of the situation there. W. R. Warren followed with the centennial committee's report, which will be found in large part on page 3 of this issue. J. B. Briney made a characteristic speech on home missions, pointing out our part in the establishment of religious liberty in this country.

The following nominations were presented and accepted:

President, R. A. Long, Kansas City, Mo.

First vice-president, Fletcher Cowherd, Kansas City.

Second vice-president, J. T. T. Hundley, Norfolk, Va.

Third vice-president, S. T. Willis, New York.

Recording secretaries, T. R. Bryan, Kansas City; F. N. Calvin, St. Louis, and H. Pierce Atkins, Richmond, Va.

Corresponding secretary, W. J. Wright, Cincinnati.

Associate secretaries, George B. Ranshaw and H. A. Denton.

Treasurer, C. J. Neare, Cincinnati.

Statistical secretary, W. R. Warren, Pittsburg, Pa.

Superintendent of Christian Endeavor, Claude E. Hill, Mobile, Ala.

Acting Board of the American Christian Missionary Society, S. M. Cooper, H. T. Loomis, J. H. Fillmore, Benjamin Sebastian, (auditor); Carey E. Morgan, Joseph W. Hagin, H. C. Kendrick, C. J. Neare, A. W. Fortune, R. W. Abberley and A. M. Harvuot.

Board of Church Extension, T. R. Bryan, Langston Bacon, W. F. Richardson, Fletcher Cowherd, Thomas P. Haley, J. C. Hill, all of Kansas City, Mo., and G. W. Muckley.

Board of Ministerial Relief, A. L. Orcutt, Samuel Ashby, A. B. Philputt, Amos Clifford, Dr. Jabez Hall, T. B. Laycock, all of Indianapolis; W. S. Dickinson, Cincinnati; I. J. Spencer, Lexington, Ky.; F. E. Udell, St. Louis, Mo.

Standing committee on evangelism, H. O. Breeden, B. S. Denny, A. M. Haggard, Charles S. Medbury, H. E. Van Horn, all of Des Moines, Iowa; C. B. Van Arsdall, Cedar Rapids, Iowa; Finis Idleman, Des Moines; Charles Reign Scoville, Chicago.

A very animated discussion followed on the report of the committee on recommendations. It soon become apparent the officers of the home society were strongly opposed to the report of the committee constituted of George Darsie, J. G. Slayter, J. J. Haley, A. B. Philputt and Palmer Clarkson, the latter of whom did not serve.

The convention favored the erection of a building in Hot Springs, Ark., but after considerable talk the rest of the report was referred to the acting board. The point of discussion was whether a national Bible school secretary should be employed by the A. C. M. S.

The regular sessions of the convention were concluded on Wednesday night when John E. Pounds made the speech for the National Benevolent Association and H. A. Denton supplied, at short notice, the place on the program of C. R. Scoville in delivering a centennial address. These and other matters we have not space in this issue to report.

The Affiliated Interests

The affiliated interests most to the front this year were the Benevolent Association, Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor work. The last had a good session on Saturday night. Herbert Moninger spoke finely on Sunday-school advancement, in the regular session on Wednesday afternoon, devoted to the National Bible School Association. Robert Hopkins, state superintendent of Bible school work in Kentucky, presided. The following executive committee was elected: J. M. Gill, president; C. S. Medbury, vice-president; J. A. Scott, secretary; W. H. McClain, treasurer. Central committee: Herbert Moninger, P. H. Welshimer, R. M. Hopkins, E. A. Cole, Marion Stevenson, J. H. Hardin, C. M. Fillmore, T. J. Legg, W. C. Pearce, Clarence DePew and G. P. Coler.

R. H. Miller was in the chair during the session of the National Benevolent Association and J. H. Mohorter read the report, an outline of which we herewith present.

The National Benevolent Association has enjoyed unparalleled prosperity from the beginning. Unknown and almost friendless in the beginning, it now has a mighty host of deeply devoted friends. Homeless and penniless in the beginning, it now has property in nine states in the union, aggregating over $250,000, and has an income of about $100,000 per year. Then it was occupied largely in maintaining its own existence, now thousands who have felt the touch of its helpful hand and the throb of its sympathetic heart rise up to call it blessed. No year in its history has been more abundantly fruitful than the one just closed. This rapid growth in the work of the association is one of the surest evidences of its fidelity to first principles. The work of the association is carried on through ten great affiliated institutions. It now maintains two hospitals, two homes for the aged, and six orphanages. The brotherhood has given in the year ending September 30, 1907, for the support of the work of benevolence, the magnificent sum of $96,979.50, exceeding the amount given last year by $5,184.74. All provision has been made for opening a new home for the aged in Eugene, Ore. This home, largely through the wise foresight of E. C. Sanderson, enters upon its ministry of love possessed of a beautiful property, consisting of one-half of a city block adjoining the campus of the State University, with two large dwelling houses. This property, worth $10,000, was purchased for $7,000, and turned over to the Benevolent Association to be used for the care of our worthy helpless brethren. The generous-hearted brethren of the Northwest guarantee support. The largest gift ever received by the association was made by Robert Stockton, of St. Louis. It was the princely sum of $50,000. It was given for the purpose of providing a much-needed building for the Christian Orphans' Home, of St. Louis. The new home is to be constructed and equipped according to the requirements of the highest modern ideals of philanthropic work. This building is to be a memorial to Brother Stockton's deceased wife. He said in making the gift: "I want to do this in memory of my dear wife, whose heart was deeply interested in this beautiful ministry for homeless children, but, who, because of poor health, was denied the privilege of taking an active part in it." The new building will be known as the Bettie Mae Stockton Memorial.

To summarize, we may record 585 of the world's multitude of sick poor tenderly nursed and healed with cordial and bandage; 70 of the homeless, helpless aged lovingly sheltered; 673 destitute women inspired with new hope and started on the way to self-support; 700 parents assisted until the home ruined by the hand of death could be repaired; and 4,400 homeless, parentless babies mothered and fathered in the name of Christ. This does not measure the holy ministry of the National Benevolent Association. It has saved thousands of children from an environment that meant worse than death. Through it many mothers have been saved from probable suicide, and fathers lifted out of the "slough of despond." It points with pride to a young man in California, a graduate of that state's university, a bridge architect of fine reputation already; to another —a trusted telegraph operator, and others in different lines of business; to another, a dear little woman in her own home in Illinois, happy with her husband and babies, and others similarly situated. The following is the association's financial exhibit for the year: Money in the bank, $7,913.52; bills receivable, $50,960; real estate, $198,109.41; stock, $2,000. Total, $258,982.93. Indebtedness, $35,500.

Mrs. T. R. Ayars, president of the association, in her address, suggested that the Benevolent Association was organized even before the blessed sewing society of Dorcas and that Stephen was probably the chairman. The following officers were elected: President, Mrs. T. R. Ayars; first vice-president, J. H. Allen; second vice-president, Dr. Sophia Kern; recording secretary, Mrs. Lizzie Wright; corresponding secretary, Mrs. J. K. Hansbrough; treasurer, Lee W. Grant; general secretary, James H. Mohorter.

It was stated on this occasion that Mrs. J. K. Hansbrough, of St. Louis, has been corresponding secretary of the National Benevolent Association since its organization twenty-five years ago, and that during all these years the great bulk of the money that has been contributed has passed through her hands. She has seen the work grow from the little rented cottage to the magnificent proportions which it has reached to-day with its eleven great institutions supporting nearly 1,000 children and dependent old people.

At this session a committee report on Christian Endeavor work was presented by Edgar D. Jones. It heartily endorsed the Centennial aims of Brother Hill's report and congratulated him on the good work done. It recommended that all Christian Endeavor societies respond to the appeal of the various boards to support definite and specific missionary enterprises in needy fields; that $500 be appropriated for the expenses of the superintendent. It further urged that in all societies Bible study courses and mission study classes be organized.

W. R. Warren made a statement on behalf of Christian education and J. H. Allen explained the situation with regard to the Business Men's Association. Nobody, he said, was to be excluded from this except tramps and idlers. He announced that a man was in view for the position of secretary. J. H. Garrison moved that the organization be continued and L. H. Coleman suggested that we get 1,000 business men to attend the next convention, and that ministers should urge this so that at least one business man should represent each church.

The general theme of the Saturday evening session was "young people's work." This was the first session of the convention proper and Claude E. Hill, national superintendent of Endeavor, presided at the start. C. H. Winders conducted the devotional services and J. M. Rudy offered prayer. Allen R. Moore, of Birmingham, Ala., was introduced as a practical Endeavor worker and delivered an excellent address on "The Secret of the Vitality of the Christian Endeavor Movement."

Christian Endeavor, he said, is much alive. With the 67,000 societies and its 4,000,000 members, it is stronger to-day than ever before. But its vitality does not consist in its numbers. Back of and beneath everything else lie three foundation principles, which are the secret of the vitality shown by this movement—prayer, daily study of the Bible and training for the service. In the past the church trained its members in theology. Catechisms and creeds had to be learned and recited. Debates and controversies were numerous and great stress was laid upon dogma. The church has had its theological age. Then there was a period when art was the chief thing. Every church edifice was an achievement in architecture. The walls of the building were adorned with the best work of the great masters. The church reveled in art. But now we are coming to something more practical and Christian Endeavor is helping to bring in the new ideal. The true conception of the church is not that of an art gallery, but that of a bee hive, in which all are workers; that of a shop in which every man has his kit of tools and every man has his work to do. Church architecture is being changed to conform to this new ideal. Instead of one great auditorium, a vestry room and robing room for choirs, we now demand a separate Sunday-school building with its primary, intermediate and advanced departments and separate class rooms for all classes, a prayer-meeting room, kitchen, dining-room and reception rooms; and in some cases we are demanding a reading room, gymnasium and baths. We are coming to realize that Christianity must minister to the whole man, mind, body and spirit and that to do so successfully it must be equipped for the work. Christian Endeavor is playing an all important part in bringing about this change of ideal. It affords training for every member. This training for service which the young people get is the best preparation for the duties of mature life that can come to them. For this reason Christian Endeavor is vital and must live. If the Interdenominational organization were to be abandoned Christian Endeavor would need to live on in individual churches. It fits for Christian citizenship. In this day of trusts and graft and indifference to the people's rights, we need to raise up a generation whose citizenship is based upon Christian principles; which will be so well drilled and trained in the practice of respecting the rights of others that it will be accounted a thing sacred and be kept inviolate. Again this training develops a personality that makes for good. Christian Endeavor is training for Christian union. As a people we were brought into being by the plea for Christian union. That is our great mission in the world. The basis of union which we have presented to the world, the restoration of apostolic Christianity in its faith, ordinances and life, with the Bible as our only and all sufficient guide is undoubtedly a feasible basis of union.

After a song by Miss Una Dell Berry, George H. Combs, president of the convention, was introduced by Brother Hill, and he at once called upon P. H. Welshimer to make the address on "The Sunday-school in Relation to the Evangelization of America." We hope to give later in a much fuller form than we can now present Brother Welshimer's thoughts. The chief interest of God, he said, is centered in the salvation of humanity. It was a powerful speech touching upon the fewness of the young men who are Christian and the many who find the drunkard's grave. It is not through revival meetings, he urged, that our country is to be saved for Christ, but by taking the natural way in reaching the boys. He blamed the pastors for the insignificance of our service in giving. For himself he said he did not propose to stammer and blush or apologize when he asked for an offering for God's work. After announcements, and special music by the Netz sisters, a very enjoyable evening was brought to a close.

Brother Hill presented his report, which showed that excellent work had been done during the past year. Our people, he said, are coming more and more to be regarded as the most aggressive, wide-awake body supporting Christian Endeavor. We are leading all the great bodies in growth, in number of societies and in our methods of work we are not behind.

The following were suggested as worthy Centennial Aims for our Christian Endeavorers:

First, to lead all religious bodies in number of Christian Endeavor Societies by 1909. Second, to lead all religious bodies in number of members of the societies by 1909. Third, to stand first in missionary offerings from our societies by 1909. The offerings last year of the Christian Endeavor Societies for missionary and benevolence amounted to $32,019.30. Among the recommendations submitted were that the state missionary societies be urged to elect a state superintendent of Christian Endeavor, and appropriate sufficient money to defray the expenses of this office; that all our societies be urged to co-operate in every possible way with the United Society, and with the various state, district and county unions, and report fully to the United Society of Christian Endeavor, directly through the state organization; that time and place be given to Christian Endeavor on the programs of all our conventions, and that the usual Saturday night meeting of convention next year be given over to Christian Endeavor; that all our societies enter heartily and enthusiastically upon the "Campaign for Increase and Betterment" to the end that our Centennial Aims may be realized, and be urged to increase their missionary offerings to our various missionary and benevolent boards; that our societies be urged to a fresh study of the history and doctrine of the Disciples of Christ, that we may all "be able to give a reason for the faith that is within us."

These and other recommendations received the support of the convention.

Our Budget

—Herein is a bird's eye view of the Norfolk convention.

—Only about 3,000 persons had the pleasure of being present at the convention, but probably not less than 150,000 people will read our report of it.

—In no duty that devolves upon us do we feel a greater responsibility than in reporting accurately, and as fully as we can, our national conventions. This is what we regard as news of the first importance, and no paper among us even rivals THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in its reports of all our great gatherings.

—Other convention addresses and measures remain to be printed in later numbers. When we are through with it our readers will have a very good knowledge of the Norfolk convention and they will be more faithful and efficient church members because of this knowledge.

—Owing to a strike among the pressmen in St. Louis, we have, for a couple of weeks, had some difficulty in getting out THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST on time, but we trust from now on matters will take their regular course.

—On Lord's day, November 3, is to be taken the offering for state missions. The need of funds for prosecuting this work is very great in every state, and no church should fail to respond to the call even though it is not able to give much. The educational side of the offering is not to be overlooked.

—One of the most delightful occasions of a personal nature during the Norfolk convention was a luncheon given at the Missouri building, on Disciples of Christ day, at the Jamestown Exposition. On behalf of the governor of Missouri and the state commission Mr. Ed Crumbaugh entertained the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and his wife, the Assistant Editor, Mr. and Mrs. G. L. Williams, Miss Martha Boyle, Miss Elizabeth Jameson, Mr. Irving Chenoweth, of St. Louis, and Dr. W. T. Moore, of Columbia. The occasion was a very happy one, the party congenial and the hospitality of Mr. Crumbaugh most cordial. Missourians have every reason to feel proud of their state building and their representative at the Exposition.

—We have received an excellent report, which will appear next week, of the great meeting held by Bro. Scoville at Springfield, Mo. This even surpassed the great Anderson meeting in the number of its converts, no less than 1,271 being the total.

—The illustrations of the Norfolk convention in this number are from photographs made by the Assistant Editor, with the exception of the large group on pages 1400-1401. This represents part of those who attended the services at the auditorium on Disciples of Christ day, and the photograph was taken by the official photographer of the Jamestown Exposition. This very excellent photograph of so large a group measures 20x9 inches, and can be had by sending name and address and $1 to the official photographer, Jamestown Exposition, Norfolk, Va.

—In our front page group of "snapshots," reading from the top, the pictures are Dr. Stackhouse, W. J. Wright and J. A. L. Romig, the men who have had most to do with the union sentiment in Northwest Canada; F. W. Norton; the next picture on the right, A. R. Teachout, W. R. Warren, W. J. Wright, Mrs. Wright, and G. B. Ranshaw; C. L. Loos: George A. Miller, J. J. Haley, W. T. Moore, George B. Ranshaw; J. H. and Charles Fillmore; a group on the wharf, W. R. Warren in the foreground; landing for the Exposition, T. W. Phillips at the left of the picture and A. McLean at the right; a group of missionaries on furlough and others selected to go out, with A. McLean to the right of the picture. The pictures at the bottom of the frontispiece were taken on the trip down the James River. On the left is seen the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST standing behind W. F. Richardson. In the next is seen W. T. Moore, acting as "spieler," pointing out places of interest during the journey. On the right is a general group in the front of which is W. Palmer Clarkson, of St. Louis.

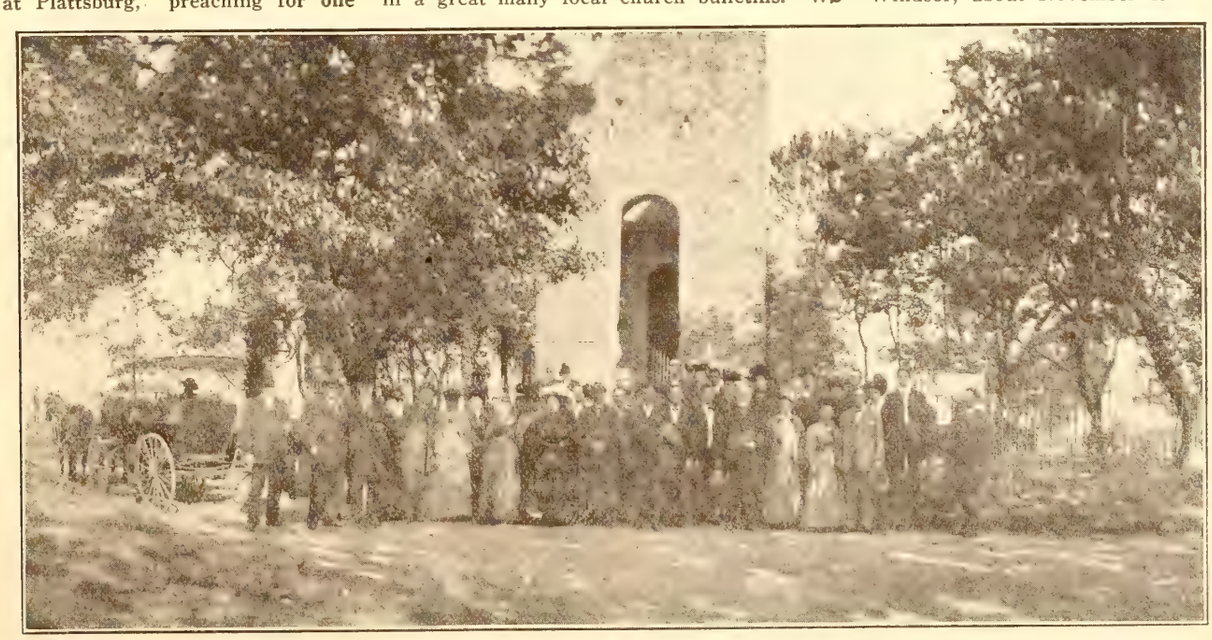
—At a recent meeting at Shiloh, Anderson county, Kentucky, held by Walter C. Gibbs, who was assisted by D. W. Case, the membership was aroused to do better work and money was raised to complete the purchase of new pews. The parsonage at Lawrenceburg, Ky., is now in use.

—J. B. Lockhart writes us that the new $10,000 church at Clarence, Mo., is a beautiful building. The walls are completed and it is being roofed. It is hoped to dedicate it about the first of the year. The seating capacity will be for 350 or more. The church is built of pressed brick.



—We would have been glad, had it been in our power, to have attended the reception which C. A. Freer gave to the men and frends of the church at Bedford, O., on last Monday evening. This church is soon to have a very interesting anniversary of which we hope to publish further particulars.

—James Sharratt is being assisted by F. O. McCauley in a meeting at Lordsburg, N. M. Many things hindered but some good results have been accomplished. N. B. McGhee is the pastor. From this point the evangelists come to Missouri for a three months' campaign under the Miller county board.

—W. A. Alton writes us that he can use a stereopticon to good advantage in the Porto Rico mission work, to which he returns November 16. He wonders whether some of our preachers can not donate a few Bible slides, or perhaps sell them to him at a reduction. He may be addressed at Elmwood, Neb.

—The church at Nevada, Mo., has gained 270 members in the last twenty-five months, and increased its property value by $5,000. W. W. Burks, the pastor, writes us that they are in one of the hottest local option campaigns ever fought in Missouri. This was hard on the meeting just held, reported elsewhere.

—The church at Windsor, Mo., where W. A. Morrison ministers, is looking forward to a great meeting in December with J. V. Coombs and Professor Dawdy and wife. The Sunday-school at Windsor is in a merry contest with that at Clinton, so far the points being in favor of Windsor. T. A. Lindenmeyer, of St. Joseph, Mo., is to hold a meeting at Hayden Grove, ten miles south of Windsor, about November 1.

—The congregation at Mackinaw, Ill., celebrated its seventieth anniversary on October 6. Alexander Campbell and Barton W. Stone are among those who have preached for this congregation. A $15,000 church building will be erected soon. F. E. Sword and Charles E. McVay have just closed a good meeting there.

—The building at Ukiah, Cal., is being enlarged by the addition of Sunday-school rooms. Otho Wilkinson is the pastor. A C. W. B. M. has been organized with fifteen members and $95 sent to Brother Holland at Kimberlin Heights. Evangelists Vawter and Wood were to begin a meeting for this church on Lord's day last.

—The Central Christian Church, Peoria, Ill., has had a map of the city prepared, and this is printed on a post card with announcement of the Sunday services and a picture of the Christian Church. Among the many places indicated on the map such as hotels, courthouses, railroad stations, etc., the first place is assigned to the Christian Church.

—W. J. Lhamon, in reporting the presence of T. P. Haley at the installation of M. A. Hart to the pastorate of our church at Columbia, Mo., says that in the inspirational address to the Bible College students Brother Haley exalted the office of the teacher and preacher. His visit and lectures were greatly appreciated by many Columbia friends.

—One hundred per cent increase was noted at the recent rally of the Bible school of the Third Christian Church, Marion, Ind. Within the past six months the membership of this church has been doubly increased and there is an active Christian Endeavor society. A. W. McKown has just held a good meeting here and the brethren warmly commend him.

—It seems that C M. Hughes, engaged in the work of singing the gospel, was recently burned out of house and home. Dr. William Thompson suggests that some of our readers may have some song books lying around which they do not want and which would be very useful to Brother Hughes, who may be addressed at Nelson, Neb., in care of G. A. Felton.

—The Central Church, Denver, Colo., has been noted for its live Bible school and live superintendent. At its third annual rally there was the largest attendance ever present, the number being 516 with a collection of $21.75. George W. Ferrin says it is strengthening all departments of the work. The pastor of this church, W. B. Craig, was the only representative of Colorado whom we recall as being at the Norfolk convention.

—R. C. Tucker sends us an account of a meeting held at Piggott, Ark., by the Clark family. This, we believe, has already been reported in the number of additions. The brethren speak highly of the work of these evangelists and state that the church was crowded to its utmost capacity. Over $500, including pledges, was raised at one of the services on behalf of the building fund.

—George T. Walden, in writing us of the death of A. B. Maston, which has already been announced in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, says he was a lion-hearted man who thought great things, attempted great things and accomplished a great work as preacher, editor and publisher. A few weeks before his death a love offering was raised as a present to him and his wife, by his Australian friends, the amount being about $3,000.

—J. P. Childs seems to have a special gift in creating an interest where there has been no regular preaching for some time. A case in point is a meeting just held at Helper, Kan., where for over a year there has been even no Sunday-school. The membership was scattered and divided. Now there is a good organization with sixty-nine in attendance at the Bible school and an Endeavor Society of over fifty. Brother Childs' address is Walnut, Kan.

—We find it impossible to make personal reply to many letters and cards from brethren expressing their approval and appreciation of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in its support of Brother McLean and our missionary society, and its position on other current questions. We certainly appreciate very highly this endorsement of our readers and we trust they will receive this general acknowledgment in the place of personal reply.

—George Wolf has resigned at Haileyville, I. T., to take up evangelistic work with the Oklahoma Missionary Society. He has had quite a success in evangelistic work. Some of his recent meetings have already been reported in our columns. He has organized several churches and at his recent charge raised over $700 to pay off the indebtedness in addition to carrying on regular church work and missionary and benevolent offerings.

—The church at Covina, Cal., has just had a great rally day. There were three services and addresses by W. C. Wald, a Sunday-school specialist; J. W. Utter, former pastor; Frank G. Tyrrell and the present pastor, W. G. Conley. Lunch was served to more than 200 in the beautiful new basement. The church has just expended about $1,000 in improvements. The Brooks brothers are to hold a meeting here beginning the last Sunday in January.

—The blinding power of prejudice and passion is seldom realized. Through its direful influence even in men supposed to be truthful, facts are distorted, truth evaded and situations so caricatured as to amount to absolute misrepresentation. This is often seen in the reports of political meetings by partisan newspapers on the opposite side. Alas, that it should be equally true among those who wear the name and profess to have the spirit of Christ.

—J. E. Teaney, who was converted in the protracted meeting held by Evangelist Violett at Litchfield, Ill., and whose spilling of the liquors of his saloon was so widely reported in the daily press, paid a visit to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST plant last week. Brother Teaney is now giving part of his time to lecture work to enable him to spend the rest of his time in study for the ministry at Christian University, Canton, Mo.

—Elsewhere will be found a brief communication from W. M. Taylor, of New Orleans, in which he speaks a reassuring word about the convention going to that city. There is no doubt, we think, but that New Orleans, which is accustomed to crowds, can entertain our convention, nor do we doubt that we can have a good large convention there. Brother Taylor sets a very high mark for the addresses, and we fear the boards will have difficulty in finding speakers who will undertake to "fill the bill." But, like the boy's bantam, above whose nest he had suspended an ostrich egg, they can look at this high ideal and do their best!

How to Send Money for Home Missions.

Sunday-schools are requested not to address letters containing their offerings for home missions to either of the secretaries. To do so will occasion delay and possibly confusion. All letters containing remittances for home missions should be addressed to the American Christian Missionary Society, Y. M. C. A. building, Cincinnati, O.

Foreign Society Notes.

November 8 Miss Pearl B. Miller, of Atlanta, Ill., sails from San Francisco on the good ship "Asia" for China, as a missionary for the Foreign Society. Many more should volunteer for the foreign service if the society succeeds in sending out fifty new missionaries this year as was agreed upon at the Norfolk convention.

The Foreign Society has just received $2,000 from the estate of Mrs. Jane L. Linn, Lilly, Ill. Every Christian should remember the Lord's work in his last will and testament.

The Foreign Society has just received a gift of $500 on the annuity plan from a friend in Michigan. This is the second gift from this friend to this society for the cause of foreign missions. Scores of such gifts should be received this year. For full information address F. M. Rains, secretary, box 884, Cincinnati, O.

Miss Harriet Alice Heiselman, late of Wooster, O., left about $2,500 to the Foreign Society in her last will and testament. This remembrance of the Lord's work is a worthy example to our whole brotherhood.

Important Notice.

The forms for the Year Book for 1908 will close November 15. It is highly important, therefore, that our preachers making changes should notify this office without delay.

Wm. J. Wright,
Corresponding Secretary The American Christian Missionary Society, Cincinnati, O.

Children's Day for Home Missions.

"Home Missions" is the uppermost theme in the Sunday-schools just now. Offerings for this great work will be made in all the schools November 24. A delightful exercise has been prepared by Charles M. Fillmore for the home board, and many schools are planning for a festal day on the Lord's day before Thanksgiving, using this exercise and other good suggestions from the office of the American Christian Missionary Society. Every school in the brotherhood should make an offering to this work this year.

Mississippi Convention.

On November 5-8, 1907, the Disciples of Christ of Mississippi, will assemble at West Point for their annual convention. You are cordially invited to be present on that happy occasion. We shall have much to rejoice over. Our two evangelists, J. E. Spiegel and M. F. Harmon are doing good work and the Lord is blessing them. One reports a meeting of 35 additions in 12 days. Both are having houses of worship to spring up in their wake. By-the-way, if you and your church have not had part in the support of state missions, send an offering at once to our treasurer or myself. We shall go up free from debt and with bright prospects. The railroads give us rates of one and one-third fare on certificate plan. Get a certificate every time you purchase a ticket and you can return for 1 cent a mile. The West Point brethren throw open their doors and say, "Come!" They are a great people; it will be a joy to meet with them.

W. W. Phares,
Jackson, Miss. Cor. Sec.

Lord's Day at the Convention.

Owing to the fact that Norfolk was crowded with visitors of all kinds, it was decided to hold a special massmeeting of the Disciples of Christ in the convention hall on the Lord's day morning instead of having them scatter to hear our various preachers who occupied the Norfolk pulpits. Some of our strongest men spoke to large audiences in the different churches, but E. L. Powell was the preacher in the convention hall. Brother Powell is a Virginian and formerly ministered at Norfolk. His father still resides there. He made a great address on our plea for, first, union; second, liberty; third, democracy.

In the afternoon some 3,000 people gathered for the annual communion service. R. W. Motley, pastor of our church at Newport News, had charge of this and everything moved like clockwork. W. E. M. Hackleman led the choir and the congregation in hymns and special music suitable for such an occasion. The tables were presided over by some of the elder of the prominent brethren present, like C. L. Loos, J. B. Briney, W. T. Moore and J. H. Garrison. On this occasion the usual collection was taken for ministerial relief.

In the evening, C. S. Medbury addressed another crowded audience, the regular service being preceded by a great song service. Many seamen from the naval station were present on this occasion.

"New Orleans in 1908."

Let there be no uncertain notes sounded from any quarter nor any misgivings on the part of the people in regard to the wisdom of the convention at Norfolk in choosing New Orleans as the next place for the great international convocation of our brotherhood, nor as to the ability and determination of New Orleans to more than meet the most sanguine expectations of the optimistic supporters of this cause.

Let the churches know that next year our convention is to be held in a great world-metropolis and that they will be thrown among a people of the highest culture and the most aesthetic nature it has ever been their pleasure to meet.

We want the strongest and best program ever put on the platform by our brotherhood.

Let us have the wisdom and experience of the "Old Guard" and the virility and culture of the modern ideal of sacred eloquence. Let every speech be a masterpiece of literary production, each being of one piece, woven of the fine twined threads drawn from the "Golden Fleece" of heaven-born truth and tinted with humor and pathos bearing the royal colors of Thyatiran fame; and not soiled by the smut of the wit and slang of the gutter. Let each of these purple robes of sacred eloquence encircle the Christ of God and be girdled down with jeweled belts set with Gospel gems.

Let these addresses be as broad as humanity in their sympathies, and as deep as the plummet of the human mind can fathom the sea of Divine thought; and as high as the apocalyptic eye of faith and hope can see. Let them be motive-making and power-generating orations. Let them be delivered without manuscript, with sufficient fervor and dynamics to arrest the attention of every hearer, and charm every heart and draw after them as many trains of thought as there are listeners.

No man has the right to preach a commonplace sermon, or deal in commonplace things, or to read a manuscript at the expense of an audience which has at great sacrifice traveled hundreds and thousands of miles to gain a heaveniy vision.

We always have some of the sublime in our conventions, but quite a little of the commonplace as well. Let us bring it all to the standard of the best we have ever had. Fraternally and lovingly,

W. M. Taylor.

The church at Ayden, N. C., is without a pastor. They wish a preacher with a wife who is also a good worker, and can pay a salary of $750 for the right man. They have a $5,000 building paid for, and a membership of 200. Address J. R. Smith.

Myron C. Settle writes that there is an excellent chance for an earnest, young minister to build up a good work with the congregation at Phillipsburg, Kan. Under proper direction they could be made able to employ a preacher for full time. Address C. A. Arnold.

C. W. Worden, Pattonsburg, Mo., has some open dates for meetings, or is willing to locate as pastor.

Inter-Denominational Sunday-school Convention of Missouri.

The above convention will be held in the city of Springfield November 19, 20 and 21. A good program is in process of construction and will be published soon. The citizens of Springfield extend a cordial invitation to Sunday-school workers throughout the state to be present. Several new departments will be presented by addresses, conferences, etc., among these being the adult Bible class movement, of which the writer is state superintendent. I desire to warmly urge all of the Christian congregations in Missouri to send ministers, superintendents, teachers and other representatives to this gathering. We exemplify our plea for union when we co-operate in matters of common interest with those who love our Lord.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

The Meeting at Chicago Heights.

Last week closed the Shelburne and Knight meeting at this place which resulted in 83 additions, nearly all of whom were confessions. We regard this as a great meeting here, and the ingathering, while not so large as in many meetings, yet, it should be noted, nearly all of these were new people. There were 18 additions at the regular services in the month just preceding the meeting. Brothr Shelburne is a fine evangelist of the modern type. Professor Knight is an able assistant. He rallied and held a large chorus until the close of the meeting. His solos were helpful. I came to this field a little more than a year ago and found 43 people trying to start a church. We now have 222 members and a Sunday-school with an enrollment of 150 and run on modern lines. We have Baraca, King's Daughters and normal classes. Every teacher is present at the teachers' meeting. Our church services are well attended and a chorus choir of 30 voices furnishes us music. By October 13 our tabernacle, which will seat 500, will be ready for use. The people of this city who a few months ago thought of us as a small struggling mission church, are beginning "to sit up and take notice." W. S. Lockhart.

West Virginia Notes.

Percy H. Wilson, who has ministered to the church at Moundsville for three years, has resigned to become an evangelist of the Western Pennsylvania Missionary Society. Moundsville is in need of a good man to fill his place.——Proctor has employed C. V. Dunn, a Bethany student, for one-fourth time.——Our state paper, the West Virginia "Christian," is now being published at Bethany. The editor, Brother O. G. White, will devote his time to Bible school work in connection with his editorial labors.——C. H. Bass is the new minister at Central Church, Huntington, where O. G. White was located until October 1.——J. F. Williams begins a meeting with the new Bethel church, October 13.——A. H. Jordan, minister at Sistersville, and A. Linkletter, state evangelist, are holding a series of evangelistic meetings at West Union.——A number of state missionary rallies are being planned. They will touch upon all phases of our work in West Virginia, but will especially emphasize state missions.——G. H. Ellis, minister at Dolls Run and Hagans, reports one addition from the Baptists.——E. H. Hart closed his work at Wellsburg, October 1.——W. E. Pierce, minister at Cameron, is preaching a series of Lord's day morning sermons on "The Christian," "His Own Life," "The Christian and his Neighbor," "The Christian and the Home," "The Christian and his Business," "The Christian and his Social Life," "The Christian and Missions," "The Christian and Politics," "The Christian and his Children." He reports all departments of the work at Cameron in good condition. The offering for Church Extension and the offering for Missions were each better than last year. ——W. M. Long, minister at Clarksburg, reports three additions, two by baptism and one by statement.——E. B. Quick is doing good work at Morgantown, the seat of the West Virginia University. He reports a good offering for Church Extension, one baptism and one confession Lord's day, September 29.——Richie Ware, of Beckley, will assist A. H. Jordan in a meeting at Friendly the latter part of October. Geo. F. Crites, evangelist of Kanawha district, has been assisting J. G. McNeely in a meeting at Logan.——The West Virginia Christian Missionary Society is on the lookout for another evangelist.

J. W. Yoho, Cor. Sec. W. Va. C. M S.

Wisconsin Items.

Richland Center reports two added by letter last Lord's day, and that the church expects to hold a meeting with home forces, beginning December 1. The pastor, F. M. McHale, only recently took up the work there.——Bro. J. P. Wright, of Readstown, recently went to a neighborhood called Rush creek, preached three evenings and baptized seven.——Near Packwaukee are a few faithful Disciples who have kept the light burning for several years, and most of the time without preaching. A letter from Miss Annie Philp says the Bible school is better than for two years. It is held in a schoolhouse.——Grand Rapids is planning a short meeting in November with Claire L. Waite, of the Milwaukee church, as preacher. Brother Waite and the church donate his time. The Milwaukee church thinks of starting a mission in that city soon.——The Wisconsin convention was held with the Footville church this year, and it was the most helpful one that we have had since I have been a convention goer. There were nearly double the number of delegates of any former year, and much more money was raised.——There are about 30 churches in the state with a membership of almost 2,150. One hundred and seven baptisms were reported from the six missions, and hopeful reports came from all over the state. We look for a great move forward the coming year.——Milwaukee entertains the convention next year.——The missionary board are: President, J. C. Thurman, Green Bay; vice-president, Claire L. Waite, Milwaukee; corresponding secretary, H. F. Barstow, Grand Rapids; recording secretary, J. H. Fisher, Evansville; treasurer, Earle Pease, Grand Rapids. H. F. Barstow, Cor. Sec.

North Carolina.

The state convention of North Carolina will be held at Belhaven on October 29-31. A large attendance is expected.——A new congregation has been started at Wilmington, the largest city in the state. W. G. Walker, Washington, D. C., is corresponding secretary of the state. He has been pushing the raising of money for Atlantic Christian College, and other good works.——Piedmont district held its convention at Spray September 27, 28. There was also preaching on Sunday, September 29, by H. H. Ambrose, of Wilson. The convention was not largely attended by delegates outside of Spray, but considerable interest was taken in the plan for evangelizing in this part of the state. A good man is needed for this work and another for the congregation at Spray.——The Ministerial Association of Winston-Salem has had a committee at work for months trying to prevent the miserable set of gamblers that follow the fairs from being admitted to the grounds. It was agreed that they were to be kept out, but they slipped in somehow. Some of the ministers investigated the first day and the principal of the business college came out next morning in the paper with a scathing article. The committee met at 1:30 p. m. with the writer; and by 4:30 the gamblers were "folding their tents" to steal away, but not to steal any more of our people's money.——The church here will send a delegation of three or four to the national convention at Norfolk. Our men's class in the Bible school has grown to thirty members; the enrollment of the school is about 135, with 28 additional on the cradle roll.

J. A. Hopkins.

Oklahoma Christian University.

Oklahoma Christian University was launched on scheduled time September 17, and already has an attendance exceeding 175 in number representing sixteen states. Nearly 50 ministerial students are now in attendance, many of whom are doing effective work as ministers of nearby churches. Thus are we entering seriously into the ministerial supply problem of the new state. Despite the fact that the rasp of the saw and ring of the hammer has not entirely died away, all classes are organized and are doing effective work. Nor is our work confined to the preparatory school alone, as is often the case in new institutions. But freshmen, sophomore, junior, senior and even graduate students are now here hard at work.——October 11 the University Ministerial Association had its first regular meeting, being addressed by President Zollars. Thirty members were present.——On September 14 our girls moved into the completed ladies' hall which is a model of beauty and convenience. In beauty and healthfulness of location, adequate plant and devout and scholarly faculty we have all that could be hoped for. Come and see us.

A. F. Reiter, professor of mathematics.

JOSEPH JOACHIM.

JOSEPH JOACHIM, the distinguished musician and violinist, Director of the Berlin Royal High School of Music, the founder and dominating spirit of the world renowned Joachim String Quartet, wrote as follows concerning

Mason & Hamlin ORGANS

"The Mason & Hamlin Organs, which are being used in the Royal High School of Music, are distinguished for their extraordinary pureness and fullness of tone, as well as for their quick response and elastic touch. They are of exceptional value in the drawing room, as well as in the concert hall, and can well take the place of the pipe organ. Without hesitation, I count them the very best yet produced in reed organ manufacture."

The reason for such opinions from the world's greatest musicians is found in the MASON & HAMLIN quality of tone and power and variety of expression—not found in any other instruments.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

Evangelistic

We invite ministers and others to send reports of meetings, additions and other news of the churches. It is especially requested that additions be reported as "by confession and baptism," or "by letter."

Alabama.

Mobile, October 21.—Two accessions by letter since last report.—James H. Robinson.

California.

Los Angeles, October 21.—Figueroa Street Church is being led by E. E. Lowe in a meeting now two weeks old, in which there have been 31 added—23 by baptism. This is a remarkable meeting considering that our three-months old congregation had a membership of only 55, and we have all the difficulties of city life to contend with.—E. H. Kellar, minister.

Colorado.

Greeley, October 21.—Our work here in Greeley moves along nicely. Eight additions by letter and statement the last two Lord's days.—V. L. Goodrich.

District of Columbia.

Washington, October 23.—Report at preachers' meeting: Vermont Avenue (F. D. Power), four by letter, one by confession; Fifteenth Street (J. E. Stuart), one baptism, one by letter; Ninth Street (George A. Miller), one confession. Many Disciples passing through from Norfolk spent the Lord's day here. W. T. Moore spoke at Vermont Avenue, Miss Bertha Mason at Thirty-fourth Street, F. B. Sapp at H Street; Miss Berry sang at Vermont Avenue and Ninth Street and Frank Huston also sang at the latter place. Evangelistic services were begun at Ninth Street on October 20, the preaching being done by the pastor and the music led by Mrs. J. E. Powell.—Claude C. Jones, secretary.

Illinois.

Freeport, October 18.—A three-weeks' meeting at Belle Plain, with F. A. Scott, closed Sunday evening with seven additions—three by baptism and four from another religious body. The church is ready for better work because of the meeting. Brother Scott served them well.—J. A. Barnett.

Clinton, October 19.—The tabernacle revival in this city, which is being conducted by the Christian church under the leadership of Marshall and Beyer, is proving to be a great meeting. It is the greatest revival ever conducted in the city. Its influence has gone out far and wide. A young minister and his wife from another church have been baptized and desire to be known simply as Christians. They will work with the evangelists for a while. Meeting is five weeks old with 101 additions to date.—J. W. Reynolds, pastor.

Barnett, October 24.—Fifteen in the first eleven nights—14 by confession and one from another church. No minister and no singer, but good crowds and good prospects.—William A. Ward, evangelist.

Fairbury, October 21.—A meeting of five weeks closed here October 13, conducted by Evangelist Harold E. Monser, and C. H. Altheide and Miss Nellie Pollock, singers. There were 12 added—five by confession and baptism, five by statement and two from another church. The good of the meeting, however, can not be measured by the number of additions.—E. P. Gish, minister.

Blue Mound, October 15.—We closed a three weeks' meeting here October 13 with 17 additions—13 by confession and four by statement. J. H. Smart, of Decatur, did the preaching.—S. E. Sines, minister.

Toluca, October 21.—Meeting two weeks' old, with four by confession and baptism and two by statement. Evangelists Givens and Landrum are conducting the work. Meeting continues.—F. M. Morgan, minister.

Gurnee, October 21.—Two confessions and baptisms yesterday at morning service.—John S. Zeran.

Clinton, October 25.—The tabernacle meeting here conducted by the pastor, J. W. Reynolds, and Evangelists Marshall and Beyer, closed Sunday night after continuing five weeks, with 110 additions to the church. The city was stirred as never before. The work was highly constructive and perfectly satisfactory to the church, which is in better condition now than ever before. The evangelists have been secured for a return date. It was a great victory for Clinton.

Milton, Oct. 16.—I closed my meeting at Old Union, in Green county, with 13 additions. We closed with a crowded house and most profound interest. The meeting was pronounced a victory under the existing conditions. The church gave me a unanimous call to preach for them one-fourth time the ensuing year. I was never among a better class of people.—J. R. Campbell.

Indiana.

Fairview.—Just closed a good meeting here. Four confessions at closing service October 6. Will continue my work there another year.—F. W. Sumner, minister.

Logansport, October 20.—October 14 four by baptism and one by confession. Two more by confession to-day.—J. H. Craig.

Indian Territory.

Tulsa, October 21.—Five additions here since last report—two by confession and baptism and three by letter, making 56 since I came here the first of April.—M. S. Dunning, pastor.

Iowa.

Sioux City, October 19.—Our four-weeks' meeting with Mitchell and Bilby resulted as follows: Fifty-six added to the membership of the local church—24 by confession and baptism, 5 by letter and baptism and 27 by letter and statement.—J. K. Ballou, minister.

Keokuk, October 21.—The work here is going forward. Seven additions yesterday, 14 in the last three Sundays. Baptized a lady 67 years old last night. Every department in the church is doing a splendid work.—M. J. Nicoson.

Belinda.—The church here has just closed a series of revival meetings conducted by Ira E. Carney, of Anderson, Iowa. The visible results were 18 by confession and baptism and four otherwise. It was a great awakening, as the church had been without preaching for some years and had become discouraged.—J. E. Smith.

Pulaski, October 21.—Our meeting of twelve days with the Mount Sterling church resulted in eight baptisms. Brother Maxwell, the regular preacher, continues the meeting this week.—D. Dunkleberger.

Hamburg, October 21.—Two baptisms at our afternoon service yesterday. Last night the church was packed and scores turned away. Isaac Elder, the pastor, is preaching.—Charles E. McVay, song evangelist.

Exira.—One confession.—C. A. Polsom.

Perry, October 24.—Two from another religious body last Sunday.—R. H. Ingram.

Kansas.

Cherryvale, October 21.—Two additions yesterday by letter; one the Sunday preceding by confession and baptism.—B. D. Gillespie.

Greenleaf, October 21.—The meeting here is progressing finely. Brother and Sister Aydelott are splendid workers. House packed. Five additions last night, 23 to date.—Guy G. Emery, minister.

Jewell, Oct. 15.—Fifty-one added to the church last Lord's day—38 by primary obedience and 13 otherwise. This is the result of the union meeting held by Dr. Biederwolf and his force. No town will make a mistake in securing these men. The church here is in good working condition, 250 strong.—B. A. Channer, minister.

Pleasanton, Oct. 17.—Our three weeks' meeting closed with 34 additions. All but five were heads of families. Twenty were by baptism, one by letter, one reclaimed, and 12 from other churches. Our work is doing nicely in all departments. A more earnest band I never worked with.—B. A. Ishmael.

Kentucky.

Waterview, October 22.—I am in a great meeting here with Miss Mayme Debb, of Glasgow, leader of song. The meeting is not yet a week old. Last night the house was not only crowded, but the church yard was full of people also. We hope to have a glorious meeting.—J. M. Weddle, Burkesville, Ky.

Carrollton, October 21.—We have just closed one of the best meetings ever held in this church. It was not an evangelistic meeting, but decidedly a church meeting, in which the members recognized their part. J. W. Hagin, of Covington, was the speaker and proved himself the man for the place. Great audiences came to hear him and the whole city was helped spiritually. There were 36 additions to the church—22 by confession and baptism, six restored and eight by letter. Altogether the prospect is most encouraging.—W. J. Clarke, minister.

Shiloh, October 22.—D. W. Case, of Lexington, assisted me recently in a two-weeks' meeting at this place, which resulted in 15 additions—13 by confession and baptism and two by statement.—Walter C. Gibbs, Lawrenceburg, Ky.

London, October 25.—One added from another church last Sunday.—Clarence E. Miller.

Mayfield.—I recently closed a short meeting with the Bethel church, near Woodville, Ky. This is a good country church. Our meeting resulted in 25 additions and was regarded as a good meeting in every way. J. H. Thomas gives the church one-fourth time.—Sherman B. Moore.

Missouri.

Clarence.—Eleven additions since last report at Union, Shelby county, and three at Bevier.—J. B. Lockhart.

Nevada, October 23.—We closed a three weeks' meeting last night with 46 additions. Boen and Parnell, of Texas, were with us and did a good work. Considering the length of time, this is one of the best meetings ever held by the church.—W. W. Burks.

Harrisonville, October 17.—One confession last Sunday; also one at prayer-meeting Wednesday night, both active business men. Thirty additions during the seven months I have been pastor. Closed a meeting last Friday night at Knob Knoster, Mo., where my brother Phil is pastor, with 15 additions—10 by confession.—King Stark.

Springfield, October 18.—Seven baptisms at the First Church this week. We are still reaping the fruits of the Scoville meeting.—N. M. Ragland.

Huntington, October 19.—We are in a good meeting here. Closed at Forbes on October 10 with 39 additions, nearly all of them by confession and baptism. We went to Forbes on the heels of a union meeting which made many of the people want to hear the gospel as we preach it. Our meeting here starts off nicely.—Spicer and Douthit.

Canton, October 19.—Closed at Salem, in Scotland county, with 30 additions—four from other churches and 24 baptisms. This is one of the oldest churches in northeast Missouri.—Cecil V. Pearce and wife.

Weaubleau, October 23.—I have just closed a splendid meeting with home forces at Calhoun. The meeting lasted twelve days and 15 were added to the congregation—five by statement, four restored, three baptisms and three from another church.—S. E. Hendrickson.

Liberty, October 21.—The union tabernacle meeting which Lincoln McConnell is holding with the four churches here is stirring our whole community. Great audiences are crowding the tabernacle. Possibly a thousand turned away last night. Over 100 confessions to date. The preaching is on the fundamentals of man's need and Christ's ability and willingness to save.—Graham Frank.

Mount Washington, October 22.—We have just finished a short meeting here with eight additions. J. L. Thompson, of Kansas City, did the preaching. This church has great things before it.—Henry W. Hunter, minister.

Monticello, October 21.—Closed a two-weeks' meeting at Steffenville, with 12 additions—nine by obedience, three by statement. Just beginning here. Two additions.—C. L. Harbord.

Willow Springs, October 25.—Closed at Mountain Grove with six confessions and seven by letter and statement. One from another church yet to be baptized. Brother Hicks and wife are much loved by their people. We begin here October 26.—E. H. Williamson, third district evangelist.

Ludlow.—The meeting here conducted by David Millar closed with 27 added to the church—21 by confession and baptism. The interest was good throughout the meeting, which lasted two weeks and two days, and the building could not accommodate the crowds. The church was greatly strengthened.—Wiley Miller.

Hume, Oct. 16.—Closed a short meeting here last night. One confession and baptism—a young man who is one of the most promising prospects for the ministry I have met for some time. Closed a short meeting at Sweet Springs just before coming here. Four baptisms there and one "Timothy" for the ministry. This is my third "Timothy" for the ministry this summer and fall. Brother Hanger is my singer and helper and is a good one.—R. Tibbs Maxey, general evangelist.

Pattonsburg, Oct. 18.—I have just closed a meeting at Lock Springs with 46 additions. This church was organized last November with 14 members. We now have a membership of 48 and will build at once. Harry Walston, now of Kansas, had charge of the music.—C. W. Worden.

Joshua Renewing the Covenant With Israel.—Josh. 24:14-28.

Memory verses, 22-24.

Golden Text.—Choose ye this day whom ye will serve.—Josh. 24:15.

The first period of Israel's struggle for the possession of Palestine closed with the death of Joshua. He had become the leader of the nation as it stood upon the border of the land which it was about to enter. He had been the leader in the arduous task of winning for Israel standing-ground in the land which was to be theirs. The condition of affairs at this time is vividly depicted in the opening chapters of the Book of Judges. Israel did not drive out the Canaanites. In some places the Canaanites were reduced to a condition of mild serfdom. In others, apparently, the two peoples dwelt side by side on terms of reasonable equality and without much friction.

The work of Joshua, if it had not given Israel exclusive possession of the land, if it had not removed the danger of contamination by contact with corrupt pagan peoples, had at least given to the nation a local habitation and a status among the peoples of the world. They were no longer homeless nomads. The Promise, which Jehovah had given through Moses, was no longer a distant vision of the future. They had found their inheritance.

Joshua's farewell to the people when he knew that he was about to die, took the form of a renewal of their covenant with Jehovah. Perhaps he was wise enough to foresee that the period of greatest danger was yet to come. So long as Israel was at war with the heathen peoples which surrounded her, there was relatively little danger that she would be corrupted by them. But when there came a lull in the conflict, and friendly relations took the place of hostility, then would naturally begin the process of assimilation. More than one conquering nation has eventually been conquered by its beaten foes when they ceased to be foes. So it was important that Israel, when entering upon this period of perilous peace, should renew her covenant with Jehovah.

The case was put by Joshua in admirably clear-cut form. "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve." Most of those who fail to choose the service of Jehovah, do so because they fail to see the issue clearly presented to them as a question to be decided here and now. Every man is constantly making the choices which determine the direction of the current of his life. The trouble is that, in making the choices, one seldom realizes that they do determine anything more than the occupation of the moment. Few men would deliberately choose to serve the devil for life, but many are willing enough to serve him for ten minutes for the sake of some fancied advantage. So, without stopping to think out a plan for the whole of life, we go on and make an endless series of wrong little choices which, in the aggregate, are equivalent to that sweeping wrong choice which we never meant to make.

As there were turning points in the life of the nation of Israel when it was important that the covenant should be renewed and the choice made anew, so there are turning points in individual lives when this crucial question should be pointedly asked. This is especially true of that period of life which stands between childhood on the one hand and manhood and womanhood on the other. Those days of adolescence are the time for the great choices of life. The life calling is being chosen. The intellectual tastes are being fixed. Permanent friendships are being formed. The individual is beginning to make his own place in society. All of these adjustments demand choices which are in large measure permanent. But the greatest choice of all is that which must be made in answer to the demand, "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve."

The Relation of Conscience to Happiness.

Topic November 6, 2 Cor. 1:12.

"For our rejoicing is this, the testimony of our conscience, that in simplicity and godly sincerity, not with fleshly wisdom, but by the grace of God, we have had our conversation in the world, and more abundantly to you-ward." This is one of the finest revelations of the inner life of the Great Apostle, and does infinite credit to his heart and life. It is a splendid proof of his fidelity to conviction and noble sincerity and devotion.

After all, there is no joy in this world like that which comes from right living and the simple doing of our duty, as we are given, by the grace of God, to see what is our high calling and our duty, be it simple or sublime. We talk of the "Simple Life" and of the "Strenuous Life"; of our complex "modern life"; of high life and low life; but there is just one life that is really worth the living—the life of the humble follower of the Christ, the calmest, serenest, sweetest, strongest, most unselfish, supremest, most steadfast, most successful man that ever lived. Call him a man, or as he spoke of himself, the Son of man, and there is no other character in all history to compare with his, no life that approaches his in simplicity combined with such strength, such perfect self-poise, such complete self-abnegation, yet with a mastery of self that made him the Master of men then and now, and will forever win and be worthy of the affections of the race. The character and writings of Paul furnish us perhaps the best illustrations of the relation of conscience to happiness, though our conception of the thing, or of the condition called "happiness," is not very clear. Happiness is not conditioned on freedom from the ordinary relations and duties of life. Paul certainly had his full share of trials and troubles. Yet in the midst of all he could say, "None of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy, and the ministry which I have received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the gospel of the grace of God" (Acts 20:24)).

It was this same apostle who wrote, as the prisoner of the Lord at Rome: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous judge shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but to all them also that love his appearing." It was Paul and Silas who sang songs in the nighttime and prepared the heart of the Philippian jailer and his household to receive the gospel of grace to men in the stress of life, in prison, or in the workshop, in field or factory, by the riverside, where prayer is wont to be made, or where the voice of prayer is not ordinarily heard.

In the midst of his toils and struggles the great apostle could shout "Rejoice evermore; and again I say, rejoice." And again he wrote: "If I am offered up on the service and sacrifice of your joy, I joy and rejoice with you all." The secret of it all is revealed in this: "I have lived in all good conscience unto this day." His strength was as the strength of ten, because his heart was pure, and his joy was the joy of the Lord.

One may forget a striking saying. One is less likely to forget a striking picture. If the saying is accompanied by a picture it is almost impossible to forget it for the memory of the picture.

This was Jesus' way of teaching. He had much to teach us and little time for his work. How could he make the truth stick? The scripture lesson for the present topic is a fine illustration of Jesus' method of teaching an important truth.

We sometimes say that this present generation of men is "money mad." They may be so, but no more so than they have always been. In the days of Jesus and the apostles men were money mad. The recurring exhortation and warning to his followers is against money madness or covetousness.

Jesus has embodied this warning in a saying and a picture which we shall hardly forget. One man wanted more money than he had. His brother did not wish to surrender it, wishing to possess it for himself. How modern!

The first man appealed to Jesus to help him. The help he received was not in acquiring a larger portion of the money but a truer conception of the meaning of life and a warning against the one thing which would destroy life.

There is the picture. The greedy rich man, growing greedier and richer every day. We would point to him as a "leading citizen" and envy his posesssions. We might cite our sons to him as an example of thrift and feel flattered if our daughters married into his family. We are rather proud of the fact of having a number of men like him "in our church." But what does Jesus say?

"Take heed and beware of covetousness." What is covetousness? There he sits before us in the picture, a covetous man, grasping and hoarding. They live all about us. And ing dollar to dollar and acre to acre and story upon story to their sky-scrapers. There is no mistaking the picture. It is not the man who can make money, but the man who can only make money to hoard.

"A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things he possesseth." Jesus said so, we believe the contrary; a most unfortunate state of mind for us to be in, living after a word which is contrary to the word of Jesus. We count them fortunate who have more and more in their store of possessions.

"Thou fool." This is what God says of such a man. It ought to be what we think of such men. We should not wish to stand convicted of folly by the great God. The man who hoards is a fool, he is also a covetous man. What of it?

We are told that a covetous man has no place in the kingdom of heaven. A man is therefore certainly a fool who so lives here as to shut himself out of the kingdom of heaven.

What are we to do if we have a faculty of making money? Make it by all means, but make it not to hoard, but to use for the purpose of the kingdom of God. Use mammon for the purpose of purchasing eternal habitations.

God needs for the uses of his kingdom multitudes of money makers who will turn the stream of wealth into the channels of the kingdom. A young man may well aspire to be such a money maker. If he chooses to become a rich man on the other hand, he is pronounced a fool by the word of God and warned that he will never enter heaven.

THE IMPERIALISM OF CHRIST.

tremendous passion to lift this mighty world upon his pierced hands as the richest trophy of his toil and as the royal signet of his competency to reign. Then

"How sweet 'twill be at evening
If you and I can say;
Good Shepherd, we have been seeking
The lambs that went astray;

"Heartsore and faint with hunger
We heard them making moan,
And lo! we come at nightfall,
Bearing them safely home."

In the days of the crumbling of the Holy Roman Empire, when Charlemagne was dead, the bewildered and disappointed men of state unlocked the tomb of the noble Frank and set the unclothed skeleton upon a crimson cushion. Upon the bleached brow they placed the golden crown with flashing jewels and within the bony hand they placed the royal scepter. They bowed to the silent form and then called aloud, but no sound came from the long-dead lips of Charlemagne, and only a dumb, bewildered awe filled their minds; but we do not wend our way to Arimathaea that we may set up the skeleton form of Jesus in the tomb of Joseph, nor can mankind place a crown upon his lofty brow, nor a sceptre in his blessed hands, but our Emperor, who was dead and slept within the rocky tomb, arose from the dead and hung the keys of the grave at his girdle and is alive for evermore.

Although our eyes of flesh cannot see him, he is here and our feeble hands touch him every moment and such inexpressible communications pass between him and us that all moments are holy, and none without incomprehensible and divine significations. He bears the supplications of his saints; he is pained at our sorrows; grieved at our unfaithfulness; pleased at our fidelity, and gives to us the nimbus of his benedictions amid our toils and sacrifices. He has already commanded us, and not to help him to this great world task is disloyalty. Out of his eyes of pity and love he looks to every believer to witness to the world that he is the Christ, for "in none other is there salvation, neither is there any other name under heaven, that is given among men, whereby we must be saved." To him be the blessing and the honor and the glory and the dominion for ever and ever. Amen.

HOW TO WIN SUCCESS.

"How shall I win success in life?" the young man asked; whereat
"Have push," replied the Button, "and a purr-puss," said the Cat.
"Find out the work you're sooted for," the Chimney Sweeper said,
Just as the Match and Pin remarked, "And never lose your head."

"Aspire to greater, finer things," the Nutmeg cried; the Hoe
Said, "Don't fly off the handle;" and the Snail remarked, "Go slow."
"Be deaf to all that's told you," said the Adder. "'Mid the strife, I've found it best," remarked the Heart, "to beat my way through life."

"Select some proper task and then stick to it," said the Glue.
"Look pleasant," said the Camera, "and tied-y," said the Shoe.
"Have nerve," exclaimed the Tooth; the Hill remarked, "Put up a bluff."
"And keep cool," said the Ice; whereat the young man cried, "Enough!"

There is no single act in your life, there is no single dilemma in which you find yourself placed, in which the answer is not in Jesus Christ.—Phillips Brooks.

"If none were sick and none were sad
What service could we render?
Methinks if we were always glad
We scarcely could be tender."

"And what is that large building down among those blooming trees there?" asked James, as they sat on the president's veranda after tea.

"Oh, that is Dr. Reid's new hospital, which the city has just completed," was the answer. "He is there now; let us step in and see him."

As they came to the office door, the doctor saw James, and hurried to greet him and to usher him into the beautiful parlor just off from the office.

"Well, I supposed that you folks had given up doctors, drugs and such diabolical implements," said James, smiling as he spoke.

"Well, you see," said the president, "there is a time and place for all things, as the wise man says; and we must let our moderation be known to all men, for the Lord is at hand. Furthermore, being present with his people, we believe he uses one man and his means as well as others. Here is Dr. Reid, with a staff of Christian physicians, all earnest, God-fearing men of prayer, to whom every art and part of hygiene and anatomy is known. There are thousands upon thousands of people who are sick and suffering from unknown causes, and from which some simple change of diet or slight correction of irregularities, or perhaps an adaptation of something that is perfectly natural, might save them; and often, then, there is necessity of having certain abnormal growths and tumors removed and other corrections of habits, etc., for which a doctor is necessary. Also, in the case of a broken bone or serious wound or dislocated joint. Now, James, we have learned that much which is not necessary to the more enlightened, who live by faith, is quite essential to others who do not yet know the way of truth and the life more abundant. We here have an opportunity to lead them from the seen to the unseen, from darkness to light."

Dr. Reid just then turned on the electric gong, which summoned all the patients to evening prayers. Some two hundred came to the large chapel and President Brown was invited to attend and assist in the services, which consisted in reading portions of the Scripture, singing, prayer and testimony. One of the physicians spoke of God's power to heal and of Christ's presence in Spirit to save and guide into all truth; the small need of material things to those who were spiritually-minded and had come into the perfect rest in Christ, which enabled them to put away the seen and look to the unseen alone for healing body, soul and spirit.

James was introduced to the audience and spoke at some length upon his happy surprises and expectations for the future of the wonderful colony planted there. His mind was so full of what he had seen and heard that he could not help breaking out into glowing admiration of much that had come to his notice.

Dr. Reid arose and told the company the experience after the tragedy that had happened to James at Eaton, and also added that from that day he had not doubted God's power and will to heal us of all our diseases, and to cleanse us of all our iniquities alike.

President Brown told of his own wonderful restoration, and also how God had led in the establishment of the city, although he did not know at the time whither or how he was being led. He emphasized these points above all others—passivity of spirit and absolute surrender; to be led as God wills rather than choosing our own will and way. "Oh! it is blessed to sink down into the sweet will of God and find the everlasting arms beneath and about us," said he, as he closed his talk and pronounced the benediction.

James spent the evening at home in sweet converse with his dear mother, whose counsel he still listened to with reverence and attention.

Chapter XIX—A Wedding at Christmastide in the Land of Roses and Sunshine.

Ring sweetest bells, in merry peals,
Ring for the love that the eye reveals,
Ring for the vows that make two one,
Ring for the best day under the sun."
We two make home of any place we go.
We two find joy in any kind of weather.
Or if the earth be clothed in bloom or snow,
If summer days invite, or bleak winds blow,
We two, we two, we make our world our weather.

The purification of the intellect and the heart from year to year is the real marriage, foreseen and provided for from the first and wholly above our consciousness.—R. W. Emerson.

Christmas day of that year was a glad occasion in Middleton, for there was to be a wedding at the house of worship, and all who wished to come were invited. The roses seemed to bloom more profusely, and the daffodils lifted up their heads in the balmy breeze that wafted over the green fields of alfalfa and blooming strawberry vines more joyfully on that beautiful December day than they had ever done before in Middleton. The wild crocus and dainty wild flowers were blooming on the mountainside, where the snow-line waxed and waned as the sun approached or receded in the sky, and the birds sang their glad carols as they flitted and soared in the hazy light of the midwinter season. This all seemed strange to James, who had known only cold and snowy winter seasons at Eaton; for the eastern and northern December days were always marked by bleak weather and the absence of summer birds and flowers. But there had come a change, and his life, like the glad season and the birds without, was full of singing and joy; for he was that day to wed the girl in all the wide world that he had ever really loved, and he thought that he never again could be sad.

Grace, too, was happy amid the glad scenes of the beautiful world. She had always seen the beautiful in everything, and had cherished naught but the things lovely and of good report. Hence her spirit, like her face, was filled with joy and wholesome smiles, and she was beloved by all who knew her. Her three short years at Middleton had endeared her to the hearts within the community. Her sweet voice had charmed them with sacred song in the sanctuary, and her presence had cheered them in the prayer and praise services of the week. Her patient hands had plied the needle for the poor and her tender heart had sympathized with the sorrow-stricken and unfortunate. She was the leader in the young people's training classes for missions and for Christian work. Proficient in the study of the word of God and a teacher in the children's classes on the Lord's day, her name suited her disposition and her appearance as she stood before the altar leaning upon the judge's arm awaiting the offering up in the sacred office of marriage to the only young man she had ever pledged her faith and love. Others had sought her hand, but James was her ideal, her chosen and spared of God, and to him alone she had yielded that cheerful and unstinted devotion. And she was to him all that his soul had ever dreamed of womanhood's noble being, and he had not thought himself worthy of her life and love. But such is love, noble and true, unselfish and unassuming.

The judge was now past eighty, his head and beard as white as the driven snow, his once stalwart frame now trembling and fast declining with the great weight of years that were upon him. But his face was bright, his eye clear and his voice distinct as he presented the bride to James in such tender and touching words as to cause all to realize that they were in the presence of a noble man indeed. Since coming to Middleton he had acted for the state in the capacity of a referee upon cases of great concern, and had given splendid satisfaction to the legal profession and to the statesmen of his jurisdiction. He had thus brought the Middleton project into prominence with men of high standing, and had by invitation several such, including the governor of the state, in attendance at the wedding of his daughter. He began by giving a brief sketch of her mother's character and his love for her, who was now awaiting on the other shore his coming. He thanked God for the circumstances that had surrounded the marvelous recovery of him who was now to be his daughter's protector for life, and that he was ready to meet her. He then modestly took his daughter's hand and placed it in the hand of James and kneeling with them first gave her his parting blessing with such tenderness that all were moved to tears; then together he blessed them both with the blessing of peace, joy and prosperity, a long and useful and fruitful life withal, then arose and walked away, deeply moved to tears, motioning the pastor to pronounce them husband and wife and give the benediction.

Charlie broke down completely at the mention of his mother, and the audience wept with him, for he had told them of his wonderful restoration and the story of his life in a lecture not long before.

That evening the whole city turned out to the missionary concert at the pavilion to behold the play of the "Babe of Bethlehem," enacted by the college students, at which Grace and James gave a vocal rendering of the shepherds' "Peace on earth and good-will to men" in a most charming manner.

The first of the new year a band of missionaries were to be sent forth to the regions beyond, and James and Grace were to lead them out. It was the old "Homiletic team," of Eaton, who had united their fortunes and faith once more, and to them had been added many others of like precious faith and buoyant hope.

Missionary Trip Through the Heart of Africa

(Concluded from Last Week.)

With a Bacwa for a guide, we pushed on to the next village, called Bolinge. After two long hours of heavy marching through forest and jungle, but no swamps, we reached the outskirts of a large village and here, owing to our friendly guide, we were well received. A large crowd gathered, and we preached to them for an hour straight, our porters straggling in one by one and two by two. We were all tired, but when we heard that another section of Bolinge was near by, and there was still two hours of sun, we started on; but woe to me! I was so dead tired when we got there that I just wasn't worth much. We had a large audience there, and while the evangelists were preaching I had been fighting off sleepiness to no avail, and before they were finished I was shamelessly asleep. Very considerately they sang a hymn to see if it would not awaken me, but finally one of them touched my shoulder and I jumped and said in English, "What's the matter?" They had a laugh at my expense, and I took my own sleepiness as a text and held them for twenty minutes longer. After this we had supper and all turned in for a good night's sleep.

From Bolinge we started on the home-stretch. The first town we reached as we pushed on toward the river was Bacina, a fine town of 800 people and preaching there and telling them we would come again and to receive the native evangelists who would follow well, we went on to Elanga, where we found them all drunk. The saloon was wide open and the filthy sugarcane beer was spread all over the place. We gathered them right there and gave them a series of temperance talks, as well as the regular gospel message. Elanga is a town of from 800 to 1,000 population. From Elanga we went on down to Bombe, where resides the great woman chief. She is a chief, too. No fooling with her. The people were very timid, but she called up an audience and we preached there and and showed us the path to take to the next town, Boyela, which is the next town to the river Longa, our destination. Boyela has ate our lunch. She strode on ahead of us been proselyted by the Catholics, and the first section of it did not care to hear us, so we went on to the farther section, where we had a good audience. Tired was no name for our condition, but the spirit of the journey was upon us and we started off, running by one another to get first until I stopped them, when we all formed in column and marched on. We were a good hour going down to Longa and reached there at 2:30 p. m., surprising them all. No one knew of our journey, and we found them all getting ready to go down to Bolinge for the regular conference and to give us God-speed. A rousing meeting was held for thanksgiving for health and safe journey, and it was almost like Bolinge in its heartiness. We have a great opportunity at Longa, with all these large, populous towns tributary to it. The way is now open for an aggressive work there. Longa itself is ripe for the harvest. there and he is doing a good work. One hundred and fifty is the number of those who are especially interested in the gospel there. Thirty have been already baptized, and the work prospers. Where are the men and the means for this new and strategic field, and when will they come? A doctor is needed soon, and a full staff for this station we hope to open up.

When I reached the state post near Coquilhatville, I called on the commissaire, General Bruneel, who told me he had just received a letter from the Governor General at Boma, saying that our petition for a station had been forwarded to the central government at Brussels, and that he felt sure he could assure us a site in the very near future.

Brethren, are you keeping pace? Our God is opening up for us vast opportunities. Are we to be ready to seize them? We must not let this great door of opportunity close on us. I feel I must say, with all reverence indeed, "Now is the accepted time; now is the day of salvation" for Longa and the great Bosira.

Walter, aged six, had for his golden text, "He that sows in tears shall reap with joy." A little later he fell under his father's displeasure and received a spanking. Going behind the house to weep, he was heard to say to himself between sobs: "He that sows in tears shall reap with joy."

Father of the Pastor (after the sermon)—How Horace has changed since he was a babe!

The Mother—What an idea! Of course he has changed.

Father—What I mean is, that when he was a baby he used to keep me awake.

When we set to work to make others as happy as we can, happiness begins flowing in on us in an increasing current. "Kind deeds," said Louisa M. Alcott once, "often come back to the givers in fairer shapes than they go." The harvest is far greater than the seed—and it never fails to grow, either.

"Our Home"—A Sentiment.

One vital note in the music of life is the sense of possession. In marriage it transforms the lonely pronoun "mine" into the one of larger, sweeter meaning, "ours." The advent of new possessions responds to something deep in the human heart—the joy of united ownership, of building together for a larger future. This is what counts in the sacredness of making a home. It is this that makes the simple geranium in our window seem more precious than some one else's conservatory across the street. Home is the gathering together under one roof of all that is dearest to us. It can be made a paradise if love, honor and unity be its atmosphere.—William George Jordan, in Delineator.

Relation of Alcohol to Suicide.

Out of Her Class.

A member of the school board of a certain Pennsylvania town relates the sad case of a young woman who failed to pass her examination for appointment as teacher in the public school of that place.

The mother of the disappointed young woman was asked by a friend whether the daughter had succeeded in running the gauntlet of the examiners.

"No," was the reply in mournful tone, "Jinny didn't pass at all. Maybe you won't believe, sir, but them examiners asked the poor girl about things that happened years and years before she was born."—Harper's Weekly.

A Recent Egyptian Discovery.

The story of the recent uncovering of the tomb of Queen Thiy—one of the most important of recent Egyptian discoveries—is told for the September "Century" readers by an eye witness, Arthur E. P. Weigall, chief inspector of the Egyptian Government Department of Antiquities. It is the feeling of the writer that, for the first few days of the work of recording such a discovery, one lives, as it were, in the past; and before the first interest has faded, and the slow and often tedious work of removing the antiquities has begun, there is received an impression of the life and deeds of the dead, and a glimpse of their personality, which no book study and no disconnected discoveries could ever give. This passing record, it is the purpose of Mr. Weigall's article to record, as well as to sketch the character of Queen Thiy and the period in general, that the reader may realize something of the extraordinary significance of the discovery. Supplementing Mr. Weigall's narrative will be an account by Robb de Peyster Tytus of "The Palace of Amenhotep III, Husband of Queen Thiy."

Charcoal Stops Gas On Your Stomach.

Wonderful Absorbing Power of Charcoal When Taken in the Form of Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges.

Trial Package Sent Free.

Charcoal, pure, simple charcoal, absorbs 100 times its own volume of gas. Where does the gas go to? It is just absorbed by the charcoal,—the gas disappears and there is left a pure, fresh, sweet atmosphere, free from all impurities and germs.

That's what happens in your stomach when you take one or two of Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges, the most powerful purifiers science has yet discovered.

You belch gas in company, sometimes, by accident, greatly to your own humiliation. That is because there is a great amount of gas being formed in your stomach by fermenting food. Your stomach is not digesting your food properly. Gas is inevitable. Whenever this happens, just take one or two of Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges right after eating, and you will be surprised how quickly they will act. No more belchings; no more sour risings. Eat all you want and what you want, and then if there is any gas going to be formed, one of these wonderful little absorbers, a Stuart Charcoal Lozenge, will take care of all the gas.

And it will do more than that. Every particle of impurity in your stomach and intestines is going to be carried away by the charcoal. No one seems to know why it does this, but it does, and does it wonderfully. You notice the difference in your appetite, general good feeling, and in the purity of your blood, right away.

You'll have no more bad taste in your mouth or bad breath, either from drinking, eating or smoking. Other people will notice your bad breath quicker than you will yourself. Make your breath pure, so when you talk to others you won't disgust them. Just one or two Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges will make your breath sweet, and make you feel better all over for it. You can eat all the onions and odorous foods you want, and no one can tell the difference.

Besides, charcoal is the best laxative made. You can take a whole boxful and no harm will result. It is a wonderfully easy regulator.

And then, too, it filters your blood—every particle of poison or impurity in your blood is destroyed, and you begin to notice the difference in your face first thing,—your clear complexion.

Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges are made from pure willow charcoal, and just a little honey is put in to make them palatable, but not too sweet.

They will work wonders in your stomach, and make you feel fine and fresh. Your blood and breath will be purified.

We want to prove all this to you, so just send for a free sample today. Then after you get it and use it, you will like them so well that you will go to your druggist and get a 25c box of these Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges.

Send us your name and address today, and we will at once send you by mail a sample package free. Address F. A. Stuart Co., 200 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

Advance Society Letters.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

In the mail comes a beautiful post card of the Christian Church, Independence avenue, Kansas City, Mo. It is a very handsome building, but has so many steps, I should think a person must be pretty strong in his legs, and have plenty of wind to reach the front door. I wonder if any old ladies attend that church, and if so, how they ever get inside of it? I should think that a fine place to hold open air meetings.

Also comes an illustrated post card of Qu'Appelle Valley, Regina, Sask., Canada. The picture must have been taken a good while ago, for I see there are still green leaves on the trees. It is from H. Jasper Dewees, who writes from Wilcox, Sask.:

"Could you write a book on this scene? At least, Mr. Whedon (the Magnate described in 'Around the Gulf to Mexico') has never owned a better country than this, to dispose of it 'years ago'!" (If H. Jasper Dewees will pay my expenses to, there, and from, I will undertake to write the book on it.)

Still another souvenir post card, entitled, "Backbone of the Continent—Colorado." Judging from the snow-clad series of mountains which do service as vertebrae, the Continent must have a cold back. The card is from an Advance Society friend, Mrs. J. O. Johnston, who writes from her travels:

"Denver—have been here 10 days. We are up, away from the city smoke and noise. Oliver" (her little son) "is with me, with both eyes open, and legs always ready. This is Columbus day, and the Italians are out in full blast—big parade—October 14th. They publish a paper here."

L. B., Smithfield, Mo.: "It has been a long time since I wrote last, but I have not by any means forgotten the Advance Society. I have lately been thinking about an old member of our society—Madge Masters. Where is she now? It seems about time for another story from your pen. I enjoy those letters from Clover Dale Farm. I wish we had them oftener. Since Witch and Wink died, I have acquired another cat—a young kitten—named Tinker Bell. It is a Maltese and very fat. A friend writes me that she was in the kitchen one day with Malta on her arm. While she was taking out a pie from the oven, Malta jumped on the stove, and from there into the hot pie, and from there into a bucket of water standing on the floor. I can imagine there was great excitement for a time. What did that old gentleman from Blooming Grove (the one who didn't like 'A Week with the Woodneys') think of 'Agnes of the Bad Lands'?"

L. B.—is that you, Lena Breamer? Well, yes; it has been too long since you last wrote. Don't put it off that way again. I don't know where Madge Masters is. You know her home was Ozark, Ark., but she has been mighty still ever since I came down here into her state. She needn't be afraid of me, though. There are plenty of Ozarks right here where I live; I don't need hers.

That Clover Dale Farmer writes good letters, but she is always telling me not to publish them. I don't know what you would think, if you could see a whole letter from Kathryn. So far you've had nothing but her scraps. So you have acquired another kitten? I thought they usually came in groups. Tinker Bell is a musical name. Malta did right to jump in the water after stepping into the hot pie. Your friend should not take pies out of her oven while cats are on her arm. There is a time for everything, and the time for taking up pies is not the time for nursing kittens. The old gentleman of Blooming Grove has not expressed his opinion of "Agnes." Possibly he has changed his address, and is living in San Antonio?

Mrs. M. F. Printy, Plymouth, Ill.: "I presume I will be too late for orphan Charlie's ice cream social. I will send $1 for his educational fund. I enjoy the Av. S. letters, and always try to read every letter."

In Nevada, Mo., are boarding, feed and sale stables, all conducted by W. A. Mason, who makes a specialty of driving horses. His wife has been a member of the Av. S. for years. Here she comes with her 14th and 15th quarterly reports, and her two dimes; for she never sends a letter empty. I find she is an interested member of the C. W. B. M., for her poetry is taken from the Tidings. Well, I should hate to be a woman, if I wasn't a member of the C. W. B. M. If I were a woman, I'd lay claim to all the privileges of my sex, and I can't think of any privilege higher or more enjoyable, than "being a C. W. B. M." That would be more to me than having men stand up when I entered a street car (sometimes they do), or even belonging to a ladies' club.

Mrs. Mason writes: "Thanks kindly for forwarding me Miss Malott's letter, which I appreciate very much. I am glad Charlie's ice cream social was so well attended; please find inclosed my mite for our orphan Charlie, and our missionary Drusie. May God bless them both, and every one interested in them, is my prayer."

Did you ever go to a church social and have a more or less good time, and then, for the next two or three weeks, try to find out how much money was clear—and finally give up trying to find out, because nobody would ever know, and the High Chief Ladies would look at you as if to say, "And is it any of your business?" I remember several of that kind. I don't know to this day how much was cleared; I don't think anybody ever knew, unless it was the High Chief Ladies. It's the strangest thing, how hard it is to subtract the expenses from the receipts and call out the gains in a loud, clear voice.

I remember once (when I was younger) undertaking a work for the work-department of a church, and I put in a good deal of time and labor (willingly); but I never could learn how much was cleared on the business. One day one of the High Chiefs told me she thought so-and-so; but nobody ever really knew. Now, our Advance Society is not that way, and what we do, we want everybody to know; not alone the High Chiefs, not alone the soldiers down at the breastworks, but even the outsiders who looked on but didn't spend a penny on the afftir. There are ever so many people interested in Charlie and Drusie who would no more think of giving a nickel for their cause, than of saving that nickel, if there was something they wanted which that nickel would buy.

You will remember we charged 15 cents for a dish of ice cream to those able to pay such a high price. At any rate, 453 people ordered one saucer of ice cream. However, some paid only 10 cents; some, only five. On the other hand, some paid as high as a dollar for a crowd of diners. It is safe to say, however, that 430 people attended our orphan's educational ice cream banquet this year. The receipts were $68.05; the expenses were nothing at all. The net gain was therefore $68.05. Last year our net gain at the orphan's ice cream social was $234.47. Added together, this gives us, if I am not mistaken, and have not cast up this sum in too great a haste, a total of $302.52 for an educational fund of the Advance Society orphan.

Pretty good, isn't it?

Drusie Malott, Tai-Ming-fu, North China: "Am I on time? I am always glad to see the evidences of spring, because I like that season, and also for the sake of the poor Chinese, who have such a hard time during cold weather. Winter is not so severe here as at home—I mean, Kentucky—but when a family can't afford to have a fire to heat their one or two rooms, constituting 'home,' it is quite a different matter. True, they try to make up for it by padding their garments, but that can't take the place of warm atmosphere. Some are even too poor to afford a padded garment.

"I believe I mentioned the mirages we have been having. For over two weeks, daily, we could see the most beautiful mirages—five or six at the same time; lovely scenery, lakes, trees—seemed just like being in sight of the seashore. These mirages appeared about 8 in the morning, and remained until late in the afternoon. I think there must have been unusual amount of electricity and heat in the air. During sandstorms, the effect of electricity on us is quite noticeable; one feels keyed up in strong nervous tension.

"We had two sandstorms the past week. We could see the sand coming like a big cloud, long before it reached us. No damage—and there is always a good house-cleaning afterwards.

"For several weeks, Christian women have been coming to our mission for study and work. There is early prayer-meeting at 8 a. m. If there is sewing to be done, they work until afternoon. Then they learn to read in Chinese—you see, very few women here can read. Some have gone through the first two books. It is inspiring to step into the chapel in the afternoon, and see how eagerly they are studying.

"Last Sunday the chapel was so crowded at the morning service, that they had to move outdoors. There seemed to be as many children as women. The Lord is surely blessing this work. You have doubtless heard of the famine in the South. Very pitiful reports have come to us.

"Can any one send me words and music of the old negro songs, 'Swing low, sweet chariot,' 'Every round takes me higher'—I would be so grateful. Last week I read your book, 'King Saul'; it gave a very vivid picture of David and Saul. I also read 'Holland Wolves.' The 'little Captain was startingly real.

"For the past nine weeks I have been going into Tai-Ming-fu to be there over Sunday for the children's meeting. Oh, it is blessed to be in touch with these dear children, and to be able to tell them something about Jesus! Sixteen girls were present last meeting; four little ones had to be carried by 'the big sister.' The dear blind boy I told you about, intelligently repeated everything I said, because, as he couldn't see, he didn't know when I spoke to him individually, or to all. Last Sunday one dear girl lingered after meeting to say that she wanted to repent, and take Jesus as her Savior. Oh, this is the greatest joy one can ask—to be permitted to lead a soul to the light.

"My heart is burdened for our Chinese teachers. Most of them have confessed Christ, but it seems impossible for two or three to escape the awful evil of opium. We praise God that England is agreeing to force England upon us no longer; and that an edict has gone forth from the Throne urging the complete abolition of drug within the next 10 years. Any one wishing to know about our mission will be gladly sent a booklet or circular regarding it. The chief principles for which this mission stands that are dearest to my heart, are unity, a common purse, or sharing alike, and a stand for 'Holiness unto the Lord.' I will write more on this in my next."

I am sending Drusie $10 to-day from the Christmas tree money contributed last December by the Av. S. I sent her $10 last month from the same source. I find it extremely interesting to note the good accomplished by the young members of the Av. S., and the older ones, who send contributions, never very large, usually from a dime to a quarter, for mission and orphan work. And I feel quite sure that this giving would not take place, were it not for the Av. S. There are other orphans and missionaries, to be sure, but I am certain from practical trial and close observation, that a gift to the Av. S. does not deprive any other good cause of a gift.

Why is this? Because it is the principle of giving that we insist upon. And the more you give the easier it grows. How much have we been able to give to missions, thanks to these donations of voluntary offerings? It is a long story. Perhaps in our next, we will give you a short review of what the Av. S. has accomplished.

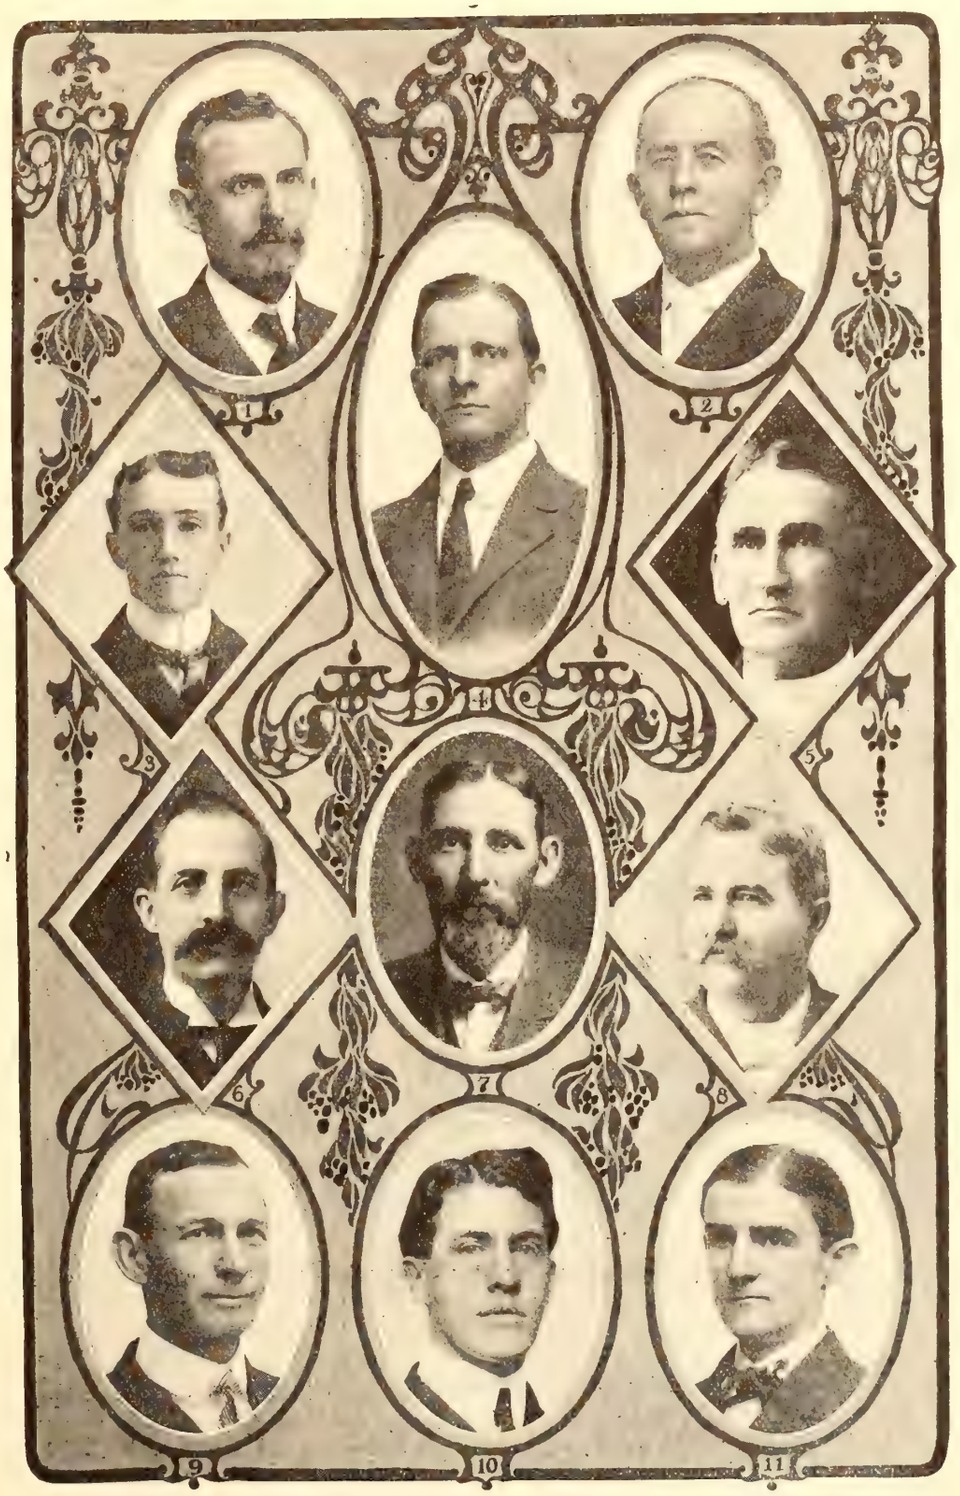
Union Gospel Songs

With the assistance of singing Evangelist Leonard Daugherty and J. H. Rosecrans we have prepared a new song book that constitutes one of the best offerings we have yet made to the psalmody of the church.

It is called Union Gospel Songs because it unites in itself the best of the best old songs, as well as the most helpful and popular of the newer candidates for popular favor—234 in all; and also because it unites features making it equally valuable for regular church work as well as for the Bible school, prayer-meeting and evangelistic services.

No expense has been spared in securing copyrights of desirable music and in sending forth strongly and handsomely bound volumes.

Limp Cloth—25 cts. per copy, postpaid; $16 per 100, not prepaid.
Board—30 cts. per copy, postpaid; $20 per 100 not prepaid.
Cloth—35 cts. per copy, postpaid; $3.50 per doz. not prepaid; $25 per 100, not prepaid.



The space usually accorded a self-laudatory preface, the Editors have modestly given to the Doxology and The Lord Is In His Temple.

The merits of this book predict it will quickly come into widespread usefulness. We wish to accelerate this movement. Samples will be sent on application, on condition they be returned if order does not follow.

—To-day in the Land of To-morrow. By Jasper T. Moses. The author assumes the role of seer and tells of the Mexico that is to be—one of earth's mightiest nations. His earnest plea is for the evangelization of this growing power, that it may be won away from the papacy and made truly Christian. 55 cents.

—Reason and Revelation. By Robert Milligan, formerly President of Lexington Bible College. This not only lays a durable foundation for the faith of the young men preparing for the ministry, but is equally valuable in confirming and re-establishing a faith inclined to waver amid the stress and storm of life. $2.

—The Evangelistic Note. By W. J. Dawson. The opening essay on "The Evangelistic Note" is an interesting recountal of the revolutionizing Christian experience undergone by the author, leading him to resign his London pastorate and begin the evangelistic work he has now undertaken in America. He is unconventional, direct and authoritative. $1.25.

—The Antidote to Christian Science. By James M. Gray, Dean of Moody Bible Institute. This is not a virulent attack on Christian Science—there have been too many of them. In a forbearing spirit the author tries to show where Christian Science fails as a religion. We have sold many of these and they are highly commended by our patrons. 75 cents.

—The Iowa Pulpit of the Church of Christ. These twenty-two sermons were collected and edited by J. H. Painter. There is manifested a renewed interest in the old landmarks, and this class of sermons is having a large sale. G. T. Carpenter, D. R. Dungan, J. H. Painter, G. L. Brokaw, H. U. Dale, D. R. Lucas, Charles Blanchard, J. Mad. Williams and Allen Hickey are among the contributors. $1.

—The Lamp of Sacrifice. By W. Robertson Nicoll. These are sermons preached on special occasions by the widely-known editor of "The Expositor's Bible." There are twenty-one of them. The spirit and power of sacrifice is seen running through them all. "Gethsemane the Rose Garden of God," "The Message for Midnight," "The Lamb's War with the Beast," "Aspects of the Mystical Union" are among the subjects. $1.50.

—Science and Pedagogy of Ethics. By H. W. Everest. The writer, formerly Dean of the Bible College of Drake University, is also author of "The Divine Demonstration," etc. This is a text book, but merits a place in every Christian library. Its general divisions are Theoretical Ethics, Practical Ethics and Pedagogical Ethics. It creates and maintains great interest in these themes of transcendent interest. $1.50.

WHAT FRIENDS ARE SAYING.

—I have carefully examined your various quarterlies, and I am delighted with them. I want especially to commend your Supplemental Work. It contains matter that should be mastered by every Bible student, and yet is neglected by nearly all. The time has come when we ought to teach the Bible and not scattered matter about the Bible. The "Supplemental Work" is most admirable for this great work.—Chas. M. Fillmore, Cincinnati, Ohio.

—Dear Brother Stevenson: I want to thank you for the copies of the Christian Publishing Company's quarterlies. Brother H. J. Chapman, our superintendent, and I are greatly pleased with them. Your work in these helps is of a very high order, and I cannot see how a teacher of these lessons, having once used your quarterlies, would be willing to be without them. Your suggestions to the teaching are most practical and valuable. As to suggestions in the way of improvement, I have nothing to offer. It seems to me your work is thorough and complete.—Jesse P. McKnight, minister, Los Angeles, Cal.

—The two books, Christian Union and The Bible the Word of God, received. I have read Brother Garrison's Christian Union with interest. I have read everything I could get on this subject for the past ten years. I must say that Christian Union, by Mr. Garrison, is the best I have yet read. Chapter one is especially fine. I shall be glad to have you send me one new book each month, and I think your plan an excellent one. When I commenced taking THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST six years ago, I was prejudiced against it. Now I consider it the best of our papers. It has been on the right side of every question that has come up for discussion—always contains something that makes me a better man and minister.—L. E. Jamestown: Its Political and Religious Significance—A Parallel

An Address delivered on "Disciples of Christ Day" at the Auditorium, Jamestown Exposition, during the Norfolk Convention.

By J. H. GARRISON

Mr. Chairman and Friends—Great events in human history, like great objects in nature, are seen in their true proportions and real magnitude only when viewed from a distance. We are celebrating here the three hundredth anniversary of one of the great pivotal events in human history. It has taken these three centuries of national development to bring us to the point where, through the perspective of history, we can appreciate the tremendous significance of this first permanent English settlement in the New World, and the vast possibilities it contained for the cause of human liberty and the rights of mankind. As the nature and value of any seed are determined only in the process of growth and development, or, in other words, by what it produces and becomes, so the true nature and value of all events and movements among men are measured and tested at last by what comes out of them—by what they do for the welfare of men. It was not given to the men who lived three centuries ago, and who braved the perils of the ocean in the rude crafts of those days, and the hardships and dangers incident to their settlement here on the shores of the New World, to know that that event was the opening chapter in the most inspiring volume of human progress which the world had ever known. They brought with them from the Old World to the new the seed of human liberty, and deposited it in virgin soil, where it was destined to have a growth and development hitherto unknown in the annals of time. As we stand to-day on the summit of these three centuries of thrilling history, and see what new and sublime conceptions of human rights and of human liberty have here embodied themselves in government and in civil and religious institutions; when we observe the marvelous geographical development of the country from the few feeble colonies lying along the eastern seaboard, to the vast domain stretching from ocean to ocean, and from the lakes to the gulf, with one people, one government, one flag and one destiny; when we notice how the confederation of the colonies has grown into a magnificent union of states whose influence in behalf of free government, juster laws and increased recognition of the rights of man has been felt around the world, and has affected every civilized government on earth; when we behold how education and religion have grown side by side and spread their enlightening, humanizing and ennobling influence over the people, and their laws and customs and institutions; and how art, literature and invention have flourished and lent their wholesome and stimulating power to the moulding of our civilization, until our nation stands to-day on the highest summit of national greatness and renown, a beacon light to all the struggling nationalities of earth, and a world-power wielding its potent influence in behalf of the peace and progress of mankind—it is then we stand, with uncovered heads and with awed hearts, in the presence of such an event as the Jamestown settlement, and count as sacred the soil on which these pioneers of a new and better era toiled, and suffered, and died. Not in the thought of man, but only in the thought of God and his infinite purpose, lay all these mighty achievements for human good, and the still greater achievements and more marvelous developments which lie yet in the womb of the future. Every man who builds right, builds better than he knows or can know, for his work dovetails in with that of the Divine Builder who, by unseen forces and by invisible processes, rears through the ages the temple of truth, broad as humanity, deep as human need and as high as heaven. The heroic pioneers who brought hither their Anglo-Saxon blood, with their love of liberty and right, planted here on this fertile soil, not only corn and tobacco, but the seeds of freedom and of free institutions, which were destined in the good providence of God, to prosper and to grow into all that we see and rejoice in to-day, as the products of three hundred years of struggle and progress.

Its Religious Significance.

We should make a great mistake, however, in estimating the greatness of the event here commemorated if we should fail to see its religious significance, which, after all, is its deepest meaning. We are apt to conceive of such an event as the first permanent English settlement in this country as a secular event, having mainly political and commercial significance. It is surprising, when one comes to study the matter, how this distinction between sacred and secular events fades out as we come to see what mighty religious influences and movements have sprung from events which we are wont to think of as secular. A hundred events might be cited illustrating this truth, including nearly all the great inventions and discoveries of modern times, but time requires us to limit our attention to this very event which this Exposition commemorates. The seed of liberty deposited here first in Virginia soil, contained, in embryo, not only the fair fabric of our American republic, the freest and mightiest nation on earth, but it contained also the possibilities of a new era in religious progress and Christian achievement. What your own, and our own renowned Patrick Henry said for himself, in that immortal sentence which fired the hearts of the colonists in the days of the American Revolution, religion, and especially the religion of Christ, might say of itself: "Give me liberty, or give me death!"

Christianity Requires Liberty.

Christianity may indeed live for a time under the restraints and limitations of a cruel despotism, and has done so, but it can never come to its fairest and fullest development, nor accomplish its sublime mission in the world, until it is permitted to breathe the very air of liberty, and to embody its spirit and its principles not in church life alone, but in the laws, customs and institutions of the people. Christianity, therefore, no less than civil government, needed and was waiting for, that liberty which is another name for opportunity, and which was sought and found here in the New World. This truth might be illustrated by referring to the wider expansion and more rapid growth of every religious movement having its birth in the Old World, but which has been transplanted in the New, unless, perchance, an exception be found in the case of certain forms of ecclesiasticism which receive a kind of support from their alliance with old-world powers, which is not consonant with the spirit of our government. But here again I must limit myself to the rise and progress of a single movement, which had its birth in the free soil of America, and whose aim, spirit and history contain some striking parallels with the genius and principles of our American government. The religious movement of which I shall speak is that which had its origin in the early part of the last century, while the memories of the American Revolution were yet vivid in the minds of the people. Its birthplace was western Pennsylvania, but its cradle was the "Old Dominion," in the days before the "Mother of Presidents" had lost any of its original territory. The men who, under God, inaugurated this new religious movement, were Thomas and Alexander Campbell, who had brought with them from the Old World into the New new ideas of religious liberty and of Christian unity, which they planted in the free soil of America.

The Two Declarations.

As our nation dates its existence from the Declaration of Independence drawn by the hand of Thomas Jefferson, an immortal Virginian, so the religious movement which has come to be known in history as the Current Reformation, or the Disciples of Christ, embracing a large number of independent Churches of Christ, with a membership of over a million and a quarter, dates its origin from a new Declaration of Independence, known in our history as the

Current Events

The Story of an Immigrant.

A recent issue of "The Outlook" contains the story of an immigrant, Manuel Levine. He is a Russian Jew, one of the class usually considered the most undesirable sort of immigrants and the least promising material out of which to make American citizens. Levine came to this country about ten years ago and located in Cleveland. He chanced to come under the influence of the social settlement, Hiram House, and its leader, George Bellamy. He went to night school, learned English, studied law, was admitted to the bar. He had seen something of ward politics and of police injustice as practiced among and upon the ignorant and helpless immigrants who throng the crowded quarters of Cleveland, and undertook to fight it. He was appointed assistant police prosecutor. In four years he has secured the arrest of twenty-four justices of the peace and constables and the conviction of twenty of them on various charges of conspiracy and extortion. He has driven out of business the corrupt professional bondsmen, the corrupt police judge, the grafting constable, and he has done it in the face of a well-organized political machine which exists for the sole purpose of protecting its plunderers. And yet he is a Russian Jew. The moral is that Russian Jews are not necessarily poor material for citizenship—if you have plenty of Hiram Houses and plenty of Bellamys to use in training them to ideals of citizenship.

The Shortage of Money.

Our astounding era of prosperity has reached a point where there is not enough available currency in the country adequately to represent its assets of merchandise and produce. The result is a serious shortage of currency. It is not a panic, because even the few banking institutions which have been compelled to close their doors have had plenty of good assets, but have simply been unable to meet current demands for cash. To meet this difficulty, the banks of the larger cities have adopted the expedient of paying in clearing house certificates. This amounts to a temporary method of increasing the volume of circulating medium of exchange, for the certificates, being secured by the assets of the banks, circulate readily in cities where they are issued. Many of the smaller cities have followed the example and adopted the same plan to avoid being drained of all their cash. The remedy, to some extent, aggravates the disease, for, since one can not draw money from the bank, the natural impulse of every one who happens to have any cash is to save it for the payment of those bills which can not be paid in clearing house certificates. The result is a still further contraction of the volume of currency. The government has come to the aid of the banks with large deposits and the situation is improving. It illustrates very forcibly, however, the need of a more elastic currency, which will expand its volume to relieve stringencies like the present and automatically contract when the special need has passed. The coming Congress should take it up. We are having more prosperity than we can handle on our present system of currency. One result of the shortage of money ought to be some decrease in the cost of living. When money is so scarce and valuable, it ought not to take so much of it to buy a sack of flour or a pound of steak.

Bryan at New York.

Mr. Bryan is making a series of political speeches in the principal cities of New York state. The first one was at Cooper Union, in New York City. It was considered by many as the real opening gun in his personal campaign for the Democratic nomination for the presidency. Unlike the speech which he made in New York immediately after his return from Europe, this utterance made no mention of public ownership as an issue. His recent rip through the Southern states furnished abundant evidence that the Democratic solid South would go all to pieces on that issue. While Mr. Bryan is not the man to change his convictions when he finds that they are unpopular, he is sagacious enough to leave in the background such convictions as are not timely and give no promise of serviceableness. He complains that Roosevelt has "stolen Bryan feathers to make the Roosevelt nest." The issues upon which he wishes to make the campaign are trusts, railway rate regulation, limitation and control of swollen fortunes, prohibition of campaign contributions by corporations and publicity for all contributions before the election, and tariff reform along the lines of tariff for revenue only. The last point is the only one of the list which presents any real issue between the parties. If the Democratic convention should draw up its platform along these lines, the only chance of getting an issue between the parties would be to allow each of them to state the other's position. It is always possible to get a clear-cut issue in that way.

Decrease in Crops.

Crop reports indicate that the farm products for this year will be much less than those of last year. The wheat crop is estimated at 625,000,000 bushels, a falling off of about 15 per cent. The corn crop is put at 2,500,000,000 bushels, a loss of 16 per cent. About the same percentage of decrease is shown by the other cereals. The cotton crop is good, but a million bushels less than last year. Last year, however, was an exceptional year. We can fall considerably below that, or even below the average for the last four years, and still have nothing to complain about. Moreover, with the prevailing high prices this year, the farmer will probably get quite as much for his diminished yield this year as he got for his bumper crop last year. But he can't buy as much with the money.

A Model Corporation.

It is suggested by Albert Shaw that the Standard Oil Company has the greatest opportunity that any commercial organization ever enjoyed to exhibit to the world on a large scale a model corporation. Heretofore it has used its opportunities in a different way. But what a chance it has! The brains that created that wonderfully effective machine could re-create it and make of it the perfect model of what a big concern should be. Simplifying its complex machinery and having done with the policy of concealment, it could present a pattern of clear-cut, simple, efficient organization. With a proper capitalization and fair dividends, based on fair prices to the producers for crude oil and to the consumer for the refined product, its securities would be the ideal conservative investment, especially for persons of small means. It could set a magnificent and convincing example of obedience to law without evasion, and of meeting obligations to the public without flinching. The moral lesson which it could teach to the business world would be stupendous. We hope it will grasp the opportunity.

Complicated Companies.

The complexity of modern corporation organization passes the comprehension of ordinary mortals. The reason for this complexity used to be somewhat mysterious, too, but recent investigations have made it fairly clear. As the zigzags and doublings made by a pursued fox are for the purpose of throwing the dogs off the track, so many of the complications of corporate organization seem to exist solely to throw the public off the scent and make it impossible for the outsiders to know what the insiders are doing. The seventy-five or more companies which are subsidiary to the Standard Oil Company have served admirably their evil purpose of concealment and evasion. The New York City traction companies present a tangle which is probably unequalled in financial history. The "New York Tribune" prints an elaborate diagram showing the relations of the various companies, so far as they can be ascertained. All the facts can not be found, for records have been destroyed which alone could give the clew to some of the intricate processes of combination and manipulation. One part—only a small part—of the diagram shows these facts, which are typical of many others: The Interborough Metropolitan Company (which is the giant that controls all the others) owns a majority of the stock in the Metropolitan Securities Company. The Metropolitan Securities Company controls the New York City Railway Company. The New York City Railway Company leases the property of the Metropolitan Street Railway Company. The Metropolitan Street Railway Company owns the property of sixteen other companies. All of these, and a score of others not included in this list, have their common and preferred stock and their bonds of various kinds. Simplification is the first step toward cleaning up.

Christ at the Door.

In a remarkable series of letters addressed by the risen Christ to the seven churches of Asia Minor, occur these significant words: "Behold, I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come in unto him and sup with him, and he with me." Let it be remembered that this was addressed to the lukewarm church at Laodicea—a church which said: "I am rich and have gotten riches, but have need of nothing," and knew not that it was "the wretched one and miserable and poor and blind and naked." Christ is still standing at the door of every church into which he has not been fully admitted in the plenitude of his power and grace, and is knocking for admission. How many lukewarm, inactive, nonco-operative, worldly-minded churches there are to-day at whose doors, unknown to them, perhaps, Christ is standing, knocking and waiting for admission! If he were admitted he would drive out the spirit of sloth and worldliness, of carnality and strife, of partisanism and selfishness, and fill it with the spirit of union, co-operation, brotherly love and service for the salvation of the world. There is absolutely no other remedy for the spiritual ills that afflict so many of the churches but to open their doors to the living and loving Christ, who wishes to enter and fill these churches with his Spirit, and use them as instruments for bringing in his Kingdom.

We are constantly in receipt of letters from officers and private members of churches bemoaning the spiritual leanness of their congregations, their little internal dissensions, their lack of zeal and consecration to the work of the Lord. They ask for advice as to what they can do to bring about a better state of things. Our advice is, Open the door of your church and let Christ in. Sit at his feet, learn of him, imbibe his spirit and follow him in self-denying service, and the problem is solved. Nothing else will solve it.

Just in proportion as Christ gets admission into a church does it begin to do the work for which the church was established. Nor is there any other criterion by which to determine so surely whether the church has really admitted Christ into all its councils and plans, its worship and its life, as the degree in which that church is manifesting the life and light of Christ to the world.

At the door of every religious body in Christendom Jesus Christ is to-day standing and knocking. In not one of these Christian bodies has he had full sway. He has been hampered by sectarianism, by halfheartedness, by lack of faith, by selfishness, by lack of spiritual vision to see and know the times in which we live, and of perfect consecration to his will alone as the supreme law of life. By his gracious Spirit, by his wonderful providence, by the doors of opportunity which he has opened for us, by his own magnetic personality, he stands at the door of these great religious movements and knocks for admission. The church that hears his voice, that heeds his knocking, that admits him into the very center of its life and enthrones him as the only king and potentate, and that follows him whithersoever he leadeth—that is to be the triumphant and conquering force of the future.

But how is Christ to be admitted? Only by way of the individual heart and life, whether it be in the religious movements or in the local churches. "If any man will open to me, I will come in and sup with him, and he with me." It is through this personal communion with Christ, by individual Christians, that local churches and the great religious bodies are to be brought under the dominion of Christ and fitted to be used by him for the accomplishment of his great purposes. Shall we not admit him —the patient, waiting Christ—into our hearts, into our homes, into our local churches, into all our co-operative movements and councils, that in us and through us his will may be done on earth as it is in heaven?

Union on the Foreign Field.

Those who attended the Norfolk convention will remember with interest the speech of F. E. Meigs, in which he spoke of the union sentiment among all the Christian forces operating in China, and of the union school of which he is president at Nanking. In a personal letter from Frank Garrett, written to the family connection in this country, in what is known as the "'bus letter," and dated last May, he writes as follows:

I have just returned from the great Centennial conference in Shanghai. Christian union was the great high note. We were all surprised that such a strong desire for union was to be found in the hearts of young and old alike. I am on the national committee of federation appointed by the conference. A. E. Cory has been asked to take charge of the union Bible institutes of all China, that is, to establish such institutes throughout China for preachers. F. E. Meigs is on the union educational committee. Mrs. Garrett is on the union purity committee. James Ware is on the committee for education of missionaries' children. So you see our mission is not missing its day of opportunity in China. Great things are before us. When Anglicans and Southern Baptists come together as they did here, recognizing the substantial correctness of the old creeds but stating that the Church of Christ should not be asked to adopt them, then there is hope for us all to come to a working union. One of the best moments of my life was when I was permitted to suggest the wording of this resolution so that though there had been a long morning of strong discussion, with no apparent hope of peace or agreement, it passed unanimously in its new statement, with the "Bible as the supreme rule of faith and practice."

In view of these great movements toward unity on the foreign field, we should have appeared strangely out of step if we had failed to take the action which was taken at Norfolk, committing us to the same kind of co-operation in this country that is being carried out in foreign fields with such fine results.

Time's Reversals

Time reverses many human judgments. The heretics of one generation are often the saints of another. The prophets who were stoned to death in their time have their tombs built by the descendants of their persecutors. This is because human judgments are often formed in passion and prejudice. "Truth crushed to earth will rise again."

In his autobiography Bishop Whipple says:

"I can remember when Pusey was refused license to preach in Oxford; when Maurice was deposed from King's College; when Hampden was denounced as a heretic, and Temple branded as an unbeliever. I have lived to see Pusey revered by all who love devoted lives hid in Christ, and to see Maurice beloved by all generous hearts who believe in the brotherhood of man and the fatherhood of God. I have lived to see the greatest scholars in England do justice to Hampden and to see all men rejoice that the church could call the great-hearted Temple to be the Archbishop of Canterbury."

Commenting upon this statement, Dean Hodges, in his recent work, "The Year of Grace," in a sermon on "The Quality of Charity," says:

"No doubt Bishop Whipple remembered, also, the controversial abuse which was poured out upon these men, the aspersions upon their honesty, the attacks upon their reputation, the endeavor to drive first one and then another out of the church, the pain and grief to which they were put. They were good men, devout disciples of the Supreme Master, intent upon his service, teling the truth, and other good men hindered them, vilified them, hated them. What a lamentable spectacle! What a sight for the eyes of God! This is what came about, and exists at present, and is likely to go on, for lack of charity; for lack, that is, of the essential Christian qualities of patience, of humility, and of confidence in our brethren."

We quote the foregoing because it furnishes an occasion to say a word about adverse criticism. We are not disturbed, and have not been seriously disturbed, as to personal reputation by the harsh criticism and misrepresentation, whether intentional or through lack of information. Such things have always been and always will be. Most of us, no doubt, are too much afraid of adverse criticism, and imagine that it will destroy our influence or usefulness. It should be constantly remembered that while any mistake in teaching, or misstep in conduct, is bound to weaken one's influence to the extent of its gravity, no false representation of one's position and character can permanently injure us. It was not pleasant for the men referred to above to bear the suspicion and misrepresentation of their brethren whose love and sympathy they had a right to expect, but at last these men, together with the great army of martyrs, heroes and reformers have come to their own, both here and there, and it matters little to them that once, for a little while, they were subjected to suspicion, misrepresentation, and even persecution unto death.

If we can rise above the fear of unjust criticism and speak the truth in love, as God gives us to see the truth, it would tend mightily to the advancement of the truth and to the cementing of the bonds of human brotherhood. Jesus Christ came to free us from our bondage to the fear of death, says the author of the Hebrew letter, but he will also free us from bondage to the fear of man and of false criticism, if we truly believe in him and commit ourselves to him. Paul said it was a small thing for him to be judged of man. What he was concerned about was that he might be approved of God, and this should be the chief concern of all of us. Two things are greatly needed among us: One is greater charity and a higher sense of justice on the part of those given to making harsh criticisms of their brethren, whether against liberals or conservatives, and the other is greater fearlessness, coupled with a profound humility and love, in the utterance of that truth which God has shown us to be the truth for the times in which we live. This would mean growth, both in grace and in the knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus Christ.

Which Is the Harder to Believe?

The Lord Bishop of London preached a sermon recently on the occasion of the 300th anniversary of the founding of the Church in America, which has attracted some attention. Among other things, the bishop is quoted as saying: "It is easier, no doubt, to believe that Jesus Christ was only a good man, however difficult to reconcile with the New Testament." We do not believe this to be true, with all deference to the Lord Bishop. Of the two propositions—that Jesus Christ is the Son of God in a unique sense, and that he was simply a good man—we hold that the latter is far more unreasonable and difficult of belief than the former. It antagonizes not only the New Testament record, but the great undisputed facts of history, such as the existence of the church and the growing power of Christ in the world. That God should have manifested himself in history in the person of his only begotten Son, as he is reported in the New Testament to have done, is in accord, we hold, with the highest reason, as such manifestation was essential to meet our human needs. We believe it to be an unwarranted concession to modern skepticism to admit that the great fundamental facts of Christianity—Christ's deity, his atoning death and his triumphant resurrection—are more difficult of belief than the superficial theologies that seek to interpret them away. It is not faith that finds difficulty with these facts, but rationalism. Given the true character of God, as a holy Father loving his erring children, and given a true understanding of man's need in order to be delivered from sin and death, the incarnation becomes a necessity, and all that follows is as easy of belief as it is harmonious with the cause producing it.

Notes and Comments.

J. B. Briney, writing in the Christian Standard, says the people present at the federation meeting were locked in! By a strange lapse of memory he forgot to say that the people were locked in when he delivered his speech on missions! The truth is the doors were locked during all the proceedings, and were only opened between the different parts on the program. No subject at Norfolk was half so popular as that of Christian union and federation as a step towards union.

At the close of Brother Briney's report he asks THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to "please copy." One of the best and most clear-headed men in the Brotherhood who was present at that meeting writes us in a letter received to-day: "Brother Briney did himself a great wrong in the distorted and unfair account he wrote of the federation meeting." We feel the same way about it, and therefore must decline to give wider publicity to a report that does himself injustice as well as the great meeting it caricatures.

F. E. Meigs, whose presence in this country has been noted, is not here on a furlough, but on a mission of great importance to the cause of foreign mission He is representing the different religious bodies co-operating in that part of China in the establishment of what is called "The Anglo-American School" at Kuling, China, for the education of the children of missionaries. He is soliciting aid from different religious bodies for this work and has met with considerable success already. While not in the least antagonizing the enterprise of establishing a home for the children of missionaries at Hiram, where they may enjoy educational advantages, his purpose is to supplement that by the establishment, in China, of a school for the benefit of such children as can not avail themselves of the opportunities offered by such a school in this country. It is easy to see how, if we were missionaries in China, this would be a very vital question for us, and it ought to be none the less so because it is our brethren and sisters who are facing this problem of separation from their children in order to give them the training they must have in the earlier years of their life. We heartily commend Brother Meigs and his mission to all who have hearts to feel the weight of the problem he is attempting to solve.

Just as we are closing up this week's paper the following sad message comes to hand from the daughter of D. R. Lucas:

"Indianapolis, November 3, 1907.—My father, D. R. Lucas, died to-day of heart failure, after four weeks' illness. Funeral in Central Christian Church Wednesday, Nov. 6, 10 a. m.—Maude Lucas Rumpley."

A great, strong man has fallen in Israel, yea, rather has risen to a higher and better world. He was at the Norfolk convention, rejoicing with his brethren here, but to-day he is yonder, rejoicing with his brethren who have entered upon the life beyond. What a sudden transition! We have no space for further comment this week. God be gracious to his bereaved family!

Space is given in this issue for the address delivered by the Editor of this paper on Disciples of Christ day, on the Exposition grounds at Norfolk, in connection with our national convention. This is done in compliance with a motion that was unanimously passed by the large audience that heard it. In further compliance with this motion, the address will be put in cheap tract form for such use as any of our state or national organizations may desire to make of it. It is not, of course, and was not intended to be, an exhaustive statement of our position and plea, but is only such a general statement as seemed to be adapted to the occasion on which it was delivered. If its publication in the form in which it now appears and in the pamphlet form in which it will appear later, shall serve to attract attention to and to interest in our religious movement, those who have not hitherto been attracted by it, and shall lead them to make a further investigation of its claims, we shall be grateful for this additional opportunity of serving the cause we love far more than life.

One of the most frequent comments on the action of the Norfolk meeting on the subject of federation is that "it binds no one." As if that were a very exceptional sort of action for the Disciples of Christ to take in convention or mass meeting assembled! Of course, then, all recommendations of the convention relating to missionary work were "binding!" Is it not about time for our ministers especially to learn that no action of any of our conventions is "binding" any farther than it appeals to the conscience and judgment of those to whom it applies? All our actions are only recommendatory or advisory. No convention claims or exercises any ecclesiastical authority over the churches.

Nor are we alone in this view of the independence of the local churches and their freedom from ecclesiastical rule by a higher body. Baptists and Congregationalists at least are just as jealous of the freedom of their local churches as we are, and their convention measures, like ours, are purely advisory. In such religious bodies all their co-operation in mission work and other general interests is free and voluntary. Of course, there is the force of the public sentiment of the body, and the sense of moral obligation to act with others of 'like precious faith" in carrying on these general enterprises, and this twofold cord, with enlightened Christians, is more binding than ecclesiastical edicts.

Editor's Easy Chair.

Now we are coming to the embers of the year—Nov-ember and Dec-ember. The Latin signification of these two names shows that when the months received their present designation these were the ninth and tenth in number, and the year ended with February and began with March. But this change in number has not affected the character of the months themselves. Then, as now, November was the month of "Wailing winds and naked woods

And meadows brown and sere."

In this latitude, however, the woods do not become "naked" until late in the month, and not altogether so even then. The trees are too proud of their gorgeous-colored foliage to part with it until the firm of Frost & Wind have made repeated attacks upon them. But these crimson leaves that yet flutter on the trees in the autumn wind are Nature's danger-signals, warning us of the on-coming winter. These signals are seen, too, in the hazy atmosphere that softens the landscape with its misty veil and fills the soul with an indefinable feeling which is half melancholy and half pleasure. The scudding clouds that fly before the wind like racing balloons—the modern thoroughbreds of the air—are but the heralds of others which, coming down from the North later on, will bring to us their treasures of snow and sleet. These prophecies, however, need not disturb our enjoyment of these cool, autumnal days, half summer and half autumn, which we call "Indian Summer." No season of the year, not even the gentle springtime, has more poetry in it than these autumn days. True, it is not the same kind of poetry, but there is in these days that which appeals to the imagination and fills the soul with thoughts that reach out into the infinite.

Let us find time, if we can, in these days of business bustle and worry, to get out into the woods, far away from the artificialities and conventionalities of the city, and study the lessons which God would teach us through Nature in her changing seasons and moods. Let us forget the financial flurry which is writing its lines of care and anxiety over the faces of so many, and listen to the messages borne to us by fading and falling leaves, and by the ripening nuts and acorns which Mother Nature provides for all her children. Let us behold the birds of the air, which sow not nor reap, and yet God feedeth them out of his infinite storehouse. "Are ye not of more value than many sparrows, O ye of little faith?" True, many of these birds have already fled to the summer climes of the South, but it was God who put that instinct into their little breasts and also provided the summer clime to meet it. In these walks through the woods, if we have eyes to see and hearts to understand, we shall learn the lesson of trust in the All-Father, whose open hand supplies the needs of every living thing. One of our own national poets, who loved nature and sang so sweetly of it, writing on the "Autumn Woods," sings thus of their glory:

"I roam the woods that crown
The upland; where the mingled splendors glow,
Where the gay company of trees look down
On the green fields below.

"My steps are not alone
In these bright walks; the sweet southwest at play,
Flies, rustling, where the painted leaves are strown
Along the winding way.

"And far in heaven, the while,
The sun that sends the gale to wander here,
Pours out on the fair earth his quiet smile,—
The sweetest of the year.

"O Autumn! why so soon
Depart the hues that make thy forest glad;
Thy gentle wind and thy fair, sunny noon,
And leave thee wild and sad?

"Ah, 'twere a lot too blest,
Forever in thy colored shades to stray;
Amid the kisses of the soft southwest
To roam and dream for aye;

"And leave the vain low strife
That makes men mad, the tug for wealth and power,
The passion and the cares that wither life,
And waste its little hour."

The Easy Chair has been reminded of the saying that "A touch of nature makes the whole world kin," in the responses which have come to its recent reflections on the cornfields of Illinois and Indiana, and the calling up of bygone memories associated with this king of American cereals. These reflections awakened echoes in hearts so far remote as the "Golden Gate" yonder on the Pacific, and Southampton, England, where good old King Canute sought to stop the incoming tide by his royal mandate. "How did you get into so many secrets of my early life—those which you enumerate in your Easy Chair in your issue of October 3," writes W. B. Berry, of "The Pacific Christian." "Every one of those things," he adds, "is true to my experience, and I cherish them all as sacred memories, unless it be the thinning process which always came when the ground was wet and bait for fishing was easily obtained. The 'corn-shucking' was the great jubilee of the year. I see now why it is as a 'gray-headed boy' I am so fond of corn bread. Up to the age of twenty-three I lived a cornfield life." No doubt that helps to account for the gray matter which evidences itself in Brother Berry's writings, and for the moral fiber which has made him a tower of strength among his brethren. The other echo is from a Tennessee boy, Ernest C. Mobley, over in England, between the lines of whose letter there runs a minor chord of homesickness for native land. "The Easy Chair's sublime prose-poem on the golden corn," he writes, "was like a breath from homeland. Some of the stretches of magnificent scenery in England are unsurpassed in beauty and grandeur, with the lovely fields of gorse, bracken and red heather, bordered by hawthorn hedges, with an occasional field of golden wheat. But more than all else I have missed the matchless beauty of the cornfield, with the music of its rustling blades swaying in the breezes under the summer moon. Many thanks for this inspiring message from home to one of the boys away from home." It is going to take a strong grip on the part of the Southampton Church to overcome the influence of those rustling corn blades under the light of the harvest moon and all the tugging memories which such scenes recall!

They tell us that the financial skies are clearing, and that "the worst is over." The Easy Chair hopes this is true, provided we have learned our lesson. We have been down on the thoroughfares of business, and have been watching the faces of men as they walk the streets, and we have seen marks of anxiety and unrest. On no faces were the lines of care drawn more deeply than on those of the bankers themselves. How timid and fearful of the future money makes men! Perhaps the Easy Chair sees only one side of the problem; but it seems to us that the banks have been more anxious about saving themselves than about serving their patrons. But must they not save themselves in order to serve their patrons? Is it not with banks, way to save themselves than by serving their patrons? Is it not with the banks, as it is with churches, that those which live for themselves must die, and only those which live to serve can survive in the struggle for existence? Some one has said, with biting sarcasm, that "Commentaries on the Bible are very plain and satisfactory, except on difficult passages!" Shall it be said of banks that they are very good institutions to have, except in times of monetary stringency?

It is well to consider what is the lesson which this financial crisis through which we are passing should teach us? It is a rebuke to commercial gambling, to wild speculation, to the haste to get rich, which is an American epidemic, and to corrupt business methods in many corporations, and even in some of the banks of the country, which have not been doing a legitimate banking business, but were conducted in the interest of certain speculative stocks which were owned by the men who controlled the banks. It is reassuring to know that some of the most notorious of these have been eliminated. Such experiences as the country is now passing through are a rebuke to extravagance and to all overreaching in financial ventures. One of the plainest lessons taught by the present tightening in the money market, as it seems to a layman in finance, is the duty of Congress to provide an elastic currency to meet the special demands for money at this season of the year for the removal of crops. If we shall learn these lessons well, the present hardships which many are suffering will not have been in vain, and we shall be in a better condition to prevent their recurrence in the future.

Jamestown: Its Political and Religious Significance—A Parallel

"Declaration and Address," penned by the hand of Thomas Campbell, and flowing out of a heart loving all who loved Christ, and seeking to bind them together in the bonds of Christian unity.

As the Declaration of Independence set forth the inherent rights of men, and the violation of these rights under existing governmental relations, so the Declaration and Address emphasizes the inherent rights of Christians to be free, only as they are bound by Christ, and to be one in him, and pointed out the negation of these rights by existing religious conditions.

As the declaration of Thomas Jefferson declared our independence from the dominion of the British government, so that of Thomas Campbell declared independence, henceforth and forever, from the dominion of all existing human creeds and forms of ecclesiasticism that would interfere with the freedom of thought and action of any one seeking and desiring the liberty which is in Christ, and acknowledging no Master but him.

As our revolutionary fathers, in throwing off the yoke of human tyranny, had no thought or desire to plunge into anarchy, but held themselves loyal and obedient to universally-recognized principles of law and equity and justice, springing not from human but divine authority, which, in due time, they sought to incorporate into constitution and laws, so our spiritual fathers, who repudiated the authority of human creeds and human ecclesiasticism, held, with unyielding tenacity, to those fundamental truths and beliefs which make up our common Christianity, and found these clearly and satisfactorily set forth in the teachings of Jesus Christ and his apostles.

As the signers of our Declaration of Independence, and those who stood with them, by taking this radical departure in human government, incurred the criticism of nearly all existing governments, and were compelled to carry on a fierce warfare for seven years with the mother country to make good their claim of independence, so the leaders in this movement, and those who stood with them, were compelled, because of this new departure in Christian history, to defend their position in many a hotly-contested battle through a much longer period than seven years, to vindicate their right to a place among the evangelical forces of Christendom, and to that freedom wherewith Christ had made them free.

Union the Primal Impulse.

While the first impulse of the revolutionary patriots, no doubt, was their love of liberty, and their subsequent union in a common government resulted from a desire to secure and perpetuate that liberty, this order was probably reversed in the case of those who originated this religious reformation. Their primal impulse was the desire for Christian union in harmony with the prayer of our Lord, to the end that the world might be converted. To promote such unity among Christ's followers was their supreme object, but in order to realize this consummation so devoutly to be wished, they saw that certain obstacles must be removed out of the way, among which were denominational creeds, names and ecclesiastical authorities, which held the people of God in hostile relations to each other. This led them to that assertion of Christian liberty which they regarded as an essential condition of unity.

Liberty and Union.

As our nation has had to deal with the age-long problem of harmonizing liberty and union in government, so the leaders in this religious Reformation of the nineteenth century found themselves confronted with the same problem in Christianity—a problem which had been vexing the church through eighteen centuries of history. There were those at a certain period in our national history who said it were better to surrender liberty than to dissolve the Union, and there were others who said it were better to sacrifice the Union and save our liberty. It was in that crucial period of American history that there stood up in the forum of the nation, that great defender of the constitution—Daniel Webster—who, with a political wisdom excelled only by his patriotism, uttered that noble sentiment: "Liberty and Union, now and forever, one and inseparable!" That became the slogan which carried us through the Civil War, and has become the accepted political philosophy of the wise men and patriotic men of all parties. Liberty of the individual to pursue his ideas of happiness, and to work out his own destiny without interfering with the rights of others, and liberty of the several states to manage their own internal affairs in harmony with the genius of our government, is not inconsistent with supreme loyalty to one constitution and to one flag. Indeed, may we not say, with Webster, that the two are inseparable? We cannot have the Union without such liberty granted to the individual and to the several states; and we cannot maintain such liberty, except in the preservation of our national Union. This same problem, in its religious aspects, confronted the fathers in this Reformation. As against the policy of those who had sacrificed liberty of thought on the altar of union, and of those who, on the other hand, had sacrificed the unity for which Jesus prayed on the altar of a liberty which failed to recognize its just limitations, their solution was this: Loyalty to Jesus Christ, as the supreme authority in religion, both in his teaching and in his spirit—that will give us the unity for which he prayed. Loyalty to him alone, and the rejection of all other authorities, in so far as they contradict Christ—that will give us liberty. Is it not absolutely clear to every thinking mind that we can have no unity except in this exercise of the liberty which we have in Christ, refusing to be bound where he has left us free? Is it not equally clear that we can not have the liberty which is in Christ Jesus, except as we find it in loyalty to him—such loyalty as results in unity with him and among ourselves? It is, then, as true in Christianity as it is in our national government, that liberty and union are one and inseparable.

Christian Union Not Centralized Ecclesiasticism.

In this country we are opposed to a centralized government which would gather to itself all powers of legislation and administration, obliterating state, county and municipal governments. It is believed that liberty is better conserved, and the wants of different sections of the country better met, by these local governments, which have jurisdiction over those interests which fall wholly within their respective spheres. We hold this to be true also in reference to the Church. Hence our plea for unity is not a plea for centralized ecclesiasticism, exercising legislative authority over its constituent parts. Our ideal is rather that of a brotherhood of free and independent local churches, bound together by the cohesive power of faith in, and allegiance to, a common Master. If it should be said that our present denominational divisions correspond to the states of the Union, it would be easy to point out where the analogy fails to hold good. In the first place our constitution—the New Testament—makes no provision for any denominational divisions in the Church. And then, as a matter of fact, our denominations do not at present exhibit the kind of unity that would satisfy the patriotism of the American people if applied to the Union of states. If the same feelings of jealousy, and of unwillingness to recognize each other's claims to statehood existed between our states, as unfortunately still prevail to a certain extent among the denominations, we would have occasion to tremble at the prospect of foreign aggression and domestic disintegation.

Present Union Not Adequate.

No, my friends, while recognizing, gratefully, the marvelous change for the better that has come about in the religious world, in the growing spirit of unity among all the churches, we must also frankly recognize the fact that there must be a vastly greater change brought about in the attitude of the various religious bodies toward each other before we can have anything in Christianity comparable to the Union of States under a common flag and constitution. It may be said that while the local congregation is the only recognized form of local government in the New Testament, it does not follow, and should not be dogmatically affirmed, that there may not be wider circuits of co-operation among believers held together by certain historical traditions and sentimental considerations comparable, in some respects, to our present denominational divisions, without violating the law of unity. However that may be, is it not certain that before we can have any real fulfillment of Christ's prayer for the unity of his followers, sectarianism must give place to the common faith and life of the church; that party names must be yielded in deference to "the name that is above every name"; that traditions, church rules and church disciplines, which impose other conditions of fellowship and church membership than those required in the New Testament, must give place to the authority of Christ, so that these different groups of Christians may be so united to Christ, and so conformed in their faith and practice to the New Testament teaching, that fellowship in any one such local group would carry with it the right to fellowship in any other part of the church; and, finally, that all barriers to fellowship and co-operation must be removed. Then, indeed, we would have a united church of Christ, as we now have the United States of America.

Union Necessary to Church's Success.

If we believe it to be true that the formation and preservation of the American union was and is essential to the fulfillment of our great mission as a free and independent people, enabling us to defend ourselves against the powers of the world in case of war, and to use our beneficent influence for the betterment of mankind in times of peace, and to secure the blessings of peace, prosperity and progress for our own country, how much more is it essential to the fulfillment of the sublime mission of the church of God that she heal her divisions, close up her divided ranks and form one homogeneous and united host against the powers of darkness in our own and other lands, and to carry the glad news of the gospel to all nations, and to every creature? This was the meaning of the prayer of our Lord on the night of his betrayal, when the dark shadow of the cross lay heavy upon his loving heart: "Nor for these, my present disciples, alone do I pray; but for all them who shall believe on me through their word, that they may be one in us, that the world may believe that thou hast sent me!"

The sending of our glorious evangel to all the benighted people of the pagan world; the breaking down of the strongholds of vice and iniquity in our own and other nominal Christian lands; the liberation of the people from the bondage of materialistic conceptions and pursuits, and the application of Christ's principles and ideals to the political, social, industrial, domestic and individual life of the people, await the time when the Church, putting away its internal divisions and strifes, shall devote itself with singleness of aim and power, to the accomplishment of the great work which Christ has committed to it.

To work with Christ and to pray with him for the speedy coming of that unity among his followers which he so much desired, and which the success of his mission requires, was the inspiring motive that led our fathers to inaugurate this movement, and it is to-day the inspiration which lies behind all our present-day labors, sacrifices and achievements in all our varied activities. Take away from us the inspiring belief that our chief aim and object as a religious movement is to hasten the realization of Christ's prayer for the unity of all his followers, and substitute for it the purpose of building up another great, strong denomination which, losing sight of its original purpose shall aim merely at denominational supremacy, and you not only "cut the nerve of missions," but you cut every nerve that has tended to make us strong and triumphant. It is in the light of this manifest truth that we must judge the value and the history-making importance of that action the other night when we committed ourselves before the religious world and before high heaven to the historic ground of our fathers, that of cordial co-operation, with every effort looking toward the closer unity of the people of God.

Differences Subordinated to Unity.

As the American Union has had its political differences, and these have led to some "unpleasantnesses" in the progress of the nation in order to maintain its unity and fulfill its great destiny, so as a religious movement pleading for the unity of the people of God we have not been without our own little differences, which have made it exceedingly difficult at times to maintain among ourselves the unity which we are seeking to bring about with others. The conflict between conservatism and liberalism began with the birth of the nation, and the struggle between them, sometimes in the forum, and sometimes, alas, on the battlefield, has been continuous throughout our national history. At last, however, we have learned this lesson in our national life, and have learned it well—that conservatism and liberalism, under whatever names they may be called, must live together in peace under one flag and one constitution, and in the same glorious Union, one and indivisible. We may have perfect freedom in the discussion of our political principles, and in our interpretation of the constitution as it is to be applied to the new problems and conditions of our time; but never again will a hand be raised to rend in twain the seamless garment of our national unity, or to blot out a single star that lends its luster to the flag of our country.

Inevitably, we have had in our religious history, now about completing its first century, the presence of these same two forces which have manifested themselves in every movement among men since time began. They were present in the early church; they were present among the apostles themselves. In the language of our day, Peter would be termed a "conservative" and Paul a "progressionist" or "liberal." But God had use for Peter's conservatism and for Paul's liberalism. In the inauguration of this movement for Christian unity by our fathers, they builded even wiser than they knew in making room for the operation of these two inevitable forces in our religious life without marring the unity which they were seeking to exemplify among themselves, as well as to teach to others. They made a clear-cut distinction between faith and opinions, and while they insisted on the unity of faith, they were equally insistent on liberty of opinion in all matters not antagonistic to Christian faith or character. The man who believes in Jesus Christ and accepts his Lordship, yielding obedience to his plain commandments and manifesting a Christian life and temper, is not to be disturbed in his Christian fellowship for any opinions which he may hold different from those of his brethren. Than this, nothing is more fundamental nor vital in our plea for unity, for without it all hope of maintaining unity among ourselves or bringing about the unity for which Jesus prayed among all his followers is an iridescent dream, an impossible ideal. This principle of "Unity in things essential, liberty in things not essential, and charity in all things," which was first announced by Rupertus Meldenius, away back in the seventeenth century, as restated by our fathers, was: "Where the Scriptures speak, we speak; where the Scriptures are silent, we are silent." The first clause guaranteed loyalty, the second liberty, and the two together, unity—the legitimate child of Loyalty and Liberty. Some of us, it is true, have not yet learned to be as wise in matters religious as the people at large are in matters political and governmental. While the American people see clearly that all their political differences of opinion must be held in subjection to the constitution, and without severing the bonds of our national union, there are many yet in the church who incorporate their opinions and theological speculations in the basis of unity, and who seek to make their doctrinal creeds tests of fellowship. That is like it would be if one party should attempt to put its views of the tariff, its theories of finance and its views concerning railroad legislation into the constitution, and made a condition of citizenship. Even some of us who are seeking to remedy this condition of things, and to bring about unity on the basis of faith in Christ and loyalty to him, have not yet mastered our own principles, and often, perhaps unconsciously to ourselves, confuse our own opinions and interpretations with the very word of God itself. But this, we are bound to believe, is only a temporary and transient stage in our religious growth and development. Even now the great heart of the brotherhood beats in harmony with this plea of our fathers for unity, and is large enough and catholic enough to love all who love our Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, and to co-operate with all such, as far as is now possible, with the view of bringing about the more perfect unity for which our Master prayed, and for which we ourselves have been laboring and praying for nearly a century.

Time Necessary to Perfection.

But these imperfections and misconceptions which have marred and hindered our work ought not to surprise or discourage us. God has only imperfect human agents with whom to carry forward his great purposes in the world. A mushroom can spring up in a night, but it takes a century to grow a great oak, and much longer to build a great nation, or to carry forward to its legitimate ends a great religious reformation.

We are celebrating here the three hundredth anniversary of the planting of the seeds of Christian civilization in this country, and there are still, I believe, a few wrongs to be righted, a few irregularities to be corrected, and a few homely virtues to be developed before we have a perfect civilization and an ideal government! What wonder, then, that this religious Reformation, with its high ideal of restoring the simplicity, unity and conquering power of the New Testament Church, and the Christianity of Christ, should have failed, in less than a century, in fully accomplishing its sublime and heroic task! Nor is it any wonder that our ship of Zion, like our good ship of State, should sometimes be tempest-tossed and rocked on stormy seas. For > "The only sails untouched by gales, > Cruise on a painted ocean."

Let us hope that by the time the government gets the railroads and the other great interstate corporations and monopolies under the control of the law, and the states and cities of the nation have overthrown their political bosses, have throttled and destroyed the giant evils of public graft, gambling, the social evil and the supporter of them all—the liquor traffic—and the problem of harmonizing labor and capital shall have been solved, the now divided church of God, while helping to accomplish all these great reforms, and learning the lesson of co-operation and the benefits of united effort, in so doing, shall have put away its sectarian divisions and internal strifes, and shall be moving forward on her sublime mission, "clear as the sun, fair as the moon," harmonious as the planetary system, and "terrible as an army with banners." To this majestic consummation the men and women here to-day, representing the latest born of the great Protestant movements seeking to make the church of God conform to its divine ideal, pledge again, as did the signers of the Declaration of Independence, their lives, their fortunes and their sacred honor!

How the Chasm Between North and South was Closed.

If this aim should seem to some of you to be Utopian, and the outlook, as I have described it, too optimistic, let me remind you, in closing, of another fact in the life of the nation which may help to quicken our faith and awaken our ardent expectations with respect to a united church:

Not so long ago but that many of us here to-day were participants in the great struggle, this nation, which we called the Union, stood divided in two hostile sections, arrayed against each other in deadly conflict, brother against brother, father against son. Many of us here to-day bear upon our bodies the scars of that awful conflict. These historic battlefields here in the "Old Dominion," and in many an other state, attest the fierceness of that mighty struggle when Greek met Greek in the dread arbitrament of war. The chasm which then yawned between the North and the South seemed to the world to be not only impassable, but irreparable. It was freely predicted by the people of other nations, and even by some pessimistic people among ourselves, that this chasm would never be healed. But Time, which heals many wounds, soon began its curative work, and the men who faced each other under opposing flags on the battlefield learned to respect each other's motive and courage. After awhile the men who wore

Another corollary is self-evident: A Heaven-sent evangelist is missionary. The sorriest contradiction beneath the sky is a minister without a mission. That mission is to preach anywhere, everywhere and at whatever cost. The burden of souls is on him. Woe, woe unto me if I preach not the gospel of Christ! A good soldier of Jesus Christ, he is willing to endure hardship. No true Knight of the Cross ever sighed for Lotus land and its inglorious ease. He longs for trumpet blasts and the fierce, wild onset of arms. He will preach even if he be not paid. Given the divine lever that moves the world, he waits for no fulcrum of a golden wage. The soldier called of God will go forth to war, recking not if calling trumpet be followed by the jolting rumble of the commissary cart. He will preach though he know not how he shall live. The preacher who will not go to a needy field until he is buttressed by a society is but a hireling peddler. It is the mission of a board to support those who would preach if there were no board. When an immortal dream knocks at Dante's door there is no question if it hold in its hand a gift of gold. When seraphim and cherubim ring blind Milton round and bid him put into singing words their message, there is no pause of preliminary barter over the ducat value of a line. And if that Eternal Spirit that gave to Dante his dream and to Milton his music shall pour into the soul a wonderful story, shall it wait in the selling for the clink of an assured salary? Let the preacher listen to the voice that bids him go, knowing that the God who sends him is the God who will support him. It is better to trust than to trade. It is better to make a covenant than to make a contract. Elijah's God is still in the heavens. The ravens are yet alive. What we need to-day is ten thousand young men who, consecrating themselves to the ministry of the Word, shall plunge into needy fields in the very audacity of faith.

We hear much nowadays of the "pioneers," and we go forth to decorate their graves—as if that were all—as if there were no need of pioneering now. But the work of the pioneer is as urgently needed to-day as when in schoolhouse, in town hall, at the cross-roads, in the forest, the Fathers proclaimed the simple story of the love of God. Well is it if we forget not the Fathers, but better than to decorate a hero's grave is it to live a hero's life. Now, the Fathers waited for no assurance of financial support. Had they done so, they never would have been "the Fathers." Those heroic souls felt themselves God-sent and waited not to be man-sent.

This is no criticism of missionary agencies. We are believers all in organized Christian work. But if ever our boards shall come to be the chief fosterers of missionary enthusiasm; if ever a missionary secretary shall come to be the sole organ of the divine call; if ever our young preachers shall hesitate to enter a field until they be board-called, then our societies shall be no longer a blessing but a curse. From the days of the great apostle to the Gentiles until now, the men who have moved the world are those who have set their faces toward Macedonia only, only because God had called them in the vision of the night. If, as President Loos one time declared, the need of the foreign field is missionary graves, not less urgently in the home field is there the need of men not only willing to die for Christ, but willing to do that harder thing, to live, if need be, in an uncomplaining poverty for the cause that is dearer than life. Paths for hero feet are ever sown with cruel shards. The royal way was, is and ever shall be The Way of the Cross.

One final corollary: If a preacher be called of God he must be zealous in that calling. God is flame, his ministry a consuming fire. In the last analysis heat is power. No endowment matters of mind or heart if it be not molten stuff to be hammered on the anvil of the divine purpose into shape and use. No speech is ever effective save lava words from a volcanic heart. Native talent, amplitude of equipment, wideness of opportunity—all these will count for naught if the preacher's words be not dipped in the crater of the sun. Better the slightest message, edged with lambent flame, than largest utterance chilled with the breath of snows. To be earnest is to be alive. To lack in fervor, to be thrilled by no passionate enthusiasm, to be borne on no great tides of feeling, to preach with yawning unconcern over the crises of human life, to know not the surge of the ocean imperatives of God, to deal in polished elegancies or to tithe the mint, anise and cummin of inconsequential doctrines while all the world's a-hungry and souls are dying—that is to be living, yet dead—that is to join the loathly throng of corpses that know not the sweet shelter of the tomb. With different meaning, but with no less emphasis, we need to pray this prayer of our religious neighbors: God send us his baptism of fire. For nothing can resist fire. Savonarola kindles a flame in Florence and it burns up the follies and infidelities of that city of Lorenzo; Peter the Hermit makes his passionate appeal and Europe, like an ocean wave, rolls eastward to fling its heaving mass against the cities of the Turks; John Knox lights a fire in Scotland and hill and glen are all aglow while the air is freighted with the resonant praises of the army of the Lord; Wesley kindles a conflagration in island-England, and the flames, leaping the encompassing seas, warm with equal kindness the Australian convict and the Virginia cavalier. It is ever so. Nothing withstands flame. To move men one must first be moved. The preacher who can not lose himself loses his opportunity. To be God-intoxicated and to speak in fine exhilarations the word that is not your own, is ever the requisite of power.

Mine is no plea for emotional frenzies or physical gymnastics. There is no special grace in a wilted collar or a wrenched larynx. Spiritual and not bodily earnestness counts. But the soul of the preacher must be kindled. He must feel the impact of the divine Spirit, the pull of invisible forces. He speaks because he must. Free willed, he yet feels the grip of unescapable powers. The story of Niagara is the story of what the preacher ought to be. "Far away Niagara is seen winding eagerly to its prodigious leap, and you discern the line of the first breakers where the river feels the fated draw of the cataract, its current seeming suddenly to leap forward, stimulated by a mad desire, a hidden spell, a dreadful, irresistible doom. Far back along the gilded surface of the upper stream these lines of eager, anxious and fate-impelled breakers and billows multiply their white ranks and spread and close together their leaping ridges in a wild chaos of racing waves as the brink is approached. And then at the brink there is a curious pause—the momentary peace of the irrevocable. Those mad upper waters reaching the great leap are suddenly all quiet and glassy and rounded and

"LIKE MAGIC."

New Food Makes Wonderful Changes.

When a man has suffered from dyspepsia so many years that he can't remember when he had a natural appetite, and then hits on a cure, he may be excused for saying "it acts like magic."

When it is a simple wholesome food instead of any one of a large number of so called remedies in the form of drugs, he is more than ever likely to feel as though a sort of miracle has been performed.

A Chicago man, in the delight of restored digestion, puts it in this way:

"Like magic, fittingly describes the manner in which Grape-Nuts cured me of poor digestion, coated tongue and loss of appetite, of many years standing.

"I tried about every medicine that was recommended to me, without relief. Then I tried Grape-Nuts on the suggestion of a friend. By the time I had finished the fourth package, my stomach was all right, and for the past two months, I have been eating with a relish, anything set before me. That is something I had been unable to do previously for years.

"I am stronger than ever and I consider the effects of Grape-Nuts on a weak stomach as something really wonderful. It builds up the entire body as well as the brain and nerves." Name given by the Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

green while they turn the angle of the dreadful ledge and hurl themselves into the snow-white gulf of noise and mist and mystery beneath." Two notes in this thundering diapason must sound through the preacher's message—the note of passion, the note of destiny. He is called, called of God by irresistible decree, just as those quiet upper waters are; and as in obedience to the divine will they spring forward to their wild plunge and fall of death and resurrection in foam and glory, so must he give up his life of ease, and for the sake of Niagara power know Niagara's passion-throbbings and its singing leap of death.

This, etched in baldest way, is the ministry of our dreams, this the ministry for which this great convention ought to pray. To raise up such a ministry is our supreme task—a task primal, foundational, all-inclusive. Solve this problem and you have solved all problems. Given such a ministry, and from enlarged consecration will come the money for its support. Given such a ministry, and sleeping churches shall wake to become very dynamos of spiritual power. Given such a ministry, and hardest fields shall be sown with gospel seed and far waste places blossom as the rose. Given such a ministry, and America, land of the morning, shall have been won to our Lord Christ, and over the nation's Capitol, imperial emblem of sovereignty, shall wave the banner of the cross.

As Seen From the Dome By F. D. Power

From this point of view the Norfolk convention was a great one. From whatever standpoint we consider it, the reports, the addresses, the spirit of fraternity, the entertainment, the wise disposition of difficult questions, the character and faithfulness of those who constituted it—in every respect it was one of the best. Norfolk deserves congratulation. The church there did well, exceptionally well. For so small a brotherhood it seemed an heroic undertaking; but few of our strongest cities have made an equal showing for ease and efficiency of management. Pastor Hundley and his associates have the gratitude of their brethren, and we trust the convention carried a blessing to them which shall amply reward their labors and sacrifices. It is safe to say all the East has received a new impulse because of this gathering of Disciples at the Exposition City.

The meetings were all well attended, and the audiences attentive and appreciative of everything. It is wonderful how much of song and sermon people can smilingly endure. True, there never was sweeter music, and at no convention have we ever had a higher tide of sacred eloquence. There was little discussion. It would be better if at least one set address could be chopped out of each session and the time given to discussion of committee reports and important measures. More men and women should be on the committees and in some way directly enlisted in the convention work. Perhaps in many respects the crowning meeting was that at the auditorium in the Exposition grounds. The music, the address, the surroundings all united to make it memorable. It was a fitting close. Norfolk, 1907, was a glorious step toward Pittsburg, 1909.

The things that were most feared as likely to cause friction were, after all, very quietly disposed of. The tainted money matter scarcely raised a ripple, and federation went through with only one voice raised against it, and in that case our beloved brother declares he was locked in, and the inference is he, if he could have gotten out, would have taken to the tall timber. The most curious thing in the world to an ordinary observer is to see a voice lifted in an assembly of Disciples against a proposition to bring Christians of every name and school into closer fellowship and co-operation. It seems flagrantly inconsistent with the essential purpose and principles urged by the Campbells and all their coadjutors and successors. It is in direct contravention to the famous Declaration and Address, and if Mr. Campbell were living to-day he is the first who would be appointed a delegate to this Interchurch Council in December, 1908. Nor would A. Campbell ever object to such a matter coming up in a convention of Disciples set for the promotion of Christian unity, as under the leadership of Isaac Errett we have done in the case of the overtures from the Episcopal bishops.

We stand for the union of Christians if for anything. Our professions are on trial. One of our kindest critics said recently: "There is among them a strong and ceaseless plea for Christian unity, coupled with an unusual lack of wide Christian sympathy and toleration for others. There is a persistent condemnation of sectarianism coupled with a very marked denominational spirit." Is this true? President Roosevelt, in his speech at the laying of the corner stone of the Episcopal cathedral in this city, uttered a wise word when he said: "More and more we have grown to realize that the worth of the professions of the men of any creed must largely be determined by the conduct of the men making these professions; that conduct is the touchstone by which we test their character and their services."

Let us be united among ourselves. Let us aid in all rational and Christian methods to bring our Lord's people together. Let us advance in all our efforts toward unity in the spirit of our Leader, on his knees asking that "they all may be one." Two of the convention mottoes were significant: "Greater missionary zeal, greater personal righteousness, greater Christian fellowship"; and, "Where Christ has left us free, no man has a right to judge his brother."

So the nation unites at Jamestown. From North, South, East and West they came to celebrate the humble beginnings of their fathers and bear testimony to their present union, despite all perils of disruption. So one family of God's people assemble in peace on the same Hampton Roads and renew their allegiance to the cause for which their fathers gave themselves. It was a great day when the sails of the little storm-tossed ships finally beat their way between two sheltering arms of land one May morning and passed a friendly place where the winds and waves were kind, which they called "Point Comfort." Shortly after they swung a few miles up a strange river and dropped anchor beside a little island. Some adventurous ones sprang ashore to see the wonderland from which the fragrance of spring flowers was wafted and where green trees crowded close to the river's bank. Sea-weary eyes feasted on gorgeous spring blossoms, dogwood and honeysuckle and the Judas tree, and for the smell of salt spray there was the odor of the pines and the spicewood, and as it was the "Moon of strawberries," the wild fruit was here in plenty about their feet. Well might Smith say in his enthusiasm: "Heaven and earth have never agreed better in making a place for man's habitation!" Then they landed—these "fifty-four gentlemen, four carpenters and twelve laborers," and stretched an old sailcloth on a tree and gave thanks and recalled the last words of

"HER BEST FRIEND"

A Woman Thus Speaks of Postum.

We usually consider our best friends those who treat us best.

Some persons think coffee a real friend, but watch it carefully awhile and observe that it is one of the meanest of all enemies for it stabs one while professing friendship.

Coffee contains a poisonous drug—caffeine—which injures the delicate nervous system and frequently sets up disease in one or more organs of the body, if its use is persisted in.

"I had heart palpitation and nervousness for four years and the doctor told me the trouble was caused by coffee. He advised me to leave it off, but I thought I could not," writes a Wis. lady.

"On the advice of a friend I tried Postum Food Coffee and it so satisfied me I did not care for coffee after a few days' trial of Postum.

"As weeks went by and I continued to use Postum my weight increased from 98 to 118 pounds, and the heart trouble left me. I have used it a year now and am stronger than I ever was. I can hustle up stairs without any heart palpitation, and I am cured of nervousness.

"My children are very fond of Postum and it agrees with them. My sister liked it when she drank it at my house, but not when she made it at her own home. Now she has learned to make it right, boil it according to directions, and has become very fond of it. You may use my name if you wish as I am not ashamed of praising my best friend—Postum."

Our Budget

—We are glad to know that our labor and pains to give a worthy report of the Norfolk convention are meeting with the appreciation of our readers. Notwithstanding the mechanical work on our paper of last week was marred, as the result of sudden changes brought about by the labor strike, we are gratified to know that our report of the convention is proving a source of inspiration to readers who were not permitted to attend the convention. We have space only for extracts from a few letters which have come to hand:

"I want to thank you for your good and brave words about the action of the Norfolk convention, in its bearing on newspaper autocracy. Thank God for that convention. I say it over and over, and thank God for such a brotherhood as we indeed have."—W. J. Lhamon.

"I have just been enjoying the Norfolk convention. I am sure I speak for many thousands of your readers who could not go to the convention when I say we most heartily thank you for bringing the convention to us in your excellent report in this week's CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. We catch the spirit and join the throngs in enthusiastic applause of the inspiring reports, the excellent sermons and addresses, and, above all, the peerless leader, our noble president of the Foreign Society. We join in the Chautauqua salute to our beloved Brother McLean. God bless and keep him!"—L. E. Murray.

"I have just read this week's CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST through. You have in a most marvelous manner put almost the whole convention down in type. It is a great service you have rendered all who were there, as well as those not able to attend. If you improve any on this year's report, in the future people will not need to go at all—just stay at home and read it in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST." W. E. M. Hackleman.

After all, it is only a glimpse that the best report can give of a great convention, but we are glad to be able to give even this for the benefit of our readers.

—We are glad to be able to present the faces of the men who prepared the way locally for a successful convention at Norfolk. To Brother Hundley, and to Brother Steed, whose position as city clerk was a great service to the cause, are we especially indebted.

—A handsome new church is under consideration at Blackwell, Okla. It is to cost $10,000 when completed. Garnett W. McQuiddy is the minister there.

—Harry Bullock, who has taken the work at Footville, Wis., seems very well pleased with his field and people. He reports that they have treated him royally.

—Since going to Fort Wayne, Ind., early in April, W. P. Shamhart can record more than 75 additions. He is now secretary and treasurer for the fifth district.

—Our congregation at Ashland, Ky., are proud of the beautiful new parsonage. W. D. Ryan is to benefit by this addition to the church plant. A new Wednesday night Bible class has just been started at this church, and the beginning is very promising. Rapidly growing audiences at the Sunday evening services are reported.

WHAT OUR FRIENDS CAN DO.

At no time in our long journalistic experience have we received so many expressions of desire on the part of our readers to help us and so to have part with us in the great publishing enterprise in which we have been so long engaged. In many letters there occurs, in some form, the question, "How can I help you in the great work you are doing for our cause?" The question implies what is absolutely and self-evidently true—that without the co-operation of our friends we can do but little compared with what can be accomplished by our united efforts. It is proper, therefore, that we mention some of the ways in which our readers can help us to increase and widen the influence of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST—the unfailing friend of all our great interests—missionary, educational and benevolent—an exponent and defender of our religious movement against foes without and within, and a promoter of unity, peace and a deeper spiritual life among our churches.

1. Pray for us, that we may have the wisdom that cometh down from above to guide us in our editorial policy and utterances, and that we may be delivered from censoriousness, dogmatism, and from all purely selfish aims and ambitions, and may be led to seek only the glory of God and the good of our fellow-men.

2. Bear with us, if we seem to fall short of this high ideal, remembering that we are less satisfied with anything we have yet attained than any of our readers can be, and point out to us, in the spirit of brotherly love, how we can make the paper more useful.

3. Read the paper carefully yourself, and talk about it with your neighbors and friends who do not read it. Those who read the paper thoroughly are its best friends, and they are also the best workers in their churches. It is the subscriber who neglects his religious journal for the daily paper that is apt to conclude he can do very well without it. The regular reader finds it indispensable.

4. Many of our preachers, at their own initiative, are exchanging services and canvassing each other's congregations to put THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in every home in their churches, as nearly as possible. Their motive in so doing is to promote the spirit of unity and love, and a deeper piety in their churches, and so to advance the kingdom of God in their midst. Without the active assistance of our preachers we can not hope to secure and maintain a circulation which the best interest of our cause demands.

5. The publishers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST are also publishers of Sunday-school supplies, and publishers and sellers of books designed to meet the wants of our readers and friends. Our book trade, which is growing rapidly, and our Sunday-school publications, make it possible for us to furnish the cheapest religious paper, considering cost of quality, that is known to us. You can help us maintain this high standard of journalism at the present low price, by patronizing the house in these other departments.

6. Finally, you can help us very materially by remitting promptly to this company any arrearages which the tab on your paper may indicate, or of which you may have received notice. This is very necessary to the successful ongoing of a religious journal, especially in the present condition of things. We have been very indulgent with our readers and feel that we are justified in behalf of the publishers in urging this prompt payment of all dues to the company on any account whatsoever.

In all these ways, dear friends, you can help us, and multiply many fold the usefulness of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in its advocacy of the Christianity of Christ and the unity of his followers. Do you give us your hand in this pledge of mutual service for the furtherance of the cause we love?

Your fellow-laborer in the Kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ,

J. H. GARRISON.

—Messrs. Thompson and Hughes are at Stratton, Neb., in a meeting. They have just closed an excellent four-weeks' revival at Ox Bow, where the church received great benefit.

—Our ministers in Des Moines, Ia., meet on Mondays at the noon hour at the Central Church for lunch and conference concerning their common interests. J. McD. Horne is the secretary.

—Improvements that add much to the beauty and usefulness of our church at Mound City, Mo., have just been completed. C. B. Allison is the minister there and the work goes on in good shape.

—G. W. Terrell writes that the church at Stanberry, Mo., is in fine condition for the meeting to be held by Brother Wilhite. The Sunday-school is doing a great work under the superintendency of J. F. Wood.

—J. C. Howell is closing three years of work at Weston, Platte county, Missouri, and after January 1 will be available for a settled ministry, or can accept evangelistic calls. He can furnish excellent references.

—We regret to report the death of Mrs. Pamela Cable, of Rosedale, Miss. She had long been a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and died at the ripe age of 95 years. Hers was a life well spent.

—The church at Dawn, near Chillicothe, Mo., is one where women are the officers and financiers. The resident membership is but eighteen, fifteen of these being women and girls. O. L. Sumner is the minister.

—F. E. Butterfield and wife are to hold a meeting at Flemington, Mo., a town five miles from Greengrove, in November. They will be assisted by F. M. O'Neal and wife, of Springfield, Mo., in the musical department.

—There is new life in the Sunday-school at Norman, Okla., which is in a contest with that at Edmond. The Ladies' Aid is moving in some needed repairs for the building. Pastor R. E. McCorkle is doing a good work.

—Reports in every department of the work at Keota, Ia., are far better this year than any previous year. At the annual meeting S. P. Telford preached on one night and J. M. Van Kirk the following night. Leon F. Davis is the pastor.

—J. W. Bolton, minister of our church at Berlin, Ill., is so far recovered from his typhoid fever attack that he can fill his pulpit again. The church expects to begin a revival on November 10, with G. Halleck Rowe, of Sidell, Ill., as evangelist.

—J. S. Clements, who has had twenty years' of work in the evangelistic field, but is now at Olathe, Kan., is holding his own meeting with much interest manifested. J. Y. B. Wood, a well known singer and "chalk talker," is assisting him.

—E. Von Forrell was to begin a meeting on Lord's day last, at North Platte, Neb., where L. C. Swan is the minister. Brother Swan is doing good work there, being an excellent speaker and having a personality to commend what he preaches.

—We congratulate T. W. Grafton on the completion of twenty-five years of ministerial work. Brother Grafton has had a very successful ministry and now presides over a great church at Anderson, Ind. We hope to give some further particulars

—L. A. Hussong says that his teachers' training class is a great help to the Bible school at Peru, Neb. There are fifty enrolled and Professor Edward L. Rouse, of the teachers' model school and the state normal, is the worthy teacher.

—The greatest day in the history of the Bible school at Lakewood, O., was when 336 were present and the offering amounted to over $47 on the first Lord's day in October. C. D. Salkeld is the pastor, and George H. Grombacker is the superintendent.

—A meeting is to begin at Asherville, Kan., on November 10, with W. H. Scrivener and Mrs. Roy Padgett, of Beloit. At the recent state convention a teachers' training class of twenty-five was promised, but G. P. Clark, the minister, is now able to report thirty-eight.

—Roy O. Youtz, in writing about the successful prohibition campaign in Nodaway county, Missouri, thinks this is a demonstration of the fact that ministers are not poor leaders outside of their pulpits. The ministers of the county took the direction of this campaign and won.

—J. P. Haner writes that after a sermon on "Unity" at Peabody, Kan., a Baptist minister came forward and said, "I am no longer a Baptist, but from this time forward I am a Christian preacher." This brother lives in Great Bend, Kan., and is working for the American Tract Society.

—There is trouble, we regret, at Pendleton, Ore., where the pastor and some of the trustees have had a disagreement. We regret that the matter has got into the public prints. The merits of the case we do not presume to discuss. All our information is from newspaper telegrams.

—I. N. McCash, who gave up charge several years ago of a great church at Des Moines, Ia., to enter upon the temperance work, has again returned to the pastorate and for some weeks has been in charge of our church at Berkley, Cal., where there is a large field for his abilities.

—The Ladies' Aid Society of our church at Lahoma, Okla., have just raised a considerable amount of money with a corn-husking. One of the members of the church offered 5 cents per bushel. The ladies prepared a dinner and the men came to their assistance. The proceeds were turned into the church fund.

—S. L. Jackson has tendered his resignation at Tuxedo, Mo. He is ready to accept another field at once. Brother Jackson is an excellent worker and has succeeded as well as could be expected in the field he has relinquished. He would be willing to consider work for two country churches, and we are glad to commend him to churches needing a minister. Address him at 104 E. Tuxedo Boulevard, Webster Groves, St. Louis Co., Mo.

W. R. Motley, Chairman of Communion Committee, at Norfolk.

—L. L. Carpenter will dedicate the new church building at Jellico, Tenn., on November 17. It will be remembered that just after the completion of a new church there a terrible dynamite explosion occurred which wrecked part of the town and did great damage to our church building. It has just been rebuilt.

—O. J. Bulfin, who has preached for the church at Pickering, Mo., during the past three years, resigned there and has entered upon his new field at Fortville, Ind. The Pickering church wants a man for half-time work. Write O. G. Null. O. W. Jones, of Milan, Mo., has just held a good meeting at that place.

—Zuinglius Moore, who has been at Fort Morgan, Colo., since the beginning of this year, is now able to report eighty-seven members. The state evangelist has just held a meeting there. The aim is to have one hundred members by January, 1908. Brother Moore, from the way he writes, is much in love with this great western country.

—J. T. McGarvey has resigned his pastorate at Warrensburg, Mo. Brother McGarvey is a son of Prof. J. W. McGarvey and is one of our best young preachers and pastors. We trust that it will not be long until he is settled in a good field where he will have opportunity for the work he is so well qualified to do.

—One hundred and fifty men in attendance. This was at the October meeting of the men's club of the Central Christian Church, Warren, O. It was an enthusiastic meeting. E. B. Bagby, of the Franklin Circle Church, of Cleveland, entertained with his lecture on "Uncle Rastus," an excellent delineation of negro character.

—"Why I am not a Campbellite" was the subject of a sermon preached by R. H. Crossfield during his meeting for the Linden Avenue Christian Church, Memphis, Tenn. This gave the evangelist an opportunity to explain Alexander Campbell's great aim in life, and properly set before the people what we believe and teach.

—A. L. Ferguson and his wife spent their past vacation of nearly two months with relatives in New York and Indiana. They attended a reunion of the Fergusons in Terre Haute on which occasion 178 sat down to dinner in the open air. Now they are back at their work at La Junta, Colo., rallying the forces for a big winter campaign.

—A good brother of Winfield, Ill., who does not sign his name, has recently visited Tampico, in the same state, and speaks very encouragingly of the work of Brother Zerby at that point. During the past year payment on the church debt of $1,200 has been made. This church seems alive in every department, and Brother Zerby a most active leader.

—Wiley Miller sends us an account of an excellent meeting held by David Millar, at Ludlow, Mo., where he won the respect and admiration of all who heard him. He was given a reception and supper at the depot on the evening of his departure, all the new converts being present. A purse of $100 was handed him as a slight token of the love of the congregation.

—William A. Ward, who has been located at Henderson, Ky., has recently again taken up evangelistic work. His latest meetings have all been with churches that have been for months pastorless. Brother Ward would like to get into touch with the fields of the Middle West and West, and may locate in St. Louis. For the present he can be addressed in care of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

—Work is moving along well at Belle Center, O., where W. E. Beckler is minister. The brethren are preparing for a great meeting with Evangelist Violett in December. Three have recently been added to the membership. The work of the Bible school is far in advance of all anticipations. The church property there is now the prettiest in the county, the grading around the new building having been completed.

—October 27 was a long-looked for day by the brethren at Jasonville, Ind., where the corner stone of the new church building was laid, Harley Jackson, of Seymour, Ind., being the speaker of the day. J. F. Ashley is the minister of the church. He with his congregation deserve great praise for this new work to which they have put their hands. A little church paper has been launched and a teachers' training class organized.

—We received a program of the convention of our churches in Mississippi, which is being held at West Point, November 5-8, too late to make any advance announcement. The most important thing is a symposium conducted by J. E. Spiegel on "Taking Mississippi for Christ." All the Southern conventions this year ought to be largely attended and much enthusiasm aroused in view of the fact that our national convention goes to New Orleans next year.

—Roger H. Fife has engaged Mr. Nicholas Hert, of Kentucky, to assist him and his son in their evangelistic work next year. He is a soloist and pianist of unusual talent. Brother Fife has had much success in his evangelistic work this year, during the course of which he joined his son with him as chorus leader and personal worker. The latter, on occasions, preaches also. They are planning some tent and tabernacle meetings for next summer and fall. On another page will be found a report of a recent meeting with the photographs of the evangelists. Their permanent address is Kansas City, Mo.

—A. T. Wright, who began work with the church at Mena, Ark., last March, has been making a heroic effort to thoroughly establish the congregation there. Some thirty additions have been recorded; most of them during the regular service, though a meeting was held when he first went there. Brother Wright would like to hold a few special meetings anywhere in Arkansas or adjacent states. He is able to take charge of the music also.

—The tenth anniversary of the dedication of the First Christian Church, Keokuk, Ia., is to be celebrated on November 10, beginning at 10:45 a. m. The program includes the following speakers: H. G. Waggoner, Hamilton; H. R. Trickett, Golden Point; N. E. Corey, Colchester; Arthur Long, Burlington; Judge Charles J. Schofield, Carthage, Ill., and J. T. Shreve, Memphis, Mo. We congratulate Brother Nicoson and his good people.

—James McKissick, who was elected president for the ensuing year of the Tennessee Christian Missionary Society, as reported on another page has been with the Seventeenth Street Church of Christ, Nashville, only about a year, during which time the membership has doubled. Small and St. John are in a revival meeting there and it is hoped there will be enough added strength to justify the completion of plans for a new church building.

—J. H. Hardin's engagements as state superintendent of Bible school work are as follows: November 10, Carrollton; November 19, Springfield (union state convention); November 24, Moberly; December 1, Palmyra; December 6, Kansas City and vicinity; December 8-15, Neosho, a week's rally and institute; December 9, Duenweg (Jasper county convention). Let Brother Hardin know as far in advance as possible the date you need his services.

—On another page will be found a report of the great meeting at Springfield, Mo., held by Brother Scoville and his assistants, with the preachers and workers there. We regret that our effort to secure photographs of F. L. Moffett, of the South Street Church, and of F. F. Walters, of the Central, in time to have them reproduced for this report, was unsuccessful. But Springfield has had a great awakening, and the same kind of an awakening is now going on at Lincoln, Neb.

—Thomas Wallace, writing from Mill Hall, Pa., says that all the churches of that place have federated in a union teachers' meeting held every Thursday evening, using our own and all other literature that will help in elucidating the lesson. The different preachers take turns in conducting the review. This proves a most entertaining and instructive gathering. We learn also that an effort is being made through this federation to close the saloons before the factories close each evening.

—S. Elwood Fisher has closed the sixth revival he has held during his five years' pastorate with the church at Fisher, Ill. This year, for the first time, he had outside help, B. L. Allen assisting during three weeks, in which time there were three additions and four under Brother Fisher's preaching. There have been 206 added to the church during the latter's pastorate. The twenty-second anniversary of the establishment of our cause in this community was celebrated on October 22.

—The Netz sisters, who have for several years furnished special music for our national conventions, are desirous of arranging several concert dates in St. Louis, after November 21. We need say nothing more of them than that they have delighted our convention goers by their excellent quartette work. Their singing is unique, and one of the sisters, we believe, is also an accomplished reader. They may be addressed, for the immediate present, at Hotel Bonaventure, Kansas City, Mo.

—W. T. Hilton is evidently "making good" at his new field of work, Greenville, Texas. A newspaper clipping which we have received tells of his thirteenth wedding anniversary and the open house which he and his wife kept for the members of the Central Christian Church, on this occasion. The esteem in which the pastor and his wife are held was expressed in a chest of silver, a handsome carving set and other useful presents. The first annual banquet given by the pastor to the men of his congregation was held last week, the subject for the after-dinner speeches being "Twentieth Century Men." The program was an admirable one and we have no doubt it was a very happy occasion.

—J. A. Barnett, who has served a year with the mission at Freeport, Ill., expects to close his labors with that church about December 1, when he will succeed Nelson G. Brown, whose health has failed in the pastoral work at Galesburg. Brother Barnett will follow up Evangelist Sunday's meeting with two or three weeks of preaching. W. A. Green, of Kewanee, was secured by the church to look after the converts who desired to unite with it. Our church has been receiving its proportion of the results of this meeting.

—At Charleston, Ill., George H. Brown has had two successful years of work. Our congregation is the largest in the city, and during the present pastorate there have been 200 additions, while the Sunday-school has doubled. Great advance has been made in the missionary spirit, this cause being supported three times as much as it was two years ago. A number of improvements have been put upon the church property. The present membership is about 800. It is this kind of record that inspires others to do their best.

—I. H. Hazel has returned from the Pacific coast after fifteen years' work, pastoral and evangelistic. He desires now to get located in the middle, eastern or southern states, either with some city church or for evangelistic work. Brother Hazel is not so well known here as in the West, but can refer to Prof. S. M. Jefferson, under whom he and his wife took a Bible college course, at Lexington, Ky., J. V. Coombs, Walter M. White, H. D. McAneney and others. His present address is 732 North Sixth street, Terre Haute, Ind.

—We have received a copy of a little pamphlet on "How to Read the Old Bible," by a Sunday-school teacher. It is a helpful little treatise and is put out with the special purpose of helping the cause at Marble Falls, Texas. The Ladies' Aid Society of our organization there wants to help secure the church building. What they have are the lots, and lots of enthusiasm. What they need is money, and they are selling this little 12-page leaflet for 20 cents apiece, or $2 a dozen, the financial returns to be put into the church building.

—The first Clark-Decatur county fellowship meeting was held in Van Wert, Ia., October 25, 26, when representatives gathered from all parts of the counties. Addresses were made by B. S. Denny, J. Mad. Williams, A. E. Price, O. M. Pennock and wife, and Mrs. C. L. Johnson. Brother Pennock writes that the fellowship was beautiful, the program interesting, and the plans for the future promise much good. Officers were elected to provide a program and make arrangements for more annual meetings to alternate between the two counties.

—Clyde Darsie has resigned as pastor of the Church of Christ at Bowling Green, O. During the three and one-half years of ministry there a $25,000 church building was erected and provision made for the payment of all the obligations. About 120 were added to the membership, and all missionary offerings supported. Brother Darsie has not yet decided where he will locate. We agree with L. E. Edgar, who sends us this information, that any church would be fortunate to secure a minister who is so efficient and able and so good a public speaker.

—It will be a source of gratification to the friends of W. E. Garrison, now resident in Las Vegas, N. M., and president of the Territorial Normal University, located in that city, to know that he has recently had a thorough examination by the medical examiner of an insurance company, and pronounced a first-class risk. He was told also that he could live in any part of the United States, unless it be the most notoriously unhealthy parts, with reasonable care of himself. His engagement with the university will detain him at Las Vegas for some time yet.

—From John W. Smith we have received another account of the victory at Brownwood, Texas, which was reported in our issue of October 17 by Evangelist J. L. Haddock. That report did not cover the conclusion of the meeting, however, and from Brother Smith we learn that the number of additions was 128 in all, 74 of these being married people. Expenses, which were about $700, are provided for, in addition to the cost of the tent. Brother Smith speaks highly of the evangelist and his methods, as well as the skill of Talmage Stanley, the singer.

—We give early notice that the first international missionary convention, under the direction of the young people's missionary movement, is to be held at Pittsburg, Pa., March 10-12, 1908. The foremost speakers in America on missionary topics, leading missionaries, and influential native Christians will appear on the program. For the first time in North America moving pictures representing foreign missions will be presented. The aim is to make this the greatest missionary convention ever held on the American continent.

—A. A. Doak took charge of the work at Oakesdale, Wash., last May, and we understand that it is going along in a successful manner. Recently, while on a visit to relatives in the vicinity of Seattle, he was invited to speak at several denominational churches. At Auburn, the churches joined in securing the opera house for his popular lecture on "Shirtsleeve Religion." So pleased were the people at St. John with this same lecture that he was requested to lead the campaign against the saloons, and he is to hold a meeting at Brother Miller's other church in Sunset, in December. For his own people he will also act as evangelist in a meeting this month.

—The church at El Paso, Texas, has a new minister. E. M. Waits, who accomplished such a good work there, has gone to take charge of one of our churches at Fort Worth, Texas, and his successor has been found in Henry Barton Robinson, who has just entered upon the work. Brother Robison is a native of Georgia and was educated at Kentucky and Chicago Universities. He has recently taken the degree of Ph. D., his thesis being a treatise on "The Grammar of the Greek Language in the New Testament Period." He takes charge with the intention of becoming a full-blooded El Pason and he has been warmly welcomed by the citizens of this faraway but very progressive border city.

—Rally day at the church at Abingdon, Ill., was a great occasion this year. A fine musical program was rendered and nearly all of the teachers reported increase of scholars. At the church service which began with the communion, J. E. Powell, of Pekin, was present with his wife, who is well known as an evangelistic singer. Both of these took part in the service, after which H. J. Crockett, the minister, received four members into the congregation and conducted a service in which a note for $600 against the congregation was burned. In the evening Brother and Sister Powell again lent their help. According to a newspaper report, the church never seemed more active and prosperous than it is now.

—W. E. Rambo, Alma, Neb., has returned from a short outing in Southwestern Wyoming, to the foot of Wind River, where he has purchased a tract of government land with a possibility of settling there. It is a part of the Eden Valley Land Company's scheme to irrigate over 150,000 acres of arid but fertile country located in the valleys of the Big and Little Sandy Rivers, in a delightful climate. He invites correspondence either through himself or through R. S. Lemon, 401 Scarrett building, Kansas City, for further information, his purpose being to get a sufficient number of our own members there to establish a church and carry on Christian work.

—At the federation meeting at Norfolk announcement was made that the amount apportioned to the Disciples of Christ for meeting the necessary expenses of the movement was $250 and that nearly $200 of this was yet due. On the request that those should stand who would agree to pay, or be responsible for, $10 each, twelve or fifteen persons stood up promptly, but there was no time to secure additional pledges or to take the names of those signifying their willingness to pay or raise the amount named. We mention this to ask those who made the pledges and several others who feel like doing so, to send that amount either directly to Dr. E. B. Sanford, general secretary, 81 Bible House, New York City, or to the Editor of this paper, who will forward the same to Dr. Sanford. As we are already a little tardy we trust this matter will receive the prompt attention of those interested.

—We believe that it is the intention of J. J. Haley, who has resigned his pastorate of the Seventh Street Church, Richmond, Va., to spend his future days in California. Brother Haley has a small fruit farm at Lodi, Cal., and his removal to that climate will enable him to have with him his son who has, for many years, suffered from tuberculosis. Brother Haley will, doubtless, preach for some church within reach of Lodi. We notice that this community has a remarkable death record, there being only nine deaths per month for one county and most of these due to whisky in one way or another.

—Frank L. Van Voorhis, one of our most successful ministers in Oklahoma, who was unfortunately prevented, by reason of missing connection with the "Christian-Evangelist Special," from going all the way with our party to Norfolk, caught us at Richmond and able to have fellowship in the river trip with us down the James. He visited the office of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST on his return from the convention. The work at Shawnee, where he ministers, is going forward in every particular, and when the new building is completed it will be probably the second best of our church edifices in the state.

—There is no Church of Christ nearer to ours at Wilmington, N. C., than forty-five miles. This is a city of about 40,000 people, the largest in the state. It is the terminal of two of the leading railroads of the South and is a growing seaport. Our church was organized in April of this year with thirty-five charter members. It about doubled this number in three months. They are very anxious to have a church home. Every one recognizes that the field is great and so is the opportunity. F. L. Davis is the pastor. The brethren have, recognizing the perfect number in Scripture, formulated the plan whereby they are seeking contributions of 7 cents, or some multiple of seven. We learn that an Adventist preacher has just joined us as a result of coming in contact with our plea at this place. A meeting is to be held for this congregation by E. E. Violett early in November.

—At Lima, O., G. H. Sims has relinquished his pastorate of the South Side Church, which he has held for the past six years and led it to a position second to none in the city. A large mortgage and other indebtedness has been liquidated and the membership doubled, two missions started in other parts of the city with lots and one chapel practically paid for. During this period, too, five preachers of the gospel have gone out from this congregation. So popular was Brother Sims for one class of work that the newspapers called him the "marrying parson." This church is on the way to becoming a living link in the foreign field, and the missionary spirit has much developed in it. The Sunday-school has a native helper at Bolengi, Africa. Brother Sims' meetings include one with 106 additions, another with 70 and another with 48. We have no information as to his immediate plans.

—In a personal letter from Dr. Sanford to the Editor of this paper, he extends his hearty congratulations on the action taken at Norfolk, and says: "Knowing something of the opposition among you to the movement looking for the closer union and co-operation among the Christian bodies of our country, I hardly dared to hope that the outcome would be so unanimously in favor of the report of the committee, which I have read with interest." He states that two-thirds of the constituent bodies have now adopted the plan of federation and that it becomes operative. Referring to the unanimous action of the Orthodox Friends, the Free Baptists, the Evangelical Association and the Congregationalists and even the general Episcopal convention which authorized its committee on unity to act as delegates to the general council, Dr. Sanford adds: "Surely our faith can but be strengthened in the conviction that the Church of Christ is moving toward some perhaps not far off divine event."

—The corner stone of the new Christian church at Anadarko, Okla., was recently laid, the Masonic lodge taking a prominent part in the proceedings. Six hundred members of the Sunday-school marched to the ground in charge of their teachers. Frank Beach is the minister there and he introduced J. E. Dinger, speaker of the day, who is pastor of our church at Chickasha. His address was a strong plea for the value of the church to a community. It was, he argued, the greatest influence in the world, no other institution being so world-wide in its power. The church, he claimed, is a necessity to the community. In conclusion, Brother Dinger gave four reasons why a man should belong to a church: First, he owes it to God who created man in his own image. Second, he owes it to society, for no one liveth to himself. Third, he owes it to his family, to set those who walk with him and come after him, a godly example. Fourth, he owes it to himself as this is profitable in the world to come. Nearly all the money needed for the new church is already pledged.

Elmo, Mo., Loses Its Church.

Burlington, Ia., October 30.—Our church at Elmo, Mo., was burned Monday night, October 28. It was caused by the janitor not attending to the gasoline light plant properly. The building is a total loss, the organ, seats and chairs being saved. The building was not insured. It had just been remodeled on the inside and the furnace installed. We hope to build at once, but do not know what we can do as the church is not strong. W. H. Rust, pastor.

The Federation Meeting.

The special meeting, called to consider the question of our attitude toward the invitation of the inter-church conference on federation, took place at the close of one of the regular sessions of the Norfolk convention. On two different occasions had the time been set for this special meeting, but owing to the prolonged sessions of the regular convention the opportunity could not be found, so postponement was made. After the presidential address on Tuesday evening the session was declared adjourned and F. D. Power called to the front to present for the consideration of those gathered there, and through them the brotherhood at large, a brief and simple report drawn up by a number of brethren selected for that purpose. W. F. Richardson was named as permanent chairman. He pointed out that this was an independent meeting (not under the auspices of the American Christian Missionary Society) of Disciples interested in the report of the committee appointed by the Disciples of Christ congress last spring. It was in response, he said, to a request of the brethren who were present at the New York gathering. J. L. Hill was chosen secretary for this special meeting, and J. H. Garrison read part of the letter of the inter-church conference. F. D. Power read the plan of federation and the list of religious bodies represented in the conference, and stated that about forty representatives of our own brotherhood were present. After the report had been moved and seconded, upon the chairman asking the will of the meeting, J. H. Garrison asked the privilege of saying a few words. We were, he said, fronting at that moment one of the greatest opportunities that had ever come to us in our remarkable history. What would all our accumulation of money, buildings and learning avail if we departed from the first aim that animated our fathers? he asked. If it be permitted the spirits of the departed to witness scenes on earth in which they are vitally interested there must be present, hovering over this gathering that night, he said, the spirits of the Campbells, Stone, Scott and many others who, misunderstood and persecuted and maligned, went to their graves without being permitted to see what we see to-day—the harvest of the sowing which they did in tears and sorrow. It seemed providential, he said, in conclusion, that we have this opportunity to let the world see that we still stand true to the great aim of those who inaugurated this movement, for the unity of God's people.

J. B. Briney at once rose to his feet to ask a question. He was called to the platform, but said he merely wanted to know whether he could participate in the deliberations of this gathering without being bound by any action it might take. In other words, could he go out as free as he came in? The chairman made a neat reply to the effect that Brother Briney would remain perfectly free "unless he put chains upon himself."

There had been some evidence that, after the long session, some present desired to leave the hall and J. T. T. Hundley added a few words emphasizing the importance of every one giving attention to the serious matter under consideration and requested that no one further leave the building. Quiet having been restored, Brother Briney proceeded with his remarks. His first criticism was that the matter was irregular; that a committee appointed by a congress ought to make its report to that body. He protested against the hurling of another "apple of discord" into our midst, at the present time. He thought we had had enough division of opinion and expressed his belief that there was no unity of sentiment among us on this subject of federation. It was easy, he said, for any other body to take action opposed to this committee's report, and we were not called on to settle the question one way or the other.

I. J. Spencer spoke in reply to Brother Briney, appreciating the spirit of any honest man like him, but Brother Spencer said it was strange and incomprehensible to himself how anything like the unity for which Jesus prayed could be "discord." "If I understand the 'Declaration and Address,'" he said, "it is two-fold: First, the restoration of the simple Christianity of Jesus Christ; second, a union as far as possible on the faith in Jesus Christ, barring human opinions and allowing the utmost liberty consistent with the faith of Jesus Christ." For thirty-five years, he added, he had been preaching the gospel and never had there come to us, as a people, such an opportunity. "My voice, my soul, my prayer," he said, "go out in the prayer of the Lord Jesus for the overture to fellowship, as far as possible, with these brethren."

W. T. Moore said he was quite sure no man on the committee would wish any one to be bound by the action of this meeting. "I have been with this movement a little while myself," he said, "and I can not understand how Brother Briney can take part in the Centennial without being glad to send this answer. I would be ashamed to go up to Pittsburg in 1909 if we had not sent an answer of the character drafted."

Brother J. W. B. Smith said he would not be bound by the action of the meeting, which was rather a superfluous remark in view of the answers made to Brother Briney.

When the question was put, the report was adopted by a large majority; the opposition was practically nil. Brother Briney and Brother Lord were both, however, in the large audience, though they did not cast their vote openly against the resolution, so far as could be determined from the reporter's table.

W. F. Richardson explained that in simple Christian courtesy we had to give a Christian courteous reply to this letter of the federation conference or else turn it down. He said he had nothing to do with the framing of the reply but challenged any one to compare it with the "Declaration and Address," and see if it was not in the same spirit. W. B. Craig asked the question whether the meeting should not appoint the delegates, and moved that the same committee of ten should select these. King Pendleton moved an amendment to the effect that the committee should appoint themselves first. This having been accepted by Brother Craig, the original motion carried.

J. H. Garrison stated that each religious body was bearing part of the expenses of the conference and that our apportionment was $250. On his call some dozen ten-dollar pledges were made towards meeting this obligation. Others will be welcomed.

J. T. T. Hundley, after the matter was settled, in a speech that did not disguise his emotion, said: "I feel like another star has been added to this convention." And that was the feeling of the great mass of the delegates, for was not this the most important action that had come up for the consideration of the brotherhood? As a fitting close to a meeting looking towards the peace and harmony of the church in our great land, the Netz sisters sang "Our America," using, with effect, a large American flag.

Report of Committee on Union With the Free Baptists.

The committee report on union with the Free Baptists would report as follows:

Since the full report made to the convention at Buffalo your committee has found no opportunity for doing any direct work. As was shown in the last report a conference of the Free Baptist committee with a committee of the Baptist Church immediately after one conference developed the fact that proposals for union with them seemed more attractive and more feasible than with any other. Your committee would be very far from hindering or in any way interrupting such negotiations as may result in the union of these bodies of Baptist brethren. Indeed we would rejoice to see them join wholly in one fellowship, trusting that such a union would be but a prelude and a prophecy of others even grander yet to come. A letter from Prof. A. W. Anthony, chairman of the Free Baptist committee, will explain the present situation:

"I appreciate and so do my brethren of the Free Baptist committee the fraternal and cordial interviews, and the more intimate acquaintance which we have been permitted to have with our brethren of the Disciples. It is true, as you suggest, that at present the proposed union with the Baptist brethren overshadows every other; and I can not now say what will be the final outcome of the agitation and discussion, since neither body as a whole has been able to express itself. Our committee has no power to speak for our people at large, and so we all await with peculiar interest the meeting of our general conference at Cleveland, October 1."

If it shall be possible to state some conclusion of this conference to our convention, it could hardly change the character of this report.

It should be remembered that the present effort to unite bodies that have too much in common to work apart was largely inspired by Dr. George C. Ball, who, with a company of his brethren, met with a company of our own, as it would seem, periodically, in the Franklin Circle Church of Christ, in Cleveland, some three years since. Dr. Ball was a good man. His long life was full of unusual power and he left to the world a rich heritage of noble effort. As he drew near life's close he had an ardent desire that "all who felt the truth of Pentecost and accepted without modification the Lordship of Jesus" might be truly one. May his hope last expressed to us, "That the first union will be with the Baptists and then with the Disciples," be granted early fulfillment. Nothing but actual indifference to the growth of the kingdom can make the people of God indifferent to the cause of Christian union. We can largely measure our zeal for Christ by this. The stolid mass of heathenism beyond the sea; the hard front of wilderness and the flank assaults of rationalism at home, call for the united effort of all who sincerely believe in Jesus the Christ. In the deep and earnest desire for a united church we must hold to the plain and vital truths in which the church first stood and last must stand. But we can show the spirit, the genuine courtesy, the longing for fellowship, the instant affection for all who sincerely love our Lord and Saviour, which commends, and commends above all else the plea for unity.

The people of God can be one when in unselfish loyalty to Christ they desire so to be. May our lives and our plea help to hasten the day. E. B. Wakefield, Chairman.

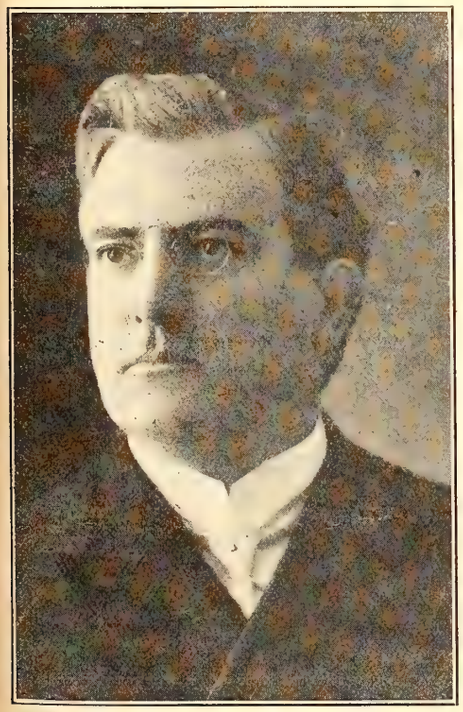
State and National Secretaries' Association.

The meeting of this association at Norfolk during the national convention was the very best, both in attendance and interest, ever held by the association. Heretofore it has been sparsely attended but the state secretaries especially are determined that its meetings shall be a powerful factor for good in the mission work in the home land.



The interest this year centered upon the attempt to merge the state associations and the American Board and the offerings for state with that of that for home missions. The especial point of contention was the effort to have all the states send all money collected for state missions to the treasury of the American Board, out of which it could be checked on warrant signed by the president and corresponding secretary of the state board. It was contended on the one side that the merger would tend to unify and enlarge the work, but the other side contended that it was an unwarranted interference with states rights and would be of disadvantage to both the American and the state board. The secretaries of the states in which we are strong stood as a unit against the move.

The disposition of the question, for the time, was that it should be referred to a committee of seven for adjustment, but as the measure was beaten in the effort to adopt the new constitution, as far as the stronger states are concerned, probably no action will be taken till the committee on the revision of the missionary calendar shall make its report.

The session closed with the election of T. A. Abbott, of Missouri, as president and J. A. Rose, of Indiana, as secretary. A very enjoyable banquet in the evening was the closing feature of the meeting.

Liberty, Mo., to Hold Meeting.

The Christian Church at Liberty, Mo., is one of the historic churches of the state. It was organized in 1831, by A. H. F. Payne. It has had as its ministers some of the leading men of the brotherhood. J. W. Pettigrew, Moses E. Lard, G. W. Longan, A. B. Jones and F. O. Fannon are some of the men who have been preachers for this church. It has grown to its present strength largely because of the work of such men as these, and because of the strong men and faithful women who have been leaders in its membership. The present membership is about 400. Robert Graham Frank, the present pastor, is in the fifth year of his service with the church, and the relations between church and preacher are ideally delightful.

The Liberty church has built three houses of worship. Its first house is now a residence. The second house, erected in 1851, served as the church home until 1905, when it was torn down to make way for the present handsome structure which was erected at a cost of $31,500, and dedicated last February, by Geo. L. Snively, free of debt. The new building was designed by G. W. Kramer, of New York, and is one of the handsomest and most convenient houses of worship in the state. With a total seating capacity of 900 it is equipped with every modern facility for effective church and Sunday-school life and work.

There have been some great protracted meetings in the Liberty church. People yet live in Liberty who remember the meetings held by Moses E. Lard, and later on by C. S. Lucas, and at a still later date by F. O. Fannon and H. A. Northcutt, when many souls were turned to the Lord. It is hoped that the meeting which will begin Sunday morning, November 10, will be a worthy successor of the great revivals that have preceded it. Walter M. White, formerly of the West Side Church, San Francisco, now of Kentucky University, Lexington, Ky., will do the preaching, and this is assurance that it will be well done. The Sunday school at Liberty, Cameron and Lexington, Mo., are in a contest now, and each school is at high tide in attendance and interest. A copy of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of this issue is being sent to each family in the church, and an effort will be made during the meeting to greatly increase the number of subscribers, as the present pastor heartily believes that a Christian paper is a necessity in every home, if men and women are to be interested in the great things of the kingdom. Reports of the progress of the meeting will appear in our columns.

Illinois Bible School Superintendent.

The new state superintendent of Bible schools of Illinois, who has been persuaded to take the position formerly occupied by Marion Stevenson, before the latter became associated with the Christian Publishing Company, is a practical Bible school man. Clarence L. DePew began his Bible school training twenty years ago under such men as H. H. Hamill and A. N. Gilbert. For the past eleven years he has been superintendent of the great school at Jacksonville, which, when he took charge had an average attendance of 160. This year the attendance averaged 600 and the offerings $35, where 11 years ago they amounted to perhaps $5.

Clarence L. DePew.

Brother Depew had a teachers' meeting averaging over forty in attendance and a training class of 125. We look for great results from his state administration of Bible school work. His address is to be Bloomington, Ill.

As Seen From the Dome.

their king: "Lastly and chiefly, the way to prosper and achieve good success is to make yourselves all of one mind for the good of your country and your own, and to serve and fear God, the Giver of all goodness; for every plantation which our Heavenly Father hath not planted shall be rooted out." So, like these sturdy pioneers, we were here "of one mind" to serve our country and our Master's cause, and in the fear of God to lay foundations which shall never be uprooted, and it seemed fitting to come together in one great assembly under the shelter of the Jamestown Exposition, and have our chief speaker introduced by a lineal descendant of the daughter of the old king, Powhatan. May the spirit of the Norfolk convention go with us to the Crescent City.

It was a great privilege to see so many of the pilgrims going and coming as they looked for us under the Dome. Many found their way to the Vermont Avenue Church. The Sunday following the convention we had J. H. Garrison, W. T. Moore and others at our services, and Brother Moore preached the sermon. One of my boys was asked by his father: "How did you like Santa Claus' sermon?" "O he wan't Santa Claus," said Harry, "he was Father Time." And as the preacher described how he used to cut wheat with the old-time cradle, and used that peculiar swing of his body which is so familiar to all, the comparison was not inapt. Come again, Father Time.

The Tennessee Convention.

The churches of Christ of the state of Tennessee met this year on Oct. 6-9, with the Vine Street church, in the city of Nashville, and it was one of the largest conventions, in many ways, that has ever been held by our brethren in the state, fully two hundred delegates from all parts of the state being in attendance, and numbers of them had to come more than two hundred miles to reach the place of meeting. The ladies of the C. W. B. M. ("Can Women Beat Men' society) had charge on the first day, and notwithstanding a steady downpour of rain all day they met promptly at ten o'clock for a conference in the Sunday-school room, and when the hour for the regular meeting arrived, the auditorium was well filled and the convention was on its way with a feast of heavenly visions for all of us. The ladies had for speakers, aside from their officers, Mrs. Ford, of Morrison, Tenn., who has been doing missionary work in the Philippine Islands for several years past and is at home at this time on account of her health. Another of their workers, Miss Viola Compton, of Del Rio, who has charge of a mission school at that place, made an interesting report of her work, and was kept very busy after her first address telling of the conditions of the mountain districts of our own state. Mrs. W. H. Smith welcomed the delegates to our city and the homes of its citizens in a short welcome address.

Mrs. Peyton Robertson, of Nashville, state president, addressed the convention and set forth the many needs of the work and the wonderful progress that had been made in the years that have passed. Mrs. Robertson, as well as all the members of this society, give much of their time and talent to the work, and the success of the same is not to be winked at. At the night session of the board Mrs. Ida W. Harrison, of Lexington, Ky., was the speaker, and she needs no introduction to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. To say her address was all that chaste English could make it would not do it justice. It was brim full of the workings of the cause in which we are all so deeply interested.

The secretary's reports, as made by Mrs. Hirsch, of Jackson, Tenn., were full of good works done and planned for the future.

The report for the Young People's department was made by Mrs. Mazie Allen, of Nashville, and was the best ever made by that department. It showed a membership of 442 and an offering of $510. This report should make us older church members hang our heads in shame over one dollar per member for missions. Truly "a little child shall lead them."

Promptly at nine o'clock Tuesday morning President J. J. Castlebury, or Union City, called the Missionary Society to order, and at that hour many delegates and visitors were in their places, and from that time on there was not a dull minute. Homer T. Cook, of Collierville, conducted the devotional exercises in the absence of J. E. Gorsuch, of Memphis, who, though on the program, was in the hospital at home, having been sick for some time.

The first day of the convention was devoted to Sunday-school work, and I question whether it has ever been more ably presented to any audience than it was by the speakers there. The first address was by E. C. Wilson, of Chattanooga, who spoke on the Sunday-school idea. This was followed by an institute led by E. S. Baker, of Jackson, and participated in by J. E. Crouch, of Johnson City, on "classification." followed by "The Big Boy and How to Hold Him," by Harris Brown, a business man of Memphis, and superintendent of Linden street Sunday-school. "Special Days," was the subject of W. L. Pollard, of Chattanooga. "The Primary Department," by Mrs. Walter Bell, of Bells. She said, among many other good things, that the teaching of the little ones was a secret passage to the hearts of the parents to get them into the church, who otherwise never could be reached. It was brought out during this discussion that 75 per cent of the church members come from the Sunday-schools, ninety-five per cent of our preachers from the same source, and eighty-five per cent of the souls saved. Should this not cause us to put forth, as we never have before, stronger efforts to have all the children as well as all the parents in the Sunday-school? The morning session was closed by an able address by J. P. Rowlinson, of Clarksville, in "A Message from the Christ to Childhood," the main points of which were: First, I believe in you; second, I love your children; and third, I want you. An able address by J. A. Lord, of Cincinnati, Ohio, on State Missions, was a fitting close to a fine day's work.

The convention was opened next morning by devotional exercises led by R. L. Mobley, of Alamo. L. D. Riddell, of Memphis, on the "Program of Missions," prepared us for many good things that followed. J. Lem Keevil, of Johnson City, delivered one of the most beautiful addresses of the convention, on the permanent fund, and at the close of his address many subscriptions to this fund were received, ranging from $100 to $1,000, bringing the fund up to thirty thousand dollars with an aim for forty thousand at our next annual meeting.

W. H. Sheffer, the pastor at Linden Street Church, Memphis, delivered the address on "How Big is Man," and only those who have had the good fortune to hear Brother Sheffer can fully appreciate his address. It was one of the most forceful as well as beautiful and timely speeches of the entire convention. Prof. F. D. Kershner, of Harriman, made perhaps the most scholarly address of the convention, on the "Program of Jesus." The large audience highly appreciated this fine address.

The report of Secretary Myhr showed large gains in all departments of the work, both as to numbers and moneys raised for all purposes. About thirteen hundred were added to the membership during the year by confession and baptism.

The committee on nominations proposed the following names, and they were duly elected by the convention: President, J. T. McKissick, Nashville; Vice President, E. C. Wilson, Chattanooga; Recording Secretary, A. R. Reeves, Paris, and Corresponding Secretary, A. I. Myhr. The following were elected members of the board of directors: One-year term, Hon. G. N. Tillman, A. I. Myhr and B. J. Farrar, of Nashville; two-year term, J. F. Robertson, of Crockett Mills; Hon. A. B. Lamb, of Paris, and George W. Hardin, of Johnson City; three-year term, Hon. M. H. Meeks, of Nashville; J. O. Cheek, of Nashville, and Dr. E. K. Leake, of Collierville.

The committee on future work recommended the appointment of a Sunday-school evangelist to encourage the work in the Sunday-schools of the state; three permanent evangelists, one to be located in each of the three grand divisions of the state, and that a committee of thirty business men, ten from each section of the state, be appointed to cultivate interest and attendance on the conventions.

By this time our hearts were in readiness for the fine address by Prof. H. L. Calhoun, of Kentucky University, on "Is Organized Mission Work Scriptural?" The largest audience was present for this closing session. Not more than ten or a dozen delegates had left for home. So well pleased were many with the address that it was decided to circulate several thousand copies of it throughout the state, one brother agreeing to mail at his own expense 1,000 copies. The general expression seemed to be that the argument of Brother Calhoun could not be controverted successfully and that there was no denying the fact of the scripturalness of organized mission work.

Quoting the words of Scripture, "Whatever we do in word or deed should be done in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ," he said: "The question each and every one should put to himself is, What would Jesus have me do? Not my will, O Lord, but Thine be done. Is our organized mission work right? How are we to determine whether or not a thing is right? We go to God's word to find out, for it is the only correct standard of right and wrong. It is the only line of division we can make. Whatever conforms to God's word is right, and whatever is contrary is wrong. What we want is the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. The Bible and the Bible alone is our rule of faith, for it alone teaches correct principles of religion and morality. All scriptural things are divided into three classes, matters of faith or necessity, matters of indifference, and matters of expediency. Matters of faith are those things which God teaches by inspired precept, or inspired example or by necessary inference from inspired precept or inspired example, and what God teaches must be obeyed, without addition, without subtraction, and without alteration. There is no scriptural precept commanding organized mission work. There is no inspired example teaching it, nor is it a matter of scriptural inference. It is not a matter of faith or necessity. Neither is it a matter of indifference, but it is a matter of expediency. Everything that is helpful or beneficial is expedient and must be done. It is just as binding as a matter of God's will as anything expressly commanded. Ninety-nine per cent of the foreign mission work and a large part of the home mission work is maintained by organized mission societies. Is the foreign mission work helpful or expedient? If so, then also is our organized mission society expedient and scriptural."

At the conclusion of the address a solo was rendered by Leroy St. John. After the benediction by President J. J. Castleberry the convention adjourned.

The closing scenes of the convention will long be remembered by those who were privileged to attend. It would be unjust to close this report and fail to mention the good music that was furnished by Captain Murphy and his good wife, of Springfield.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Ohio.

The church at Nelsonville had a rally day and corner stone laying Sunday, October 13. Prof. Treudley, of Athens, was the speaker at both services. Walter Scott is presiding elder at Nelsonville and is doing a good work.——Geo. H. Sims has resigned at the south church, Lima, after several years of successful ministry. His intentions or his successor are not at this time known.——E. G. Van Winkle will leave Mungen to take the work laid down at Niagara Falls by James Wharton. We have thus made an even trade with New York.——Robert Chapman has been pining for the sweet breezes of the Buckeye trees, and has bade farewell to Butler, Ind., and come back to Ohio, assuming the duties of bishop at New Berlin. The corner stone at New Berlin was laid October 6. Prof. Dean, of Hiram, made the address.——W. H. Pinkerton is now in a fine meeting at the Fourth Avenue Church in Columbus where Walter Mansel is leading so successfully. In November he will be with M. E. Chatley and the saints at Ravenna.——Garry L. Cook is doing the preaching in his own meeting at Lorain. Miss Ida M. Hanna, of Cincinnati, is singing. Lorain had the best rally day in its history October 13. Who said the thirteenth was an unlucky day? You can't make Lorain believe that.——The Ohio letter aims to tell the truth, but sometimes things get a little bit twisted. The statement was recently made that C. C. Maple had taken the work at Rushsylvania. This was a mistake. Charles Ford is now installed in that work, having left North Royalton to accept it. The new church at Rushsylvania will be dedicated very soon.——Don't forget that November is for Ohio week. There never was a greater opportunity in Ohio for mission work than now. The churches are asked for $10,000 this year. They are abundantly able to do it. Let no preacher fail to give the people an opportunity to give to this cause. Secretary Miller has made a very thorough canvass and has been assisted by W. R. Warren et al., so that the field has been well cultivated. There ought to be and we believe will be a liberal response.——The date of the diamond anniversary of the Bedford church is November 15-17. Friday night, November 15, will be a fellowship meeting when every church in Cuyahoga county will be expected to be represented with a message of greeting. Also others will speak. Saturday night, November 16, James Vernon, of Winchester, Ind., an old and greatly beloved pastor, will preach. There will be three services Sunday, all given, for the most part, to history and reminiscence. This will be a glorious day. The closing address will be "A Forward Look," by Mrs. Atwater, the editor of "The Missionary Tidings," who came from the Bedford church. A cordial invitation is extended to all old residents of Bedford to be here. E. W. Libbey, who has been with the church for two or three generations, and is now its presiding elder, will read the historical sketch.——The coming of M. L. Bates as the president of Hiram College is one of the most welcome items of news that it has been ours to chronicle for many a day. Few men among us are better fitted for this place. Brother Bates has been pursuing studies in Columbia University for the past three years and is in the closest touch with modern methods of education. Then all who know him know that he is a born leader. His striking personality and fine insight and executive ability fit him especially for this position. While he will not be on the hill for a few months yet, already the atmosphere is pregnant with a brighter hope and a new enthusiasm. We hope that this may be a union of many years and the result a wonderful enlargement of Hiram's life and usefulness.——C. H. Bass has resigned at First Church, Findlay, to accept a call to Huntington, W. Va.——I. J. Tisdall is assisting Ira Durfee and the Broad Street Church at Akron in a meeting.——Any church wanting a pastor-evangelist of quite a wide experience for a meeting after the holidays, can be put in touch with such by addressing the Ohio Letter man. The Congregational council voted last week at Cleveland to postpone union of the Congregationalists, M. P. and U. B. churches for five years.——The Free Baptists at their tri-ennial conference at Cleveland decided they were not ready to unite with the Baptists. Christian union seems to move slowly.

Herbert Yeuell at Mt. Pleasant, Ia.

Mt. Pleasant is a country town of about 5,000 people, the seat of two colleges and one normal academy. It is simply a college town filled with retired farmers, and this makes it a conservative place and difficult to work up a big meeting, because it is already noted as a church-going town.

The Disciples here are not among the wealthier churches. We are not strong numerically or financially, but we are looked upon as among the best workers in the city. We were not able to conduct a big revival at our own charges and keep our current expenses up at the same time, but being exceedingly anxious to have such a meeting, we hit upon a happy plan. We raised a guarantee of nearly $1,000 among our members and the business men of the town with the proviso that the converts secured at such a meeting should have the privilege of joining the church of their choice.

We secured a large Chautauqua tent, through the kindness of Keith Vawter, of the Redpath Lyceum, Chicago, and pitched it near the church on a corner lot. Our plan had been simply to hold a community meeting. We took the initiative and did not even consult with the spiritual authorities of the city in regard to the advisability of holding such a meeting. Soon after Brother Yeuell arrived he called together the pastors of the city and attempted to organize a union meeting, but without avail. The meeting progressed and the people were already in the big tent regularly, and co-operating in the meeting. Yeuell was preaching to twelve or fifteen hundred people every night, and when these men discovered that the biggest meeting that had ever been held in this city was going on and was about to close, they called a meeting of the pastors and united in asking Brother Yeuell to remain over another Sunday and promised a union effort. Brother Yeuell complied with their request and the result was simply astonishing. On the last day of the meeting there were 128 confessions. At the last service there were 81 confessions. Altogether there were 350 confessions. The Christian Church gets about 100 of these converts, but this is not the only good we have derived from the meeting. Our work has been pushed forward and some bad effects of poor evangelism here in the past have been overcome.

The offerings provided for the entire expense of the meeting, which was over $1,000, and the original guarantee was untouched. Yeuell addressed the largest religious meetings that were ever assembled in this city. Those song services by that greatest choir that the people of this city ever heard will never be forgotten. Yeuell and Matthews endeared themselves in the hearts of the people of this entire community. They will probably be called here for another meeting next year under even more auspicious circumstances.

A Great Meeting in California.

The S. M. Martin meeting at the Naomi Avenue Church, Los Angeles, is a matter of history. We had not planned for a meeting at this time, but had been planning for one later in the fall with O. P. Spiegel, and had no idea of holding it earlier or of having S. M. Martin. Brother Martin was the chief speaker at our Long Beach convention, and while there I insisted upon his preaching for my people at least once before returning to his home in Seattle. This he agreed to do, so I announced him for Monday night, August 10. Then he found that he could preach several times. The people were greatly pleased, yet no efforts were put forth for an ingathering; we simply came to the services and enjoyed them. But when Lord's day came and twenty-five souls responded to the invitation we suddenly awakened to the fact that we were in a revival meeting. Calling a special meeting of the officers we decided that we did not dare to close, but that we must go on, providing Brother Martin would agree to do so. This he was indisposed to do as he had selected this time for a much-needed rest, but finally he agreed to go on for a short meeting, providing another meeting was secured for Brother Spiegel. This was speedily arranged for with the Broadway church and at this writing Brother Spiegel is engaged in a splendid meeting there. We began our meeting in earnest and in just twenty-nine days there were 185 souls added to the church—by confession 95, letter and statement 90. Practically all were adults, many were heads of families and many were young men and women between the ages of 18 and 25. The new members at the first call pledged over $800 toward the current expenses of the church, and 80 pledged tithers were enrolled, 63 of this number being members of this congregation, the others belonging to our other churches, making, I believe, the largest number of tithers ever secured in any one meeting and church. More than $1,000 was raised during the meeting, all by free will offerings, leaving more than $300 after all bills were paid. The last Sunday of the meeting we observed our first anniversary in our new building by making a thank offering (this had been planned before the meeting) of over $400, many of our members giving their entire week's income as an appreciation of the blessings received during the year. It is quite unnecessary to say anything about the evangelist, yet I would say that I never had the privilege of listening to such great sermons as were delivered in this meeting. Brother Martin has left us, the great meeting is a thing of the past, yet we are going on, growing every week. Since the meeting closed 11 have been added—2 by baptism, 9 by letter; the Sunday-school has grown until last Sunday we had 363 in attendance with $15.80 collection. This is an increase from 150 a year ago. I have entered upon my fourth year as minister of this church. During the three years there have been added to the church 275 at regular services, which, added to the results of the Martin meeting, make a total of 460 additions in 38 months. On the Lord's day following the close of the meeting the brethren announced a $400 raise in their minister's salary.

The Great Christian Union Meeting at Springfield, Mo.

It was a Christian meeting conducted under the auspices of the three Christian Churches, and it was a union meeting, for the three churches were united, were of one mind and heart, of one accord, and in one place. In many ways the meeting was one of the most remarkable of any ever conducted by the Disciples of Christ. In number of converts reached, it even surpassed the great Anderson meeting, or a total of 1,271.

Springfield is located in the Ozark Mountains. The northern part of the city, with all of its interests, centers about the Frisco railroad shops and offices. The Central Christian Church is located in this community, and is composed of earnest, wholesouled people, many of them prominent railroad men, and many others, also, of the best families on that side. F. F. Walters has been their minister since November 10, of last year. Brother Walters has a great hold on the church, and is very popular in the community. We were in their building for two services, and found standing room at a premium at both times. The Central received over 400 of the converts, and the building is packed even on Wednesday nights. We predict a great future for this work. It is great even now, but it seems like a bee-hive. The entire membership seem to be there on business for the King. Our great Missouri Evangelist, W. E. Harlow, lives the second door south of the church, and on account of his recent bereavement—the loss of his son, Clyde, who was a singing evangelist, and as all the church say, young man of consecration and princely character—Brother Harlow was in our meeting about three weeks. If the spirit of his prayers are any indication of the spirit of his work, God has great things for Brother Harlow in the Divine vineyard.

On the South Side of the city we have two churches, the South Street Church and the First Church. The former has the best possible location, and is ministered to by F. L. Moffett, with whom we labored in Centerville, Iowa. Brother Moffett has been in Springfield about one year, and in my ten years' experience in the field I never met a pastor and his wife who could make as many calls in a day as Brother and Sister Moffett. Though the South Street Church has a good building, it is far too small. Its capacity is also taxed at the regular services. Many of the best business men and their families are in this church, and they expect to launch a new building movement at once. On account of its location, large membership, and influence in that portion of the city, this church received the largest number of converts.

The First Church, which is really the mother church in Springfield, and whose first building was used in the days of the Civil War for a hospital (that is on the day following the Battle of Wilson Creek), is a down-town church. This church is well located for institutional work, but thinking of moving farther out. They have a very valuable business property, which is rented for store purposes, the church auditorium being on the second floor. N. M. Ragland, who held one pastorate for twenty-five years in Arkansas before coming to Springfield, ministers to this church. Brother Ragland is one of the sweetest, most spiritually-minded ministers we have met in all of our experience. Years ago he baptized Brother Walters, who is the pastor of the Central Church, which made the fellowship of the meeting all the sweeter.

N. M. Ragland, pastor of the First Church.

Our meeting began in the great tent, which was located by the Postoffice, midway between North and South Springfield, the first Sunday in September. I went a few days in advance to assist in the final arrangements, to complete the advertising, arranging platform, baptistry, etc., and met with all the members of all the churches, prior to the opening of the meeting. The meeting was great from first to last. There were thirty-five at the first invitation given, and one hundred at the last. Had it not been for the fact that we were in a tent, and at the mercy of the weather, we would not have considered closing so soon, but the weather was growing cold, and frequent rains in such a great tent would have been an insurmountable barrier. We closed on Sunday, with almost perfect weather, and it rained all the next day, and was exceedingly cold. The meeting closed the right day and the right hour.

Our tent in dimensions was 120 by 170 feet, and was lighted by incandescent lights, with a large platform at the side, with a seating capacity for 150 singers. We used two pianos and an orchestra continually, and the music by Mr. Jesse Van Camp will never be forgotten by those who heard it. The solos and special songs were under the direction of DeLoss Smith, and were never better. In fact, I believe that Mr. Smith and Mr. Van Camp singing together are both stronger than either alone. Our new book, "Songs of the King," was used, and the fact that 1,200 were sold during the meeting, shows the power of music in influencing men.

Mr. Thomas Penn Ullom, who is superintendent of our Personal Workers, brought his bride to the Springfield meetings, having been married but a few days previous to the opening of the same, and Mrs. Ullom, formerly Miss Jennie Heckler, of Antioch, Ohio, was baptized by myself ten years ago, while I was still a student at Hiram College. Mrs. Ullom has since taken a course in the Moody Bible Institute, and is a very valuable worker added to our company. Dr. and Mrs. Betts, who superintended our slum work, are both personal workers. Mrs. Betts, acting as my private secretary, came in the second week of the meeting. They had charge of the Fresh Air Home for the Moody Sunday School, of Chicago, and their summer work in caring for the children of that great, crowded city, was wonderfully blessed with many converts, and was a great preparation for the fall campaign. Mrs. Scoville conducted, as usual, the meeting for girls. Mrs. Betts led the music, and in the one service they reached 36 girls for Christ and the church.

Back of the pulpit was the baptistry, and, by precept and example, Christian baptism was taught at every service. We not only answered the question, "What must I do to be saved?" but also, "What must I do to be baptized?" The tent lacked only 17 chairs of seating 3,000, though an onlooker would have called it a 5,000 auditorium. The seating capacity was taxed continuously. We never addressed such wonderful throngs in any meeting, union or otherwise. On Sunday nights, the audience standing would almost equal that seated.

For some time we have advertised this sort of simultaneous meeting, as it connects the smaller church with the great city movement, and thus inspires the weaker churches and gives them a greater standing in the community. We were delighted last year to be able to arrange in advance for several such meetings this year, of which the Springfield meeting was the first. The were 134, 130, 125 and 151 on the four Sunda and we thank God for the victory won in name alone. Chas. Reign Scoville.

The Voice of a Pastor.

The three churches of the Disciples of Chr in this town have just passed through a gr evangelistic campaign. It was a veritable Pen cost. Like the meeting in Jerusalem it was t fruit of prayerful and painstaking preparati Such a meeting is never an accident. The pla were so carefully arranged—even to the minut detail—that the thoughtful mind could see t the victory was gained before the battle v joined. Brother Scoville and his workers all pleasing personalities and masters in th respective specialties.

The initial service was held in the tent Sunday morning, September 1. The commun of a multitude of Christians was a beauti and suggestive object lesson on Christian uni The first sentence of the sermon of Dr. Scov drew the audience still as death, and he h the attention steadily till the end. He is a eral, a gifted preacher of the Word, and in hortation a son of consolation. The matter, manner and the spirit of his sermons were that could be desired in an evangelistic paign.

The meeting was a tonic to the moral spiritual life of the town. When the mee closed 1,271 had signed cards. Many ot were converted at the reception given to the members. At the following midweek pra meeting and the Sunday services a large pany accepted Christ. Probably 1,300 pe responded to the gospel invitation as a resul the meeting. The new converts are crow our Sunday-schools, prayer-meetings, Ende societies and church services. There is als large increase in the offerings as most of new members have pledged themselves to some definite amount to the Lord's work. next advance will be a revival of church b ing. N. M. Raglan

Seventh District, Illinois.

G. W. Ford, minister at West Salem, has closed his work there and moved to his new field, Owensville, Ind. We only wish he had stayed with us. There is need of more preachers in this Seventh district, and he is the type of man we are seeking.——W. T. Gordon has been in a meeting with the church at Alma, following the dedication of their new church building.——Our state field secretary, J. Fred Jones, is good to us here in the Seventh, having visited a goodly number of our churches in the interest of our state and district work.——C. M. Smithson, of Flora, and Mrs. Davis, of the same place, were with us at Edgewood in a recent rally. Five of the young people from Effingham accompanied the writer, and greatly assisted in the music. A good program was arranged for Sandoval for Monday night, October 21.——I should like to help place two or three good men in our Seventh district.

D. R. Bebout, Field Secretary.

Georgia.

The Northeast Georgia Convention, held at Mt. Vernon, October 22-24, was one of the best in the history of the district. Twenty-eight of the thirty-seven churches were represented, and all the preachers of the district except one were present. The visiting preachers were B. P. Smith and W. B. Shaw, Atlanta; E. L. Shelnutt, Acworth and R. A. Hovious, Tennessee. On Wednesday, October 23, the splendid house was dedicated. I preached the sermon, and T. M. Foster gave the history of the church and offered the prayer. Monroe won the next annual convention.——Evangelist Allen Wilson and his singer, Prof. Lintt, are in the beginning of what promises to be the greatest meeting ever held in the First Church, Atlanta. There were 91 additions the first week. This church will entertain the State Convention November 18-21. Several more preachers who can live on medium salaries are needed in Georgia.

A Good Meeting in 'Frisco.

At the West Side Church, San Francisco, we began a meeting on September 29, and continued three weeks, with 41 additions. Owing to the fact that we were to begin in Santa Rosa on the 20th it was impossible to continue. The pastor, Robert Lord Cave, is the son of the much-beloved R. L. Cave, of Nashville, Tenn., and is one of the brightest young men on the coast. I heard him in a series of sermons two years ago in a meeting in Santa Cruz, and was deeply impressed then with his marked ability. His wife is a woman of sweet refinement, and together they are making their way to the hearts of the people. The West Side Church is one of our best churches on the coast. I have watched, with deep interest, its fortunes. Its first pastor, W. A. Gardner, was a very dear friend of mine. He gave the best years of his life to this church. Walter M. White, the next pastor, I knew. Brother Cave, who succeeded Brother White, had just fairly entered upon his duties as pastor when the awful disaster of April 18th came. But the thing that impressed me most with this church was their earnest desire to help the other churches about the bay. They are on the ground, and know the needs and are doing all they can to meet those needs.

Southwest Missouri.

Protracted meetings are the order of the day in South-west Missouri. The great Scoville meeting at Springfield set the pace. Monser is assisting Brother Sims at Carthage; Joseph Gaylor is helping Sam I. Smith at Duenweg, where the house has just been doubled and beautified; Boen and Conrad are beginning what promises to be a great meeting with Geo. L. Peters at South Joplin; J. M. Miller, of Diamond, is storming the fort at Villa Heights, Joplin, with J. W. Famuliner as pastor; while Brother Barnett at Webb City is holding his own meeting. Pittsburg, Kan., just twenty miles away, has had a shaking up with Coombs and Dawdy as leaders. Wilhite and Tuckerman have been to Columbus, Kan., just a few miles to the west, with a fine harvest cut short by another engagement, but they will soon return and renew the battle. Monett has just had fifty added, and Neosho is preparing for the greatest meeting in their history when they get into their new twenty-thousand-dollar church about the first of the year. Evangelistic fires are burning all over the Ozark hills, and hundreds are being added to the Lord.——Two great church buildings are under way in this section. A twenty-thousand-dollar structure is building at Neosho, that for the size of the town will not be surpassed anywhere. J. W. Baker leads there. That means victory. Evangelist Wilhite will follow the dedication there with a meeting. The other is at Aurora, where Geo. Prewitt preaches. It will cost as much or more than the one at Neosho and will be an honor to the Missouri brotherhood.——The church at Nevada has been redecorated and refurnished at a cost of some three thousand dollars, and reopened, free of debt. The meeting that promised so much was interrupted by a local option campaign that it is hoped will carry the city and county early in November. W. W. Burks is doing a fine work there.——Our First Church has been repaired and redecorated and a fine new pipe organ installed. We shall begin soon to prepare for another evangelistic campaign in this church.

Fife and Son in Kentucky.

The Christian Church of Madisonville, Ky., has had the greatest revival in its history. Arrangements were made last December with Roger H. Fife, and his son Clyde Lee Fife, of Kansas City, Mo., to lead us in this meeting. The first service the evangelists were greeted by an audience which filled the house to overflowing. That we had made no mistake in the selection of the men who should lead us in this, the greatest of all our meetings, was apparent. R. H. Fife's first sermon captured the audience. From that hour up to the close the house was too small to accommodate the people who came to hear. There were additions at every service excepting one. All classes of people began to think, and told about the sermon, thus advertising the meeting. The music was excellent. The large chorus organized and directed by Clyde Lee Fife, inspired every one with a desire for the best things in life. As a soloist he pleased his audience. That his father might have a short rest he preached twice during the revival and his sermons were well received. The unity existing between the father and son is the most perfect possible. As personal workers, I have never seen their equal. The last service was the crowning one. Not half the people who came could get into the house. Fourteen persons offered themselves to Christ and his service during the day. The total number added during the meeting was 93.

73 in a University Town.

I have just closed a two weeks meeting with the University Church in Waco, Texas. This church is made up largely of the faculty and student body of the college. The services were held in the chapel room. We had from fifteen to twenty minutes at the morning chapel hour to speak, and the evening service was from 7:15 to 8:15, so that the students could have most of the evening for study and preparation of lessons. The meeting lasted just fourteen days, with 73 additions from various sources. All felt that it was a great meeting. It was, to me, a great pleasure to work with them. The Texas Christian University is certainly a great school for our brethren of Texas and the great Southwest.

A. E. Dubber,

189 at Chanute, Kan.

We have had and are still having the greatest meeting Chanute ever saw. H. E. Wilhite, with I. H. Adams as singing evangelist, came to us Sunday, October 6, and remained over October 27. There were 180 additions, 108 baptisms, and more yet to baptize. There were 19 additions at the last meeting. Brother Wilhite was compelled to leave to meet other engagements. Our city was never before so thoroughly shaken up by a religious revival. The tabernacle built for the meeting seated 1,700 to 1,750 people. It was well filled at every meeting, and was entirely too small for the Sunday night meetings. Hundreds were turned away each Sunday night. The interest is so great that the Church has decided to continue the meeting for a week or more with home forces. Our pastor, G. W. Kitchen, will do the preaching and H. J. Decker, one of the converts of the meeting, will lead the song service. He is a master in that line, with large experience, attractive personality and a fine voice. He has resolved to give his life to the evangelistic work and I have no doubt he will "make good."

Rogers, Oct. 31.—In September I held a meeting for three weeks and a half here. Forty-four were added to the church, about 2 of them being immersed. In October I found a discouraged little band at Farmington, Ark., where I preached a little over three weeks, with a result of 24 being added, 16 of whom made the confession. The church was left much encouraged.—Jesse E. Heins, evangelist.

Shaw's Point, October 25.—We were compelled to close an interesting meeting at the end of thirteen days, on account of diphtheria. Evangelist Wm. A. Ward conducted the services, which resulted in 18 additions—15 by confession and three by statement.—Charlie E. Barnett, clerk.

Table Grove, October 28.—Last night closed our three weeks' revival services with 29 additions and a most promising outlook for the entire fall and winter campaign, which will be carried on by our pastor, Fred S. Nichols. Alva W. Taylor, of Eureka, did the preaching, and Lee Bowen, of Kansas City, Mo., had charge of the music. By many, this meeting is considered the most successful revival held here in years. While the meetings have closed, we feel that our work has really just begun.

Rock Falls, Octodber 28.—One confession at last night's service.—C. F. Ladd.

Danville, October 30.—A meeting at Old Union Church, six miles northwest of this city, has just closed. The church was neglected and discouraged. Great crowds attended the services, and on Sunday evenings the building could not accommodate more than half the people who attended. The results were 39 additions to the church, the Sunday-school increased fivefold and regular preaching provided for once each Lord's day. There is great joy in the church and in the community.—Andrew Scott.

Norfolk October 11 to 17!

New Orleans in 1908! 'Rah for New Orleans!

I was born in Kansas, but I was not in favor of going to Kansas with our convention in 1908. There is very good reason why we should go to New Orleans in 1908. New Orleans gave way to Norfolk with the understanding (implied at least) that it should have the right of way in 1908. Ever since the Buffalo convention our Louisiana friends have been planning and working for the convention. Their expectations and purposes have been known to the whole brotherhood and only recently has there been suggestion of opposition. They have worked in all confidence that the convention would come to them. It would mean great embarrassment to our cause in Louisiana, therefore, if their plans were defeated. But not only that, the whole South would feel the loss. And our whole brotherhood would miss a great missionary opportunity. The people who exalt the Bible as "the only rule of faith and practice" would enter this stronghold of Catholicism and demonstrate the simplicity of the gospel plan of salvation. There is no city in America like New Orleans. It should be studied by every American citizen. More than fifteen great Roman Catholic cathedrals lift their spires heavenward, but whether they lift the people is another question. Here Romanism flourishes something like it does in Mexico and South America. New Orleans is to-day the great commercial metropolis of the whole South, and it is moving forward by leaps and bounds. Now is the time to strengthen our cause in this great gateway to the Panama Canal. We have two small churches in New Orleans, each one having about 100 members. The Soniat Avenue congregation leads in the invitation to the brotherhood. They will see that every necessary preparation is made. Having been their first pastor and for seventeen months, I know that they will do their part. Let us not disappoint them. They have enlisted the leading people of the city and state in their preparations. Let us give them the square deal. The beauty of the South in the glorious month of October should be almost enough inducement for us to go to New Orleans.

Let the brethren of South Carolina remember that our state convention meets in Charleston beginning Thursday evening, November 21, and continues through Sunday, November 24. Let the congregations select their most consecrated members and send them as delegates on the King's business. The city's gala week will mean low rates. We hope that every one that comes to the convention will have a good time. But those who come to the city for a good time only should not come as delegates. There is business to be done. It is the King's business. Our Charleston congregation has kept open house through the summer. The minister has been in his place every Lord's day.——Brothers Brunson and Russell are actively engaged in the advancement of our cause in South Carolina. It was a rich treat to associate with them and their Christian families for a few days. They gave us a splendid ride to Eutaw Springs, the site of one of the decisive battles of the Revolutionary war. I do not believe there is a more beautiful drive in the United States than from Russellville to Eutaw Springs. Nearly the whole distance of twenty-five miles is a grand archway of beautiful trees, many of them covered with Spanish moss, stately elms, graceful gum trees, fragrant cedars, hickory, umbrellas, magnolias and sublime old oaks.——Born, September 18, to Marcellus R. Ely and Bess Dorsett Ely, a son Paul Marcellus Ely. And thus is added another missionary to our forces in South Carolina.——We are organizing a teacher-training class.——A goodly number of people from South Carolina attended the Norfolk convention.——Brethren who send their sons and daughters to Charleston to be educated or to go in business are requested to send me their addresses. They should also be urged to bring their church letters. We have a number of people here who are so loyal to their home congregations that they are a detriment to the cause in Charleston! They need to get their candlestick out.——We sympathize with the brethren of Holly Hill and the bereaved family, in the loss of young Brother Breeland, who died at Lexington, Ky. We were hoping to have another preacher added to our thin ranks in South Carolina. But God knows best. And we wait and pray.——There are about thirty churches in South Carolina and fifteen preachers. Only four of these churches are located in cities—Charleston, Columbia, Sumter and Orangeburg. There are nineteen cities in this state which in 1900 had a population of 2,000 and more, in which our cause is unknown. Most of these nineteen cities have almost or quite doubled their population in the last seven years. Spartanburg to-day has 20,000 people and is surrounded with 18 mill villages with from 1,000 to 2,000 people. It is the greatest cotton manufacturing city in the South. Other cities of the state are booming like Spartanburg. Now is the time to enter these cities. "Come over and help us." Paul was not blind or deaf!

Gideon and His Three Hundred.—Judg. 7:9-23.

Memory verses, 22-24.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Ye shall not fear them, for the Lord your God he will fight for you. Deut. 3:22.

Israel has now entered upon another period of her national history, commonly called the period of the judges. It was marked by less unity among the tribes than had been exhibited during the earlier years when the perils of the long march and the common dangers of the first stage of the conquest compelled union. The tribes had now entered into their inheritance. As they became an agricultural people each tribe centered its interest on its own concerns.

Along with the loss of unity came frequent lapses from loyalty to Jehovah. Living on relatively friendly terms with their Canaanitish neighbors, learning from them (as they must) the arts of agriculture and absorbing that material culture in which the Canaanites at this time doubtless surpassed the Hebrews, it was natural that they should also absorb much of their ritual and perhaps even adopt their heathen gods. So we find that there were frequent lapses into Baal-worship.

The departures from the faith needed punishment. This punishment came now and again in the form of successful incursions and attacks from their Canaanitish neighbors or from tribes which had been driven to the borders of the land. The divided condition of Israel rendered such Canaanitish uprisings natural and often easy.

The book of Judges presents a series of episodes from the history of this period. Most of the incidents concern only a part of the nation. The movement led by Deborah and Barak (Judges 4, 5) was perhaps as nearly national as any, but even of this it is recorded that certain tribes failed to participate. In the case of the deliverance by Gideon, there was not even an attempt to arouse the nation as a whole. Only the four northern tribes were summoned to the conflict,—Manasseh, Asher, Zebulun and Naphtali. As the point of attack, the Valley of Jezreel, was in the territory of Issachar and Issachar is not mentioned as participating in the fight, it may be that that tribe was even friendly to the invaders. The southern tribes are not once mentioned in the whole episode.

Gideon was one of the cases in which the small things of the world have been chosen to confound the great. Not only did he go with a small company ridiculously equipped against a great host of well-armed enemies, but Gideon himself was a man of no note or prominence in Israel before this exploit. At the first summons he was incredulous and said: "My family is the poorest in Manasseh, and I am the least in my father's house."

His call to his task was from God, not from men. This is true of every call which is the expression of the real fitness of the man to do the work. Sometimes a small man, by some mistake, gets into a great place. Then we can easily see how little the station makes the man. High office or responsible place only gives a man an opportunity to show his real quality and size. A small man never looks so obviously and pitiably small as when he is standing upon a pedestal that is too high for him or trying to fill a place which is too large for him. Weak and inefficient men may get appointments, offices, commissions. But when a man arises who has in him the God-given power to do the needed work, he often appears without a commission and quietly takes command in spite of its lack. Gideon had no commission as commander of the forces of the four allied tribes. But, "he blew the trumpet, and Abiezer was gathered together after him: and he sent messengers throughout all Manasseh, and they also were gathered together after him." Happy is the man who fits his work so well and handles it so efficiently that he can feel that he has the call of God to that particular work and can make others acknowledge the validity of the call.

The sifting of Gideon's host, whatever else it shows, illustrates the truth that God's work requires quality rather than quantity. Any army is stronger after its cowards have been eliminated, though the process may involve a considerable reduction in numbers. And when the work to be done requires coolness and judgment as well as enthusiasm, it may be profitable to sacrifice also the rash, hasty and headstrong, in order to have remaining a small but homogeneous band which unites the virtues of courage and prudence.

The Bible School at Work

Conducted by J. H. HARDIN,
State Bible School Superintendent of Missouri, 311 Century Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

Now that the teacher-training work is fairly launched, and in a sense becoming popular, it may not be amiss to call attention to certain difficulties which may be encountered in carrying it on. I call attention to these, not to discourage, but in order that discouragement may be prevented by a clear understanding that difficulties may be encountered and by due preparation for meeting them.

1. The work calls for study, and there are many who will enlist who are not accustomed to habits of study. These will drop out or drop behind when they realize that study is necessary. The lesson for our leaders at this point is to sift the material at hand as well as possible before beginning, in order to start with as small a propotion of unpromising material as possible. It may be quite difficult to prevent some persons from entering the class who are wholly unprepared to pursue the course of study; indeed, it may be impossible to do so. In such case do not be disheartened when such persons give it up and drop out. Have an understanding with yourself that you knew beforehand that they could do so, and consider your real work helped rather than hindered by the fact of their elimination.

2. Social affairs and important church functions, etc., interfere with the regularity of the class work. This is greatly to be regretted, for the reason that any break in the meetings of classes throws the work into confusion. It is well before starting a class to have it clearly understood that no social affairs are to be allowed to break into the work of the class. Of course there can be no compulsion in this character of work, but there can be a good degree of moral force used to keep members of a class from absenting themselves, or the class adjourning for the purpose of filling social engagements.

Perhaps the most fruitful cause of confusion in a year's work in teacher-training is the annual revival in the congregation. The meeting must go on every night. In many churches there is no separate room where the class can go on with its work. The members of the class are the active workers and are needed in the services each evening. The result is that the class adjourns for four or five weeks till the meeting is over. By that time some members of the class have lost interest. Other things have crowded in to absorb thought and effort. The class may not be able to rally. Now here is a difficulty to meet which requires tact and leadership of a high order. It ought to be understood by the whole church and by the evangelist also that the teacher-training class is going to meet at the regular time each week; if not at the church, at some other appointed place, and that this announcement has the warm support of all concerned. If we are to do anything worth while in this great department we must go into it with a stronger purpose than we have yet shown. The minister and the whole church ought to see to it that this work is not disturbed by any other feature of the church's activity.

3. Removals of members and leaders. Sometimes a class will be broken up in this way. There is no way to prevent people from removing from place to place. But most of the damage from this cause can be prevented if the Bible school superintendent, the pastor and the church officers are watchful and faithful. If a leader leaves let some one else be chosen to take his place immediately, so that there will be no break in work. If several members of the class move to another community let the lea not be discouraged. The success of the w does not depend upon the number in class, but upon the patience, faithfulness thoroughness with which the members go on to the end, do the work they un take.

It will be seen that the difficulties none of them insurmountable. Only we r not surrender to them too easily. It is spiring to see the amount of enthusiasm is bursting forth on the subject of teac training. I would not have a grain Let it widen and take up into its sple swirl of influence our whole people; bu the same time let us know that teacher-t ing is to be a matter of painstaking, tient, systematic work, and that its real fectiveness will be seen only after se years of persistent effort. With this ur standing in regard to it, teacher-trai should be welcomed as one of the most ful of all the features of our glorious school work.

We need the money pledged by Mis Bible schools for state work. We ne badly, and we need it now! Send to me a above address.

Helpers of Each Other's Joy.

Topic November 13, 2 Cor. 1:24.

Joy is the dominant note of the religion f Jesus. This is true also of the religion of he Old Testament. Thanksgiving and praise ound through all the great processional salms and break out in notes of triumph in he ringing messages of the prophets. There s no book like the Bible in its persistent nd persuasive optimism. There are strong rophetic denunciations in its pages but above ll its condemnations and its prophecies of oming woe, sound the pean of praise and riumphant shout of rejoicing, as when the ons of God sang together at the dawning
f creation. "Now abideth faith, hope, love; ut the greatest of these is love," is the lanuage of the great apostle to these same Corinthians. And out of these abiding things pring the perennial joys of the Christian ife. It was Paul also who said: "The ingdom of God is not in meats and drinks ut in love, joy and peace in the Holy Spirit."
Therefore to be joyous is ever a holy thing.
t is the Christian's birthright. "With joy nspeakable and full of glory" the saints of ld looked forward to the inheritance laid p for them in the heavens. And this is our ssurance that "all things work together for good to them that love God, who are the or the things that are seen are temporal but

* * * * * *

How shall we be helpers of each other's joy? There is a hint in the forbearance of Paul when he says that to spare them he came not as yet unto Corinth. This gentle forbearance of the great apostle is one of the tenderest traits of his many-sided character.
And I have wondered sometimes if we do not fail in this thoughtful forbearance with others' failings, to their discouragement and our own distraction. "Forbearing one another in love" is one of the finest of all the apostolic directions for the promotion of peace and the preservation of the joys of God's people. To spare one another the pain needlessly inflicted by our thoughtless or fault-finding speech is the truest of brotherly and sisterly kindness. To let alone may be love's rarest secret, when silence is indeed golden and speech is unkind, however good the intentions. To keep still is often the very highest proof of our Christianity. Joy can not dwell in a brawling house or in a censorious church. So let us cultivate the grace of keeping still along with the gift of tongues and other of the Christian graces.

To respect the freedom of others is a fine thing in every life and in every relation of life. This is expressed in the words of the text: "Not that we have dominion over your faith, but are helpers of your joy; for by faith ye stand." Self-respect and respect for the faith and the rights of others will further the ends of peace and add to the sum of the world's joys. But let us not forget to speak the kindly word and do the kindly deed when opportunity offers. Human sympathy is a great healer of hearts and giver of joy. To weep with those that weep and rejoice with those that rejoice is the divine way. And it is also the gentle and delightful human way.

Quickly following his advent into this House were prepared the following the blue and those who wore the gray began to hold their reunions together, and together to scatter the flowers of springtime on the graves of their fallen comrades—brothers, all, in the sacred order of American knighthood. The chasm had become almost invisible. Then came the cry of an oppressed and downtrodden people in an island at our very door, calling upon us, a great and strong nation, to deliver them from their bondage, and help them to attain the boon of freedom. Our Nation's remonstrances with the oppressor of Cuba were in vain. War with Spain, long procrastinated, became at last inevitable. The whole nation was in a white heat of patriotism from Maine to Florida and from Norfolk to San Francisco. Where now was the Mason and Dixon line? It is supposed that when the Spanish minister left Washington for Madrid that he must have taken it with him, for no one could find it! That bloody chasm—what of it? It vanished with the blowing up of the Maine and the calling out of the troops to drive Cuba's oppressor from her shores. There was no North, no South now, but men who once stood face to face in deadly antagonism as foes now stood shoulder to shoulder, facing a common enemy and marching under a common flag—the starry banner of a once more united nation. The Union has no more loyal supporters to-day than the men who wore the gray; and the South has no truer friends and warmer admirers than the men who wore the blue. "Dixie" and "The Star-Spangled Banner" alike are national airs to-day.

Motives for Healing Our Denominational Divisions.

Is there not in this illuminating chapter of our national history a prophecy of what may be and, indeed, what must be, in the now divided church of Jesus Christ? Are not the perils which threaten not only the church, but our homes, our free institutions, and all that is sacred and best in our Christian civilization, enough to blot out our petty lines of difference, and cause us to join hearts and hands in a common defense against common foes? As patriotism triumphed over party differences, shall not our common faith in Christ and our common love for God and humanity triumph over our sectarian differences? Yonder is the pagan world, with its heathen rites and abominations, calling for the light of the gospel and begging deliverance from its bondage, and down from the heights of yonder mountain top in Galilee comes the ringing command, "Go, and make disciples of all the nations!" Here at home are strongly-entrenched evils that challenge the best efforts of a united church. And, tenderest of all, and most irresistible of all, there comes to us from the shadows of Gethsemane the prayer of our suffering and agonizing Lord—"That they all may be one, that the world may believe that thou didst send me!" Can it be doubted—will we allow ourselves to doubt—that this prayer will be answered and that these mighty motives for unity shall lead us to close up our divided ranks? Nay, already are we permitted to see the lowering of denominational walls, the closing up of denominational chasms and the gathering together of the people of God under the banner of his Christ for a great forward movement looking to the evangelization of the world and the completer Christianization of our own and other Christian lands.

Mr. Chairman—While listening a few moments ago to the magnificent strains of "The Lost Chord" on that great organ, I could but feel that love is "the lost chord" in the anthem of the church in past centuries, and that when it shall be restored to its original supremacy as the dominant note, such music will be heard in the choir visible of a united church as shall fill all heaven and earth with its divine melody.

Signs of Promise.

Never, since the apostolic age, has the great heart of the church beat so strongly in unison with that of the Master as it does to-day. Never were there more signs of promise on all the skies. Science has become more reverent; criticism more sane; government more just and more determined in enforcing justice; conscience is becoming more regnant in politics, in industry and even in theology. The Church, weary of her long doctrinal controversies, and of her weakening divisions growing out of them, has raised the cry, "Back to Christ!" and around his cross and divine personality the people of God are rallying in glorious forgetfulness of their minor differences. The great interdenominational movements which have marked the last quarter of a century are but the expression of a catholicity of spirit, a yearning for a wider Christian fellowship and a broader field of Christian activity on the part of the best people in all the churches. These movements culminating in the great Interchurch Conference in New York City in 1905, in which the representatives of eighteen millions of Protestant Christians came together to find a way for the more speedy realization of our Lord's prayer for the oneness of his followers, show how the Spirit of God is moving upon the hearts of his people, and how our divine Lord is fulfilling his own word, "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me." Having first drawn his church into vital union with himself, which is the essential condition of securing its own unity he will lead it forward, as a conquering host, to subdue the whole earth to his beneficent reign.

Here, Mr. Chairman, the analogy which I have been tracing between a united church and our glorious Union ceases, for every star that shines to-day on its honored flag shall fade in the rising splendor of the Sun of Righteousness, for the time comes when the kingdoms of this world, aye, and its republics, too, shall have become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign for ever and ever!

"Without Are Dogs."

If, through some wondrous miracle of grace,
To the Celestial City I might win,
And find upon the golden pavement place,
The gates of pearl within;

In some sweet pausing of the immortal song
To which the choiring Seraphim give birth,
Should I not for that humbler greeting long
Known in the dumb companionships of earth?

Friends whom the softest whistle of my call
Brought to my side in love that knew no doubt,
Would I not seek to cross the jasper wall
If haply I might find you there "without?"

Chapter XX.—The Passing of a Judge in Israel.

Farewell, mortality; Jesus is mine!
Welcome Eternity; Jesus is mine!
Welcome, ye loved and blest,—
Welcome, sweet scenes of rest,—
Welcome my Saviour's breast,
Jesus is mine. —Mrs. Bonnar.

Until the Easter glory lights the skies,
Until the dead in Jesus shall arise,
And He shall come but not in lowly guise—
Good-night. —Sarah Doudney.

The next morning the judge did not come out to his breakfast as usual, and James stopped to see if he was ill, but to his amazement he was sitting at his desk, with pen in hand, as natural as life, but his spirit had fled. He had written:

"My Dear Children: My days are ended. The final warning has come and I must go. I have spoken my words of parting and performed my final act and blessing. I am grateful to God that I was spared to do this. You must not make a mourning for me, but rejoice in that I have gone to my rest and the reward of the grace of God. I am passing away without pain, and your dear mother has come to meet me and to lead me up the shining way to God. Good-bye."

Just a little scrawl with a tremor or a wavy line followed this last word, and he sat in position with head slightly bowed, but apparently looking upon the open page of his old family Bible that lay before him.

James broke the news softly to Grace and the servants, who, with the assistance of the neighbors, laid him upon his unruffled bed from whence he was borne to the house of worship, and from thence to Riverside cemetery, followed by a large concourse of people. President Brown's touching words were in keeping with his life and the ending thereof. He had known the judge for many years and could draw a beautiful lesson from the occasion. Charlie was deeply moved as the masterful sermon proceeded to set forth the lessons of a well-spent life that had thus passed before. It was found that the judge had arranged his belongings and property so as to be a perpetual fund, the income of which was to be used for the education of future posterity and for sending them forth as missionaries to the heathen. Each one who wished to go as a missionary was to have an allowance for equipment after his or her bills were all paid at college. He had about $7,000 from the fragments of his property at Eaton, and by judicious investment and his income after coming to Middleton he had accumulated about $8,000 more. This was to be invested by the Loan and Investment Company, and the income used for the purposes indicated. An allowance was thus provided for Grace and James to begin with.

Chapter XXI.—A Modern Mission.

Every friend of Jesus is a friend of missions. Where there is a healthy spiritual life there is a love for the missionary cause. When you consider the reasons for this, you obtain an insight into the glory of missions, and into your calling to embrace this cause as a part of your soul's life.

Missionary work is the principal aim of the church on earth. It is the work for which the Holy Spirit was given. . . . . It brings blessings on the church. It rouses to heroic deeds of faith and self-denial. It has furnished the most glorious instances of the wondrous power of the Lord.—Andrew Murray.

As her father was now gone, there was nothing to detain Grace longer, and within a week they were off with thirteen other families and sixteen single helpers, forty-two in all. They had been provided with a printing press and all the modern improvements and appointments for starting a small colony. They had chosen Canton as their objective point for landing. From the ocean steamer they took river passage as far as Chow Foo. From there they pushed inland to the beautiful sugar plantations and rich silk fields of the province of Kwang See. Here in a fertile plain in a thickly populated district, in southern China, with a similar climate and conditions to those in Middleton, with the Nanling Mountains to the north and the Gulf of Tong-quin to the south, they planted their colony upon the site which had been procured through a treaty of purchase from the kingdom. Here they studied the languages and customs of the empire and then came missionaries from all parts of China desiring to be taken into the system and allowed to work for their living until such time as they could be sent forth to labor for the great common cause under the common banner of Christ. For these had found their work hampered and hindered by divisions and differences, similar to those in our own land, and they longed to see a united body going forth with the primitive power, the fame of which they had heard from the Middleton Christians. From these missionaries they were able to learn the languages and print tracts and send forth literature and workers. The faithful were brought to the colony and permitted to establish homes and work after the same plan as the colony at Middleton, and from their funds and people, others were sent forth to form the nucleus of colonies and mission bands; thus making the land and the people bear the expense of their own countries' evangelization, as fast as it could be established upon the plan of the original company. And this was much faster and more certain than one might at first think. For the separation of these converts from heathen surroundings, thrown with the best of influences, and the plan by which each should earn his own living and support a family in a Christian community, was its strongest hold. Every native who came in contact with this community, saw that there was a better way to live than their people were living, and they became zealous to promulgate the Christians' method over their own kingdom. All know what faithful imitators the Chinese are when they take on manners and customs of others, hence the results multiplied rapidly as the influence spread and the Glad Tidings were proclaimed. The new colonies found but little more difficulty in government than they had in our own land. All that was necessary was simply to conform their laws and methods of government to the laws and methods of the Celestial Kingdom, and there was no opposition, since revenues were always paid cheerfully and their methods always open to the inspection they were subjected to. This brought them into good repute with the Celestial court, and James was summoned before the imperial head to give an account of the work and the teachings of these wonderful Christians, of which so much was told. After spending a month before the court, teaching and preaching the Kingdom of God and elucidating the new plan of colonies for the kingdom, the emperor gave him full leave, by an imperial edict, to establish such colonies wherever he desired, also wrote letters of introduction and recommendation to all allied kingdoms with his own, telling them what a wonderful work for the alleviation of the poor and the healing of the sick and the government of the sinful, this man was doing in his kingdom. James took advantage of this to send a band of missionaries across into Thibet, and other hard places of access; and also to draw heavily upon the home funds to establish colonies in important places. Having struck off many thousands of copies of this edict and the letters of his introduction and recommendation, with some of the best literature translated into the various languages of the people, he sent them out broadcast, and in return he had thousands of applications for missionaries and colonies, and was enabled to get options and advantages, in the most strategic places, whither he directed the multitudes, who desired admission to the system. And there was no lack of the power that attended the first preaching at what became Middleton of America; for the same spirit and power were there and it ever follows the unity and devotion that manifests itself in obedience to the Word, and the leadings of Christ's Spirit in all ages.

The Missionary Boards of the Denominations began to hear of the wonderful work that was being accomplished in the Celestial Kingdom and how their own missionaries and converts were deserting their posts and joining themselves to the new colonies; also of the bands that were being sent forth throughout the allied kingdoms. Seeing that God's hand was in the new movement, they issued letters asking the best counsel of the churches' wisest men in the adjustment of their future plans, toward this movement; for it was manifest that it was only a matter of time when their missions would all be absorbed by the new system. The home churches were also finding the same difficulty in the regions where the new colonies were being planted in the various states, where suitable locations had been found and similar communities to Middleton were rapidly springing up. The new movement was thus cutting both ways, sapping the strength of the churches at home and absorbing their missions abroad. So when these bodies of representative men came together to deliberate, they had abundant evidence and testimony to consider.

Thus several of the leading churches had arranged a concerted conference of their representatives, to meet on the Pacific Coast, in a large city not far from Middleton, "The mother from whence the disturber of their peace had sprung," as one of the Bishops, in his opening address, termed it. He counseled drastic measures to stop the spread of what seemed to him "a plague to Christianity. But a brilliant address followed from one of the secretaries of a foreign board, who counseled moderation and toleration and even co-operation, with these people, whose fruit bore witness that God was with them. "For," said he, "no man can do these things that they do, except God be with him; and it behooves us to beware lest we find ourselves fighting against God."

A gentleman who was well known to all within the state, one who had gathered a national reputation, arose in the discussion that ensued and said: "Does any law judge a man before it hears him? I move this body that the Christian congregation at Middleton be summoned to send representatives here to-morrow to speak for themselves and to have equal rights in these deliberations. If the extreme wing of this body will put their grievances into form and present them here to-morrow, in the nature of charges or questions against these people; let them hear them and make reply if they can; and if their replies are not satisfactory, we can know better then how to proceed and what we are justified in doing and saying against these people, who appear to be turning the world and the churches upside down."

An extreme faction opposed this measure bitterly, but the plan was considered no more than just and the only wise thing under the circumstances, since they were well aware that any underhanded measure projected, without a show of fairness, would only result in the advancement of the Middleton cause, as it already had in a score of instances known to all in the council; so telegrams were sent to the leading men of Middleton asking that a delegation be sent down by special train, to sit with them at 9 o'clock on the above proposition and to be prepared to answer whatever objections or questions they might be presented with, concerning the world-wide movement they were propagating. Accordingly a committee was appointed to draw up the question. The committee consisted of a man who lived in a town that was being "leeched to death," as he termed it, by the mail system of trade and the competition which Middleton had the advantage in through the co-operation system of the merchants already mentioned; another member—who was placed upon the committee (or rather crowded himself on)—was a man who had been expelled from Middleton for cause, and was in no wise repentant, but breathing out bitterness and threatening against the whole plan. A third one was the bishop who made the address.

They drew up a bitter tirade and accusation against the plan and people in general, saying among other like things, that "the system was inimical to the interests of the home, the church and the state alike, and subversive to the interests of mankind in general." They proceeded to say that it was "unscriptural and even immoral," attributing to it "Mormonistic teachings and worse practices."

President Brown's name was brought in in a most obnoxious manner, and the old Eaton scandal was hashed up; and a copy of the "Phoenix World" produced, with all the glaring falsities that it contained. Also copies of the old defunct "Times" containing the lies of early persecution, were brought forward as from hades itself.

Duties are pressing on me,
And the time for work is brief;
What if with purblind vision
I neglect the very chief?

What if I do with ardor
What a thousand could, maybe,
And leave undone forever
What was meant for only me?

From that, O Master, save me!
Move my hand, thought, voice and pen,
To their peculiar service
In this world of needy men!

And oh! whatever labors
Are not finished with the day,
Let them be for self—for others
Grant the doing, Lord, I pray!

Housekeeping and Homemaking

BY MISS HARRIET L. SMITH.

"Eric, I wish you would come in or else go out. You're holding that screen door open like an invitation to the flies."

The boy, who was standing in the doorway looking up and down the street, turned at his sister's impatient call and entered the house. "I didn't think about the flies," he said good-naturedly. "Did any of them dodge in over my head?"

Frances did not reply. She was looking at the door, an expression on her face which was somewhere between terror and indignation.

"Eric Fraser, where in the world could you have found any mud to-day? No matter if there hasn't been any rain for a month you'll come into the house and make muddy tracks across the floor. And I spent such a long time polishing it this morning," sighed Frances, with what her brother called her "martyr-like tone."

"Well, I don't hunt up the wet places, if that's what you mean," was Eric's rather short answer. He pulled an easy chair into the baywindow and settled himself comfortably with the morning paper. Frances, who had gone for a dusting cloth to remove the traces of his tracks on the polished floor, uttered an exclamation as she re-entered the room.

"Eric Fraser, would you mind leaving that chair where I put it? The room is simply spoiled with all the furniture huddled into that end of the room. If you want to sit in the window take the window seat."

"Oh, no! I'll go upstairs to my own room, and maybe there I can have a little peace." The slam of the door behind him was very expressive, and Frances sighed as she looked at her aunt. "You see how it is," she said. "Eric doesn't appreciate how hard I work to keep things nice. I think housekeepers have very hard times."

Her tone seemed to indicate that a little sympathy would be welcomed. And Aunt Elizabeth was sorry for the girl, who was trying so hard to fill her mother's place, but she did not think that sympathy was just what Frances needed. "My dear," she said, instead, "what is the object of all this dusting and scrubbing and polishing that goes on in a home? Why isn't it left out?"

"Left out!" repeated Frances. She stared at her aunt incredulously. "Left out, Aunt Elizabeth! Why, it would be intolerable. Nobody could have any comfort in a house that wasn't kept clean and in order."

"Exactly." Aunt Elizabeth looked pleased. "The comfort and enjoyment of the family are the first consideration. Order and cleanliness are important, as they contribute to the more important things. Just as soon as they interfere with the family comfort they have gone too far."

"I suppose you think I ought to let Eric track all around and not say a word," remarked Frances, crossly.

"I mean, my dear, that homemaking is a higher art than housekeeping. I knew a woman once," said Aunt Elizabeth, reflectively, "who had a reputation as a good housekeeper, and she was determined to live up to it. When her husband came home at night he found his slippers waiting for him on the outside steps. He put them on before he crossed the threshold."

"That was going rather far, but still it had its advantages," said Frances, laughing in spite of herself.

"Yes, but it didn't stop there. The mania for keeping things in order grew on her till after she had a room arranged to her liking, she would lock the door and not allow any one of the family to use it. The kitchen was the last to be closed. Her husband came home one night and found a cot on the back porch and the cooking stove in the back yard."

"Why, she must have been crazy!" Frances exclaimed.

"That's what the doctor said. But I have always thought that she should be a warning to the housekeepers who keep their homes neat at the expense of family comfort. I have known," added Aunt Elizabeth with a twinkle in her eye, "a number who have started on the same path, even though they never went as far."

Frances looked at her, and her eye reflected the twinkle.

"I wonder if Eric would like to make candy," she said reflectively. "I've objected several times lately when he's proposed it, because the chafing dish gets into such a condition, and the room is always out of order, before he's through. I suppose the good housekeeper you were telling about would never have thought of allowing such a thing."

"I don't believe she would, but a good housekeeper might," said Aunt Elizabeth, smiling back.

And then the aggrieved Eric, sulking in his room upstairs, was as surprised as delighted to hear his sister's voice in the hall, "Eric, come down. We've just got time to make fudge before supper."—New York Observer.

Rare Cases.

It is rare to find a man who is willing to concede that words or acts are malicious. Men always have some justification, some reasons other than enmity of heart, malevolence or ill will. And so difficult is it to prove malice against a man that it is not attempted, nor required. It is inferred from the acts themselves. Ask a lawyer, and he will tell you that the provisions of law give but little light on the subject, that as a rule men feel the malicious spirit in a man's acts, or words, and do not need, and rarely can have, direct proof.—Christian Advocate.

A. O. Leonard INVENTOR LEONARD'S ANTISEPTIC EAR DRUM

I was deaf for thirty-five years

My Ear Drum (which I patented July 3rd, 1906) and my method have restored my hearing. Since I put it on the market last February, it has restored the hearing of hundreds of others, many of whom had given up all hope of ever hearing again. It has also relieved many from distressing head noises. I have just gotten out a new Ear Drum that is a great improvement over my original Drum. The magaphone principle and the flat-sounding membrane make my drum the most successful device on the market. It is "Unseen Comfort." My new method and antiseptic Ear Drum are endorsed by leading paysicians. The price is very low. Why not have your hearing restored? Let me write you about it. I will give you facts only and will not exaggerate.

Are You You?

Are you a trailer, or are you a trolley?
Are you tagged to a leader through wisdom or folly?
Are you somebody else, or you?
Do you vote by the symbol and swallow it "straight"?
Do you pray by the book, do you pay by the rate?
Do you tie your cravat by the calendar's date?
Do you follow a cue?

Are you a writer, or that which is worded?
Are you a shepherd, or one of the herded?
Which are you—a what or a who?
It sounds well to call yourself "one of the flock."
But a sheep is a sheep after all. At the block
You're nothing but mutton—or possibly "stock."
Would you favor a stew?

Are you a being and boss of your soul?
Or are you a mummy to carry a scroll?
Are you somebody else, or you?
When you finally pass to the heavenly wicket,
Where Peter the Scrutinous stands on his picket,
Are you going to give him a blank or a ticket?
Do you think it will do?

Popular Science.

The beginnings of life have been lately studied by Miss Rina Monti in some of the newer lakes of the Alps. In the lake of the Seracs, which has been formed within the memory of present inhabitants, only five species of life are to be found, and these are plants, four being diatoms. In Ong and Tignaga, two older lakes, animal forms—feeding upon the diatoms—have begun to appear. The observations made it evident that life in a lake begins with diatoms that absorb the carbonic acid dissolved in the water, and that the next stage is the development of simple animal organisms, like rhizopods, that subsist on vegetable forms already existing. Geologists have inferred that the first life on earth began in the ocean in this same way.

A newly suggested test of death—claimed to be infallible—depends upon the alleged fact that hydrogen sulphide always forms in the lungs within twelve to twenty-four hours after death, and finds its way out of the body through the air passages. The presence of gas is determined by placing in the nostril of the supposed corpse a piece of absorbent paper moistened with a solution of lead acetate. The paper is blackened by any trace of the gas, but remains unchanged if life still lingers in the body.

The new fly of East Africa, described by W. Donitz as Cordylobia murium, was discovered by Dr. Robert Cook, as parasites in the skin of rats suspected of plague. Flies hatched from the maggots in just one month. It is supposed that the eggs are laid in the earth, and that the larvae attach themselves to the parts of the rats touching the ground. Larvae of another fly of the same genus are found in boils of railroad builders in Guinea.

Tuberculosis patients that live and grow fat are reported by Doctor Guilhand, a French physician. He has found a form of tuberculosis that remains in the condition of a local lesion, is usually associated with an excessive deposit of adipose tissue, and is curable. He believes it arises from implanting attenuated Koch bacilli in so-called scrofulous persons.

While the average man is satisfied with a maximum of thirty-two teeth, a Turk near Balburt, in Asia Minor, boasts of forty-five, all perfect. He belongs to a well-toothed family, his mother and a sister having the same number.

The artificial cork of a recent French patent is made of a mixture of amorphus cellulose (pith of rushes, powdered cocoanut shells, or paper pulp), fibrous cellulose (thistle-down, textiles, or esparto pulp), and agglutinating cellulose (solution of nitro-cellulose). Glass-lined moulds with small holes for the escape of vapors are used to shape the pastry composition. The volatile solvents of the nitro-cellulose are evaporated, the corks are removed from the moulds, and the nitro-cellulose is denitrated by a reducing agent. The finished material is given resistance to water by dipping into tungstic acid.

The Value of Time.

There was once a princess who had a string of pearls. One end had loosened, and every so often a pearl slipped from the string and was lost. A friend spoke to her of the loss of the pearls.

"O, the string is a long one!" she answered carelessly.

"Do you know how many pearls it has?"

"No."

"Can you get any more when these are gone?"

"No."

"You bear your loss well; these jewels are priceless."

"I am going to believe that the string is a very long one," answered the princess; "beside, I do not use them."

Foolish princess!

This is a parable of the way we waste precious time. It is precious if invested wisely. If not, it just slips away, lost forever. We know not how much will be granted to us.

Queen Elizabeth is said to have cried when dying: "Millions of money for a minute of time!!" But "time" was not on the market. It could not be bought at any price.—Exchange.

Grandpa's Pocket.

Three small boys sat in a row on the fence.

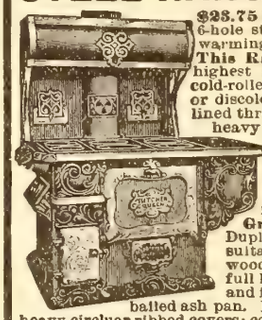
Six dirty hands rubbed the tears away from six weary eyes. Three small hearts were full of woes. Sister Sue forgot to buy each boy a top when she went to town.

One small dog, the boys called "Snip," sat on the ground ready to howl, but when he saw grandpa, he barked for joy.

"Hello!" grandpa said, "what's the matter with my boys?"

"We want tops to spin!" wept three small boys.

Grandpa laughed. Out came his knife; it was big and sharp. Then in his right hand he found a spool. "Snip! chip," went the big knife, and one end of the spool grew sharp and thin. Then the big knife made a peg from a bit of the fence, and grandpa pushed the peg into the hole in the spool and it turned into a top.



Then grandpa found a button-mold in his left-hand pocket. Now a button-mold is a round piece of wood with a hole in the very middle. Ask your mother for one. Grandpa's big knife flew around another bit of the fence, and it made a peg! He pushed it into the hole of the button-mold, and it turned into a top.

Then grandpa found a great big bead, a yellow one, in his guess-what pocket; and then the big knife made a peg from a bit of the fence, and grandpa pushed the peg into the hole in the bead and it turned into a top.

Grandpa shut up his big knife and put it into his pocket.

Then three small boys and one small dog had a lovely time spinning tops until Sue called them; then they all went into the house and ate a tip-top dinner.—Christian Intelligencer.

Five furry kittens
Waiting in the house.
Softly! Softly!
They think they hear a mouse:
The white kitten says, "Be still!"
The gray kitten says, "We will."
The brown kitten says, "Oh, where?"
The striped kitten says, "Take care!"
The black kitten says, "Right there-"
"Squeak!" went the mouse,
And they all ran under the house.

BENTWING.

"Mother," said John Everett, when Mrs. Bright came into the nursery one morning to dress her little son, "I didn't sleep very well last night. There was a funny noise kept me 'wake."

"Well, well," smiled Mrs. Bright, "is my small boy developing nerves already? Probably you dreamed the funny noise, John Everett."

"No, I didn't dream it, mother. It was a really true noise. I think it's in the stove."

Mrs. Bright opened the door of the stove that was used to warm the nursery of her summer cottage on chilly days. "It must have been your imagination, dear; for there is nothing here that could possibly make any sound," she said.

"Any way, I heard lots of noise," persisted John Everett.

"Perhaps you did, son, and I believe the next noise you hear will be the breakfast bell, so let us hurry."

It was such a pleasant day that John Everett did not stay indoors at all, and he thought no more about the noise in his room until he went to bed. But that night, after his mother had kissed him and turned the light low, and had gone softly out of the room, he again heard the strange sounds in the corner wher the stove was.

"Mother thought that was imagination," he said, as he raised himself on his elbow and peered across the room. "But I know it is really a sound." For a few minutes he listened quietly, and then with a little air of determination he rose from his bed and walked gravely out of the room and downstairs.

Mrs. Bright and her brother Dick were reading, and they did not hear the small bare feet on the thick carpet.

"Do my eyes deceive me, or is this really our John Everett a-walking in his sleep?" exclaimed Uncle Dick, when he saw the little figure of his nephew beside his armchair."

"I'm not asleep, and there's a funny noise in my room that keeps me 'wake. Uncle Dick, I want you to come and find it, 'cause mother thinks I dreamed it, but I didn't, for it's a really noise."

Uncle Dick picked John Everett up in his arms, and, turning to his sister, said, "Come, let's see what's bothering the little chap." They all went to the nursery and just as they entered the room John Everett's quick ears caught the sound again.

"Don't you hear it?" he whispered.

"Why, there is some odd noise!" exclaimed Mrs. Bright.

"Of course there is," said Uncle Dick, "and it's in or near the stove." He put John Everett on the bed and then began to examine the stove. "Well, I declare! the noise is in the stovepipe. Some poor thing is caught there and is trying to get out."

John Everett sat straight up and watched his uncle with wide-open eyes as he removed one joint of the stovepipe. And, when a fluttering young bluejay came out, he clapped his hands with delight. But the bird was too exhausted to enjoy his freedom, and his wings, which had been flapping against his prison walls, were bruised and sore, and he sank helplessly to the floor.

"O mother, may I have him for a pet?"

"I hope he will get strong enough to fly and be happy in his own way." Mrs. Bright took the bird tenderly in her hands, but John Everett looked much disappointed.

"We will take care of him, dear, while these poor wings are getting well, and maybe he will like to stay with us."

"Wasn't it funny that he got in the pipe?" said John Everett. "You see it was a really noise."

"Indeed it was," laughed Uncle Dick; "and we'll put the really noise in the woodshed, where there are no chimneys for him to hide in."

This is the story of how Bentwing came to be a member of the Bright family that summer; for the bluejay did not go away, but hopped about the lawn and was very tame and friendly with John Everett. One wing was slightly bent, but he could fly very well, and Mrs. Bright, who named him Bentwing, said, when he disappeared in the autumn, that she thought he had flown south for his health, which, perhaps, had never quite recovered from his visit to the nursery stovepipe.—Kilbourne Cowles, in the Churchman

Love Tested.

"I do love God," said a little girl to her papa one day when he had been talking to her about loving God.

"Perhaps you think so, Maria."

"Oh, I do, indeed I do, papa!"

"Suppose, my child, you should come to me and say, 'Dear papa, I do love you,' and then go away and disobey me, could I believe you?"

"No, papa."

"Well, dear, how can I believe you love God when I see you every day doing those things which he forbids? You know, the Bible says, 'If you love me, keep my commandments.'"

Obedience is the test of love and faith. We are to love not only with the heart and soul, but with the mind and might.

Guests at the King's Dinner.

Hervey Wood was standing in the open air in High Barnet, one of the suburbs of London, on Lord's day evening, July 13, 1902, listening to an earnest appeal that was being made by the canon of the Anglican Church, when he related the following incident that occurred eight days before. King Edward VII of England gave a dinner to tens of thousands of poor in commemoration of his coronation. All London and the country for miles around had been scoured to find the guests for the king's dinner. Royal princesses, princes, dukes, lords and ladies, officers of the army which had just returned from South Africa, waited upon the king's guests. It was a sight never to be forgotten.

Among the royal guests were an old man and his wife who had come up to partake of the king's hospitality, from one of the rural districts. It was learned that the aged couple had just managed to keep body and soul together long enough to partake of the king's dinner, after that intending to enter the poorhouse. They had sold their household effects in order to keep from starving.

Among the waiters upon the table at which the old couple sat, was a fine-looking young officer from Australia. As he helped them to food the old man whispered to his wife:

"My, ain't he like our Ned?"

The officer overheard them. Presently he came again to help them to some more food, when the old man spoke aloud to him:

"My, but you are like our Ned!"

"Indeed, am I?" said the officer.

"Yes, you are."

"Well, what is your name, and where is your Ned?"

"Oh, he went to Australia over thirty years ago, and we have not heard from him in over twenty-one years."

It was now the young officer's turn to talk, and the tears were running down his manly face as he said:

"Well, my name is Ned, and if you are Edward B—, I am your Ned's son. My father died twenty-one years ago, and I came to England to find you, and had given you up in despair. Where are you going when dinner is over?"

"To the poorhouse," replied the old man.

"Oh, no, you are not," said the young officer. "You are going with me to my hotel, and you sail with me on Saturday next for my home in Australia. Come, grandmother, give me your arm," and he took them to his hotel.

There was not a dry eye in all that vast audience as the preacher told of another Father, our heavenly Father, who sent his Son "to seek and to save the lost," to tell them of a home in Father's house, "Where they hunger no more, neither thirst any more, nor the sun lights upon them, or any heat." Of the King of kings who has prepared a great feast, and has bidden all mankind, and his Son bids every one come, for all things are ready.

Bedtime.

"Papa, what does you fink is des' the bestest, nicest fing in dis worl'?"

"Why, pet, that's easy. I think a little dimple-cheeked girl, about two years old, with eyes just like her mamma's, a lot of long tousled curls that won't stay up, dressed in a long pink-striped nightgown tied at the throat and wrists with blue ribbon, climbing up onto her papa's lap, getting her two fat arms around his neck and kissing one cheek, then the other cheek, then a good long kiss, then cuddling down in his arms to sleep—that's the nicest thing in the world."

"O papa! I des b'l'eve you means me—don't you?"

Feeding the Animals.

Litle Johnny had gazing thoughtfully at his book of animal pictures, when he suddenly called out:

"Say, pa, does it cost much to feed a lion?"

"Yes."

"How much?"

"Oh, a lot of money."

"A wolf would make a good meal for a lion, wouldn't it, pa?"

"Yes, I guess so."

"And a fox would be enough for the wolf, wouldn't it?"

"Yes, yes."

"And a fox could make a meal off a hawk, eh, pa?"

"I suppose so."

"And the hawk would be satisfied with a sparrow?"

"Of course."

"And a big spider would be a good meal for the sparrow, wouldn't it, pa?"

"Yes, yes."

"And a fly would be enough for the spider?"

"Yes."

"And a drop of molasses would be all that the fly would want, wouldn't it?"

"Oh, stop your chatter!"

"But wouldn't it, pa?"

"Yes."

"Well, pa, couldn't a man keep a lion more'n a year on a pint of molasses?"

But just at this point it was discovered that it is time for little Johnny to go to bed.—Salt Lake Herald.

Taken at His Word.

Master Walter, aged 5, had eaten the soft portions of his toast at breakfast, and piled the crusts on his plate.

"When I was a little boy," remarked his father, who sat opposite him, "I always ate the crusts of my toast."

"Did you like them?" inquired his offspring, cheerfully.

"Yes," replied the parent.

"You may have these," said Master Walter, pushing his plate across the table.—Harper's Weekly.

Union Gospel Songs

With the assistance of Singing Evangelist Leonard Daugherty and J. H. Rosecrans we have prepared a new song book that constitutes one of the best offerings we have yet made to the psalmody of the church.

It is called Union Gospel Songs because it unites in itself the best of the best old songs, as well as the most helpful and popular of the newer candidates for popular favor—234 in all; and also because it unites features making it equally valuable for regular church work as well as for the Bible school, prayer-meeting and evangelistic services.

No expense has been spared in securing copyrights of desirable music and in sending forth strongly and handsomely bound volumes.

Limp Cloth—25 cts. per copy, postpaid; $16 per 100, not prepaid.
Board—30 cts. per copy, postpaid; $20 per 100, not prepaid.
Cloth—35 cts. per copy, postpaid; $3.50 per doz. not prepaid; $25 per 100, not prepaid.

The space usually accorded a self-laudatory preface, the Editors have modestly given to the "Doxology" and "The Lord Is In His Holy Temple."

The merits of this book predict it will quickly come into widespread usefulness. We wish to accelerate this movement. Samples will be sent on application, on condition they be returned if order does not follow.

THE BATTLE-SONG OF RIGHTEOUSNESS.

By Thomas Curtis Clark.

LO, the hosts of God advancing!
See their banners forward go!
Loud they shout, in ringing accents,
As they march to meet the foe:
"Sin's last strongholds we are nearing;
Look above, the skies are clearing;
See at last His Day appearing!"—
This their cry of victory.

Fear they know not, for He leads them
In their dauntless battle-line;
Though they march through rayless darkness,
In their hearts His light doth shine.
"Forward ever!" they are singing.
"Forward, 'neath the bells a-ringing
In yon heaven, victory bringing,
Joyous, glorious victory!"

Lo, the foe comes forth to meet them!
Pride is written on each brow.
Hark, they clash! "To death or triumph!"
Shout Christ's noble warriors now.
Hand to hand the lines are meeting;
See the foe, in shame retreating!
Hear God's hosts the glad hour greeting,—
Glorious hour of victory!

His earnest plea is for the evangelization of this growing power, that it may be won away from the papacy and made truly Christian. 55 cents.

—Reason and Revelation. By Robert Milligan, formerly President of Lexington Bible College. This not only lays a durable foundation for the faith of the young men preparing for the ministry, but is equally valuable in confirming and re-establishing a faith inclined to waver amid the stress and storm of life. $2.

—The Evangelistic Note. By W. J. Dawson. The opening essay on "The Evangelistic Note" is an interesting recountal of the revolutionizing Christian experience undergone by the author, leading him to resign his London pastorate and begin the evangelistic work he has now undertaken in America. He is unconventional, direct and authoritative. $1.25.

—The Antidote to Christian Science. By James M. Gray, Dean of Moody Bible Institute. This is not a virulent attack on Christian Science—there have been too many of them. In a forbearing spirit the author tries to show where Christian Science fails as a religion. We have sold many of these and they are highly commended by our patrons. 75 cents.

—The Iowa Pulpit of the Church of Christ. These twenty-two sermons were collected and edited by J. H. Painter. There is manifested a renewed interest in the old landmarks, and this class of sermons is having a large sale. G. T. Carpenter, D. R. Dungan, J. H. Painter, G. L. Brokaw, H. U. Dale, D. R. Lucas, Charles Blanchard, J. Mad. Williams and Allen Hickey are among the contributors. $1.

—The Lamp of Sacrifice. By W. Robertson Nicoll. These are sermons preached on special occasions by the widely-known editor of "The Expositor's Bible." There are twenty-one of them. The spirit and power of sacrifice is seen running through them all. "Gethsemane the Rose Garden of God," "The Message for Midnight," "The Lamb's War with the Beast," "Aspects of the Mystical Union" are among the subjects. $1.50.

—Science and Pedagogy of Ethics By H. W. Everest. The writer, formerly Dean of the Bible College of Drake University, is also author of "The Divine Demonstration," etc. This is a text book but merits a place in every Christian library. Its general divisions are Theoretical Ethics, Practical Ethics and Pedagogical Ethics. It creates and maintains great interest in these themes of transcendent interest. $1.50.

WHAT FRIENDS ARE SAYING.

—THE CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST is growing in excellence and favor with each issue.—W. H. Newland (minister), Jamestown, Ind.

—THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is a weekly visitor in our home, and is greatly appreciated by our entire family. —Samuel Lysle, minister, Braddock, Pa.,

—Your Bible school supplies are undoubtedly the best published in our brotherhood, and the addition of Marion Stevenson to your force means much.—A. E. Mackey, Sacramento, Cal.

"I enjoyed having Brother Kenner with us. I was sorry he could not have more time. I think that ministers ought to help build up our own publishing houses by all means."—W. H. Hedges (minister), Kalamazoo, Mich.

—Permit me to speak my appreciation of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST as a religious paper. Its tone is so thoroughly life-giving, and its contents so thoroughly helpful amid life's activities.—Allan C. Smith, Columbus, Mo.

—I will be greatly pleased to send a large subscription list to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. It is our only religious exponent. We love it. THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will ever live by God's blessing.—Mrs. J. M. Martin, Los Angeles, Cal.

—"How refreshing to turn from the tainted money discussion to the columns of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST! Brother Garrison and his force deserve great praise for giving us a really religious paper."—Jas. Crutcher (minister), Higginsville, Mo.

—"The Young Folks" is liked by everybody, especially the Christian Endeavor and the Sunday-school departments. The superintendent's quarterly is the best I have ever seen. I shall soon be able to secure some subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.—J. F. Bennett, Denison, Kansas.

—I am getting old and THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is more and more to me each year. I am far from church and its blessed privileges and far from Christian friends, and I look to the weekly advent of the paper as a visit from a very dear friend. It grows broader and sweeter and more Christlike year by year.—Mrs. Nellie Kirk, Woodward, Okla.

—Enclosed find money order, for which send THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to S. D. Gordon, Madison, N. J. He is the author of the "Quiet Talk" books that I have seen advertised in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. He married my cousin. I seem to find such a oneness of spirit in his and Brother Garrison's writings, that I want Mr. Gordon to read Mr. Garrison's paper and learn something of our plea.—Mrs. Bartlett G. Dickinson, Glasgow, Ky.

—The friends of a good, clean Christian paper are very proud of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in these mud-stained times. If such irresponsible conduct continues on the part of our editors, there will be an agitation to control our Christian publications by our national conventions. The attitude of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is absolutely proper. It ought to be in the homes of the Brotherhood everywhere. We need a paper which is Christian in spirit as well as in name.—A. C. Gray, minister, Ann Arbor, Mich.

—I am trying to do some missionary work with THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. I have my neighbors read the paper and then once a month I fold four of them together and mail them to a friend in another part of the country, and ask him to have his neighbors read them. It costs me a little but what is that to the value of a soul? I have often prayed for the Christian Publishing Company. I have great faith in prayer. I am a shut-in. I often long for liberty that I might go into the thickest of the battles for Jesus, but I send THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. It has taught me the way of the Lord more perfectly.—Katie Montgomery, Wilsey, Kan.

Two Thousand Dollars a Day*

By C. A. Finch

One million and a quarter of Disciples are asked to raise $350,000 for foreign missions during 1908. What a pigmy task for a giant people! Can the foreign board be serious? Is it with boast like this that we assume the purple of our century coronal? Is this the apostolic fire that scepters a world for Christ? Shall hearts throbbing with a world message and lips trembling with sphere melody count this a task? Have mercy on my people, Lord, and teach us how to give. Strong Son of God, fighting single-handed and alone the world's first wilderness battle; beating back with one hand the pangs of hunger gnawing at thy vitals, and with the other the stones of the field clamoring to be made bread; calling in accents of tenderness to brutal brother-hating men, to hollow-eyed women walking the mocking streets, in tones that seem to come from mothers dead or absent lovers calling each to each; wading waters of baptism and suffering to fulfill all righteousness; driving in majestic wrath the cheating bargainers from temple stair; touching with thy magnetic hands the halt, the lame and blind; healing in tender mercy where passion blisters yet inflamed; treading the yeasty foam of Galilee with watchful eye upon a fisher boat, the careless sport of sea and sky; praying at midnight all alone, while human sympathy slumbered on nor watched; staggering beneath thy heavy cross, a burden more of man's ingratitude than of rough-hewn tree; dying in agony mid curses and repentant tears, far less of mangled body than from broken heart. Oh, thorn-pierced one! Teach us how to give, that we, enriched of Thee, soul millionaires, may break the fetters of the yellow stuff, that's only fit for pavement on the golden street.

Think of it, a million and a quarter of Disciples set to raise $350,000 in one year. A million and a quarter of Disciples struggling to raise $958.90 each day for three hundred and sixty-five days. A million and a quarter of Disciples straining to raise $39.954 each hour of the day. A million and a quarter of Disciples feverishly attempting to scrape together the sum of .$665 every minute; $.011 1-12 every second. The whole $350,000 raised requires that each one of the million and a quarter of Disciples shall give to the cause of missions, each day of the year, the infinitesimal sum of 7-10 of 1 cent. Should each of the one million and a quarter of Disciples give a penny each day of the year there would be given for foreign missions in twelve months the magnificent sum of $4,562,500.

A thousand dollars a day is all too little for a great people. Let us crown the glorious achievements of a hundred years of history with the spirit of a mighty liberality and raise this battle cry to the marching hosts: "Two thousand dollars a day for every day of all the days between Norfolk and Pittsburg."

*A Symposium Speech at the Norfolk Convention.

Conquering and to Conquer

By W. R. Warren

When Andrew and John had believed the world's redemption was assured. Since Pentecost the Church's growth has been only a question of more or less rapid progress. It depends entirely on the faithfulness and zeal of those who have believed. The gospel continues forever the power of God unto salvation. The human heart remains a fertile soil for the seed of divine truth. Every word of Christ describes the Kingdom as both advancing and multiplying. We are too apt to settle down to growth by additions merely. In the beginning, "The Word of God grew and multiplied."

Every church should have its mission, every preacher his Timothy, every disciple some soul whom he is showing the way of the Lord more perfectly. "Each one win one" is the divine order. All the churches of each state should be bound together in a noble confederation of multiplication. The State Missionary Society should be maintained in this spirit and fervor. The victorious progress of its work will lead to similar triumphs in the general American field. That in turn will inevitably issue in world-wide evangelization.

Conquering and to Conquer is the scriptural order for the Church of Christ. It contemplates victory all along the line. The failure of any soul or any church results not merely in loss but in death. It deadens the germ of the Gospel seed. It saps the foundation upon which the whole fortress must rest. It is not a question of a paltry dollar more or less; it is a matter of life and death! This shows the necessary bitterness of the "Curse ye Meroz!" of the Old Testament history.

Churches of Christ! Men of God! We are going into the first great battle of the year. Conquering now is to conquer again and again. Failing now is to put our great Captain to shame in the eyes of the indifferent and the enemy. To fail him is to be a Benedict Arnold. Let not Satan deceive you! To desert him is to take a place with Judas Iscariot! The call sounds. The loyal pledge themselves in the silver and gold that are his. "If ye confess me before men, I will confess you before my Father and his angels!" Make November for state missions glorious!

November and State Missions!

Current Events

Tammany's Triumph.

The elections last week were chiefly municipal, in some cases state, and were in general decided upon local issues. But sometimes municipal straws show which way the national wind is blowing. The most interesting event was in New York City, where a fusion ticket for sheriff, judges and assemblymen was badly beaten by Tammany. The fusion ticket represented the Republican party and Hearst's Independent League, but apparently did not have the wholehearted support of either, certainly not of the Republican press. Many of the Republican papers denounced the fusion as an "unholy alliance." The general opinion is that the issue of the election effectually eliminates Hearst as a factor in the political situation in New York. This may or may not be true. It shows clearly enough that he is an undesirable ally for the Republican party. The Republican votes which he frightens away are more than the Independent League votes which he can deliver in support of a fusion ticket. Tammany has nothing to fear from the combinations of the right and left wings of her enemies.

Other Elections.

Next to New York in national interest was the municipal contest in Cleveland, Ohio. Here it was Tom Johnson, supported by his own record, versus Burton, supported by the national administration, as rival candidates for mayor. Johnson won by a handsome majority. The President and Mr. Taft had both been outspoken in urging the election of Mr. Burton. The issue shows that a national administration may be highly popular as a national administration, and yet not exercise a controlling influence in a local election. The fact is, people do not greatly care to have advice from Washington in regard to their municipal affairs. Besides, Tom Johnson is immensely popular in his own town, and any one who attempts to beat him there has a large contract on his hands. Kentucky went republican in its state election, and A. E. Willson becomes governor. Markbreit, Republican, was elected mayor of Cincinnati. Whitlock, the reform mayor of Toledo, was re-elected as an independent candidate after refusing the Democratic nomination. The Good Government League in San Francisco won with the election of Dr. Taylor as mayor. Noel, elected governor of Mississippi on the Democratic ticket and a prohibition platform, says he will use every effort to secure the passage of a strict prohibition law in the state. In Salt Lake City the "American Party," an anti-Mormon organization, elected the mayor and a majority of the city council. It was charged that both the Republican and the Democratic parties were controlled by the Mormon hierarchy, and the new party, organized to fight church domination in politics, beat them both.

Uncle Joe.

Hon. Joseph G. Cannon, Speaker of the House, otherwise known as "Uncle Joe," is a candidate for the republican nomination for the presidency. His friends had urged him to place himself in the field. For a while he coyly resisted; then submitted with the genial remark: "Well, go ahead. Boys will be boys." Mr. Cannon seems to feel no sense of impropriety in referring to a nomination for the highest office in the world as though it were a sort of Halloween trick. We are a gay and frolicsome nation in some respects, but we are scarcely prepared to accept this idea that an acceptable nomination may be brought about in the course of the sowing of wild oats by the political "boys." Besides, "the boys" are not electing presidents nowadays. They elect mayors and congressmen often enough, but scarcely presidents. And a candidate would better enter upon the race in a sober spirit, like a knight watching his arms all night before the altar while he consecrates himself to his task, than by laughing, "All right, go ahead, boys."

Telegraphers' Strike.

The telegraphers' strike has been formally ended, after continuing for nearly three months. The technical victory is with the companies, for they did not make the desired concessions. The unions, however, declare that the strike has been a success, since it will make the companies more ready to grant future demands. This seems to be going rather far afield to find ground for claiming a victory, but if both parties are satisfied with the issue it ought to be considered a successful strike. Nobody loses except the public, whose business was interfered with for a few weeks. But the public doesn't count in strikes. The public is only an innocent bystander.

Why Do Men Wear Hats?

A newspaper paragraph mentions the fact that a Mr. Mead, who is a gentleman of leisure and a traveler, has not had a hat on his head for fifteen years. The writer knows at least one other man, a college professor, who practices hatlessness and enjoys it. Having met him indoors several times, we invited him to a drive. It was a crisp December day and the ground was covered with snow, but a ten-mile ride did not make him wish for a hat. He says he caught cold easily when he wore a hat, and now does not catch cold at all. Why do we wear hats, anyway? Women wear them for ornament, of course. But all men's hats are ugly. A silk hat would be supremely ridiculous if it were not so highly respectable, and the common "derby" is the final triumph of the inartistic as applied to dress. Why do we leave the face unprotected and cover the part of the head which has a natural covering of its own? They certainly are not needed as a protection against the cold, for with a little use any man who has any hair can dispense with a hat in winter without inconvenience. There is more reason perhaps for wearing the right sort of hat as a shade during the hottest hours of the hottest days of summer. But in general the hat merely performs a function which the hair would perform well enough if it had a chance. The foxes were too wise to allow the tailless fox to set a fashion. Are we men the victims of a conspiracy on the part of the bald, who make a fashion for us out of what is a necessity for them?

An Argument of a "Saint."

One of the most conscienceless and baseless attacks we have ever seen on the teaching of a good and great man, who has gone to his reward, is contained in "The Saints' Herald," a little sheet published at Lamoni, Iowa, by the Latter Day Saints, a copy of which a friend in Iowa has sent us, calling attention to its base misrepresentation. The article is entitled "Polygamy Sanctioned by a Popular Christian or Disciple Editor." The excuse for this false charge is contained in the following extract from some comments which appeared in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of March 30, 1893, presumably from the pen of the lamented B. W. Johnson. Referring to traces of polygamous marriages reaching down to the Apostolic period, found in the Epistles, the comment says:

> The gospel took men as it found them, and told them to go and sin no more. We not only find traces of these things in the epistles, but even of a man having more than one wife. It seems to have been the inspired policy to exercise the greatest possible toleration. When a man with two wives was converted he was not required to wrong one by putting her away, but at the same time the disapproval of the church was placed on his marriage relations by making him ineligible to office in the church.

And this is called "sanctioning polygamous marriages" by a "Latter Day Saint!" Of course, then, Jesus, who told the accused woman to "go and sin no more," could, by the same logic, be convicted of approving of adultery! When a "saint" has to resort to that species of argument to maintain his sainthood, he needs to be told that the term saint means holy, and that holy men do not slander the living, much less the dead.

Commercial wireless telegraphy across the Atlantic began on October 17. The rate of ten cents a word is less than half of the charge which the cable companies have been asking. On the first day ten thousand words were transmitted.

The S. S. "Lusitania," in its last trip across the Atlantic, cut down its own previous record, making the voyage from Queenstown to Sandy Hook in four days, eighteen hours and a few minutes.

Editorial

A Positive Creed With Some Negations.

Dear Brother Garrison: In The Christian-Evangelist of August 1 you have the most beautiful expression of my ideal of the work of the ministry that I have ever seen. It is this: "What the world needs is help. The keynote of Christianity is service. Christ came not to be ministered unto but to minister. He who is in closest sympathy with Christ, and has most of his spirit, and shares most largely in his life, is best equipped to minister to the needs of our sinning and suffering race."

When I read that, I thought sadly of the large number of young men whom I know, who are either being driven from the ministry, or whose life is being made almost unbearable in it, whose ideal and whose life are all that you express. In a later issue you comment on that very situation among us as a brotherhood, and I can not but feel how pitiful it is that so many with hearts longing to serve their fellow-men in this beautiful service are forced to the consideration that they are not welcome, simply because they can not believe the (to them) unthinkable tenets of a by-gone age.

What do you think of the situation in the religious world when a great brotherhood, claiming to have no creed but Christ, can look calmly on while a noble man, who has given his life as few in the world have given it, openly yet modestly, to the world's redemption, is compelled to make the assertion that no charge of immorality or villainy could injure him with the brotherhood so much as the charge that he was not true to certain theological tenets held by said brotherhood? And these tenets did not involve disloyalty to, or unfaith in, Christ. In other words, what has Jesus done for his church in nearly twenty centuries when a so-called religious journal can injure a man more by questioning his "soundness" in theology than by slandering his moral character? All he can do, certainly, until their mental obliquity is transformed.

Supposing I were to state my position as follows, which would be fairly representative of a multitude of others I have in mind: I believe in the Fatherhood of God and his infinite love to his children; his absolute justice and the personal responsibility of all men to conform their lives to the highest they possess of the knowledge of his truth; the supreme fact of the revelation of his nature and character in the historical person of Jesus; the Bible as being the message of his love and the guide of human conduct; the Holy Spirit as the presence of God in the lives of his people; a personal acceptance of Jesus as leader and Lord; the church as the association of his followers for growth in grace and missionary work; the plea of the Disciples for the unity of all his followers that the world might believe. Then in addition, though it is obviously contained in the above, if I hold the ideal of service you expressed and conform my life to it, to the best of my ability is there a welcome place for me as a preacher in the average church among the Disciples of Christ?

On the other hand, suppose I say to the creed lately formulated by the editor of the "Christian Standard" for the benefit of A. McLean. I do not believe in the Mosaic authorship of the Pentateuch, as we have it; I do not believe in the swallowing and disgorging of Jonah by a fish; I do not believe in the personality of the devil as the embodiment of evil; I do not believe in everlasting hell fire as commonly understood; I do not believe in a catechism, either longer or shorter, for missionaries; will you give me your candid opinion what proportion of churches among the Disciples would give me a call, in spite of my positive faith, if it were submitted to the congregation for approval?

Ernest E. Crawford.

The foregoing raises a question which The Christian-Evangelist has recently discussed on its editorial pages. It is a question which, in its practical bearings, rises to the rank of first importance in connection with our plea for unity. We desire, therefore, to make it the occasion of saying a few other things which we feel that the good of our cause demands.

1. Referring to the question as to what proportion of our churches would give our brother a call, in view of his positive faith and in spite of his negations, we are inclined to think much would depend upon the use which he would make of his negations. If they should occupy a considerable space in his sermons, his ministry would probably not be acceptable in any considerable number of churches. On the other hand, we doubt if one who, taking the opposite side of these questions, should devote much of his time in preaching to proving his views, would be much more acceptable to his auditors. Brethren do not believe that these are profitable topics for the pulpit, unless on very exceptional occasions. We are sure that any minister possessing the genuine Christian character and utter sincerity of our correspondent, who would, in his ministry, give due emphasis to the "positive faith" which he describes, would meet with acceptance in any church among us of average intelligence and proper training. To make either an affirmative or a negative view of the Mosaic authorship of the Pentateuch in its present literary form, or the historicity of the book of Jonah, or the personality of the devil, when these views are held as personal opinions, a bar to fellowship or to one's vocation as a minister of the gospel, would be an utter perversion of the very position for which we have always contended as a religious movement. But, what is more important, we believe it to be an utter violation of the teaching and spirit of Jesus Christ who, we are sure, would welcome to his service any honest believer in him, regardless of his opinion of the questions mentioned.

2. In making the foregoing statement, however, we feel that it should be supplemented by another which we believe to be equally true and important. The times demand a positive faith, an aggressive faith. The minister who is to accomplish very much good for God and for humanity must feel his feet firmly planted on the great rock-truths of the gospel—the eternal verities of religion. He must have such a conception of human need, of sin, with all its direful consequences; such compassion for man, and such appreciation of Christ's power to save, as that he will have little time or disposition, when he faces dying men and women from his pulpit, to deal with questions of doubtful disputation. He will seek, rather, to bring to bear on his congregation the mighty motives of the gospel with its warnings, its promises and its deep consolations. We are compelled to believe that there are ministers, though very few in number, we trust, who bring to the front in their preaching, their doubts and negations, and whose preaching lacks the dynamic quality which convicts men of sin, which builds them up in faith, and which promotes the spiritual life of the hearers. If such men find themselves out of demand in the ministry, it is far less because of opinions which they may hold contrary to those generally accepted, than because of the lack of a positive faith and a positive message which alone can supply the intellectual needs and the heart-hunger of the people. We are glad to believe, from what we know, that our brother whose question we are trying to answer, does not belong to the class of preachers just described.

3. The final thing we wish to say in this connection is that there is always need for charity, both on the part of congregations towards ministers, and on the part of ministers toward the churches. Suppose a young minister does give rather too much prominence to views that are not shared largely by the church. If he be borne with, his sense of proportion will almost certainly be improved, and the new things which seem to him very important, will have less relative value in his mind, as he grows into a larger apprehension of the great fundamentals of Christian faith, and has had more experience in testing the power of certain truths on the lives of the people to whom he is preaching. Every young apprentice at preaching ought to have an opportunity of making some mistakes without utterly sacrificing his usefulness in the ministry, and a wise, tolerant church will see that he has such a chance. Preachers, too, must be patient with their churches. Perhaps few of their members, if any, have had any special theological training. They are not experts on difficult questions of theology and criticism. If they fail to appreciate some of the sermons, perhaps it is because these sermons were not well adapted to their needs. Let them try again, and put more of Jesus Christ and of his saving power and grace into their preaching, and see if that will not bring an answering response. "Forbearing one another in love" is a most excellent motto to be used between ministers and their congregations.

In a word, may we not say that the solution of this and of all kindred problems is for preachers and churches to get into closer touch with the personal and ever-present Christ, and to think more of their personal relationship to him and their obligations to him, and to each other, and to lay far less stress upon doctrinal abstractions which gender strife rather than minister to man's spiritual needs?

The Anti-Whisky Wave.

A special to "The Post-Dispatch" from Chicago on the anti-whisky wave that is sweeping over the whole nation is likely to send a shiver down the spinal column of the liquor traffic. This two-column dispatch says that "predictions are freely made that if the prohibition of the liquor traffic does not become a national political issue within a few short years, it will be because the issue itself will have been eliminated, legislation rendering the manufacture and sale of liquor impossible." The dispatch goes on to say that "the temperance movement is sweeping the country in an irresistible wave, and soon, it is asserted, no whisky will be sold in the United States, except in the larger cities. The trend is toward enforced abstinence and the makers of liquor are plainly alarmed. The prohibition party does not poll a large vote, but 33,600,000 Americans live in prohibition territory."

The article then goes on to enumerate the number of "dry" counties in the various states of the Union. Only a few of the facts mentioned can here be given. More than half the people in Kentucky live in prohibition territory. Two-thirds of the population of Arkansas also live under local option. Florida has thirty-seven dry counties out of forty-five. Illinois has probably 600 dry towns. Georgia, Kansas, Maine and Oklahoma within a few days, have prohibition. Maine, without a dollar of revenue from the saloon, has more schools to every 1,000 of her people, and more teachers in proportion to her school population than any other of the forty-five states. North Dakota has been under prohibition since 1899. Nearly half the counties of Missouri have voted the saloon out, whereas there were only three dry counties in 1905. In Tennessee the saloons have been excluded from all but three municipalities. Two-thirds of Texas is dry.

And so everywhere, in every part of the United States, the temperance sentiment is advancing and the war against the saloon goes vigorously on. The reasons which underlie this movement are such as to give real alarm to those who make their living by means of the liquor traffic. Among these reasons the following may be mentioned: (1) Systematic education in the schools as to the nature and effect of alcohol on the human system. (2) The continued agitation of the subject by various temperance organizations. (3) The nonpartisan policy of the anti-saloon league is drawing many to the fight against the saloon, who are not party prohibitionists. (4) The attitude of many of the great industrial interests, as the railroads, towards employes, requiring nonuse of intoxicants. (5) Recent court decisions of far-reaching importance pronouncing against the constitutionality of saloon license. And (6) finally, the continual indictment of the traffic by the church.

It is not surprising that with all these forces working against the saloon, and with its evil consequences filling the columns of our daily papers, there should be a rising tide of moral sentiment against it, which is finding expression at the ballot box. We are only in the midst of the conflict, and there is no sign of a truce in this war of extermination against this deadly foe to God and man.

New Mexico Convention.

The first convention of the Christian churches in New Mexico was held in Las Vegas, October 31-November 3. It resulted in the organization of the New Mexico Christian Missionary Convention and the appointment of Frederick F. Grim as corresponding secretary. The office of the board is located at Las Vegas. Its officers are: President, W. E. Garrison; vice-president, E. A. Child; secretary, B. S. Gowen, treasurer, W. S. Bullard. The other members are C. C. Hill, of Roswell, Mr. Cheatham, of Las Vegas, and Mr. Casper, of Roswell.

The convention was, as expected, small in numbers. There are but few organized churches in the territory, and but one (that at Roswell) which could be called in any sense a strong church. The great distances, the circuitous railway routes and the four-cent-a-mile rate which is prevalent in this region made it hard for the brethren to attend. Brother Hill's journey from Roswell to the convention and return required nearly twelve hundred miles of travel. How would the brethren in Chicago like to attend a state convention in Sioux Falls, S. D., or those at Indianapolis one at Charleston, S. C.? The distance would be about the same.

Although there are but few churches in the territory, there are many groups of Disciples, especially in the newer communities, where churches can readily be organized. Reports were received concerning not less than twenty such places. The population of New Mexico is increasing with great rapidity, especially in the eastern part, where the vast cattle range is being broken up into farms. Sixty-seven new postoffices have been established in New Mexico in the last ten months. Most of these represent the centers of new agricultural communities which have been settled by families from Oklahoma, Kansas, Missouri, Illinois and Iowa. Nearly every such community has a group of Disciples which can form the nucleus for a church. For the present, the corresponding secretary will work chiefly among these communities, organizing churches, grouping them into circuits where necessary, and locating pastors.

The program and the councils of the convention were much strengthened by the presence and participation of J. C. Mason, of Texas, Leonard G. Thompson, of Colorado, and George B. Ranshaw, of Cincinnati.

A Great Church Building.

One of the noblest church edifices, whether considered from the point of view of architectural symmetry and beauty or from that of a religious corporation which is planning a great work for the kingdom of God, which can be found in the city of St. Louis or, perhaps, anywhere else in the West, is the great building now being erected and nearing completion by the Union Avenue Christian Church of this city on Union and Von Versen avenues, Dr. J. M. Philputt, pastor. It has been constructed with a view of being an ideal workshop for a church which has an ambition and aim to serve, not only the city in which it is located, but the great brotherhood of which it is a part, and to make its influence felt throughout the world. It was felt by the leaders in this church that there should be in St. Louis—one of the great centers of the brotherhood—a church building that would worthily represent the cause we plead, and serve to accommodate the needs of the brotherhood not only of the state but of the nation, when it should choose to meet in our city. Therefore, this noble church building was erected, not for to-day but for to-morrow as well, and not simply to meet the needs of one local church, but to serve the brotherhood with which it is glad to be identified.

As stated in an advertisement which will be found elsewhere, the church has had issued $90,000 in 20-year, 5 per cent gold bonds, $30,000 of which are offered to outside investors in denominations of $100 and $500. Those having money in savings banks and other institutions will find this as safe an investment as can be found anywhere, and at the same time they will be helping forward a great church enterprise which will mean much for our cause not only in St. Louis, but throughout the country. An indication of the spirit of this church was seen in the recent action of its official board in resolving not to withhold anything from its missionary offerings [it is now supporting three living links] because of the extraordinary demands made upon it in carrying forward to completion this great building enterprise. We bespeak the favorable consideration of our readers to the proposition contained in the advertisement of this church, which will be found on another page.

Prof. J. W. McGarvey, of the Bible College of Kentucky University, has received a call from a colored church in Hannibal, Mo. True, the colored brethren desire to know his "charges" before closing the contract, but, these being satisfactory, there is every evidence that the call will be extended. In case the professor is, for any reason, unable to accept the call he is asked to name "another good colored brother" with whom they can correspond! Brother McGarvey was compelled to decline the "flattering call" on account of existing engagements, and writes his brethren in black to that effect, and regrets his inability to even furnish the name of "another good colored brother!" Who will deny that our venerable professor of Biblical Criticism has the saving grace of humor?

Editor's Easy Chair.

In these days of progress in the art of photography, if one does not care to be at the expense and inconvenience of traveling to see the world, he can have the world brought to his door. The Easy Chair spent two hours in seeing the sights in and about London, on a recent afternoon. While we have spent weeks in that great world-metropolis, we must confess we never saw so much of the city as we did in this two hours' visit under the direction of the globe-trotter, E. Burton Holmes, in his travelogue. We were permitted to look upon the English channel in a storm, upon England's great battleship, the "Dreadnaught," during target practice, to look down upon the Thames spanned by its ancient bridges, upon Cleopatra's Needle, upon the Tower, St. Paul's, Westminster Abbey, the Houses of Parliament, London Bank, Trafalgar Square, the British Museum, Crystal Palace, a steeplechase, and many ancient and historic landmarks of the city that has existed for two thousand years. The spirit of improvement has seized the ancient city and many of its streets and buildings are being modernized. We were permitted even to have a close view of the present King and Queen of England, getting in and out of their royal carriage, and bowing to the applauding populace. One of the pleasantest scenes, however, was to see all England out at play, attending the boat races higher up on the Thames where the historic stream is devoted to pleasure. In all the great crowds of people there were manifest the utmost order and decorum characteristic of the English people. One feels, after a two hours' experience of this kind, in which, by means of moving pictures, he has been permitted to see the life and activities of the world's greatest city, that the world has indeed been passing by his door, and that he has been taken out of himself and his local surroundings into new scenes and associations, and that his range of vision has been widened and his human sympathies enlarged.

Such a visit as we have just described, however, in which the eye has been the chief medium of receiving information, should be supplemented by reading the history of places and peoples which we have been permitted to see. Herein lies the value of books of history which tell us of the struggles through which different nations and peoples have come to be what they are to-day. The lengthening nights which are now upon us afford opportunity for more reading, and it is especially important for our younger readers that some good historical books be included in those they buy or take from the library. There is no better teacher than history, and certainly none is better calculated to take the conceit out of us and keep us humble. What any one of us can contribute to the life of the world is infinitesimally small as compared with what we have inherited from those who have gone before us. Few of us realize our indebtedness to the past. When you meet with a man who thinks all the past centuries were wasted, and all the generations of men who have toiled and struggled and died in these bygone centuries, were but children as compared with the giants of the present, you may know he has not read history, and has no adequate conception of the mighty intellectual and moral achievements which have been wrought by the men of the past, the benefits of whose labors we share to-day. The man who has the clearest understanding of what has been achieved by those who preceded him, is most likely, other things being equal, to contribute something permanent to the sum total of human happiness and wellbeing.

What is humanity, after all, but a vast procession moving across the narrow isthmus of time between two vast eternities? Those at the head of the procession, who first come into view on the stage of human life, play their several parts, cherish their little ambitions, dream their fond dreams and pass off the stage unto the unseen world, to be followed by others who have much the same experiences and in turn pass on from mortal view. It is due to each generation that it shall inherit from those who have gone before something that adds to the dignity and happiness of human life. It is also an obligation of each generation that it add something to the growing knowledge of the world and to the advancing ideals of life. If this brief life in the body be but the prelude to an endless life that lies beyond, and if the character of that life beyond is determined by the direction of the life that now is, then how full of meaning and of vast issues are these fleeting days which make up our earthly lives! Of all the myriads who have lived in the past, how few are the names which have come down to us! What matters a towering shaft or gilded mausolem in some cemetery of the dead? These are vain efforts to perpetuate one's name and memory. Those whose names shine out on the pages of history, like stars in the night, were the men and women who accomplished something to benefit the world. Those who, forgetful of self, have sought to enrich the life of mankind—these only live in the affectionate remembrance of those who come after them. The brightest name in all the constellation of the world's benefactors is the name of One who, "though he was rich, yet for our sakes became poor, that we through his poverty might become rich." To share in that life and to have fellowship with his great purpose and plans, is to gain the immortality for which our hearts long.

Last week's prayer-meeting topic, "Conscience as Related to Happiness," proved to be very suggestive and profitable in a great prayer-meeting which the Easy Chair had the privilege of attending. It was developed, however, that there still persist some misconceptions about the nature and office of conscience. "It is not a guide," said one, "because Paul acted in all good conscience while he was persecuting the church of God." And yet what could Saul do but persecute the church of God, as long as he believed it to be a pernicious heresy, destructive of true religion? Was he not a vastly better man persecuting Jesus when he believed Jesus to be opposed to God, than he would have been professing discipleship to him? Every man is bound to be true to his conscience or he is no true man. Conscience, as we now come to understand it, is not a separate and distinct faculty of the mind, but it is the whole man acting on moral questions. It is one's moral judgment formed according to the best light which he has. It is the voice of God speaking through the moral nature of man. The purer our hearts are, and the fuller our knowledge is of God and of his will, the clearer and more unmistakable is the voice of God speaking through conscience on all questions of duty. When one, acting under the promptings of material interests, or the solicitations of appetite or passion, does that for which his conscience rebukes him, he has the most direct evidence of God's dealing with him and seeking to save him. One need not go back nineteen centuries to find proof of a living God that actually manifests his presence with men, but needs only to look into his own soul to find that God approves, when he does what he believes to be right and reproves when he does what he knows to be wrong.

The twofold work of the Church may be stated in the language of the prophet as "lengthening the cords and strengthening the stakes." By these means the church is enabled to "enlarge the borders of her habitation." Our own religious movement has done more lengthening of cords than it has strengthening of stakes. Emphasis should be placed, for a time at least, upon the latter work without neglecting the former. We strengthen our stakes by furnishing preachers for all our churches, enlarging our Sunday-schools and supplying them with competent teachers, organizing our local churches for more effective work in every department, and building up the membership in faith and hope and love; in a word, in deepening the spiritual life of our members and training them in Christian service. Both in the business world, and in the religious world, but especially in our part of the religious world, emphasis should be placed just now upon strengthening the stakes rather than on lengthening the cords, until a period of greater stability is reached, and a safe equilibrium has been established between the strength of stakes and the length of cords.

The Depression of Ideals

By William Durban

There is no doubt whatever that the philosophy of the age we live in is fast running to seed. This fact is not to be complained of in any accent of bitter mystification, for it simply belongs to the making of history. There is a time in each era when efflorescence is witnessed. At such a juncture the most beautiful thoughts of the choicest men and women flower out. The world looks on with wondering delight at the outburst of loveliness in the flower garden of human intellectualism. Such a development was seen throughout Italy in the days of the Renaissance, when Dante, Ariosto, Tasso and Boccaccio constituted the Golden Age of Southern literature. But decadence ensued. Italian thought ran to seed. Petrarch and Metastasio could not arrest the progress of the seeding period. Thought matured and men lost the freshness of intellect which bedewed with such sparkling grace the prospect on which we still look back with constant admiration.

The same process is ever repeated. The German mind burst forth with glorious brilliancy when the nation was renewing its consciousness of strength after the Forty Years' War. Schiller, Goethe, Herder and Leibnitz immortalized the youth of Teutonism, and to the song of its poets music almost celestial was set in accompaniment by the young master-musicians of the world—for these have had no equal—Mozart, Haydn, Beethoven, Bach and Handel. I repeat, in this case also the efflorescence ran to seed, and the modern poetry of Germany is mediocre, the philosophy is flat and heavy, the mind of the nation is beery, and its music contains no hint of inspiration. How easy, if it were needful to run through the gamut of nationality, it would be to trace the same process of development in the intellectualism of France, of Spain, and of the Scandinavian peoples. Each has had its morning of youth, its afternoon of maturity, its evening of decadence. But I come to my own British community. It is a curious fact, not sufficiently taken into account, although it is a keynote to Anglo-Saxon progress, that in every other country in Christendom the Great Reformation came after the great Renaissance, while in the solitary case of the British people the order was reversed.

It is an unspeakable blessing to the Anglo-Saxon race that this was the case—that for them, by some mysterious dispensation of Divine Providence, it was ordained that the Reformation should precede the Renaissance. In Austria, France, Italy, Spain, the revival of learning was the dawn of a new and wonderful civilization; but it was unsanctified, and no benediction of the pure dew of righteousness bathed the brow of that morning. Then, when the Reformation followed, it had to do battle with the old papalized-paganism which had been perpetuated through the thousand years commonly styled by historians the Dark Ages. Germany might seem to be an exception, but it was only so in part, for the whole of South Germany was rapidly conquered by that celebrated and most melancholy reaction, the Counter Reformation. That is why beautiful Bavaria is today one of the most papal countries in the world, purely German though it is. All the southern half of Germany had been flooded by the intellectualism of the Renaissance, before Martin Luther burst out with the new spiritual light which illuminated Northern Germany and flashed across to Britain. Secular learning has done very little for England. The revival of letters was only feebly felt across the English Channel.

Now, my kind reader, please consider the important consequence which resulted from the processes I have thus indicated. The glory-time of Anglo-Saxon thought was the period when the national mind was steeped in double-dyed influences, secular and sacred, of the noblest order, and the greatest power to elevate and enrich. The Reformation had made England good before the Renaissance came to make her great. And great and good men sprang up side by side in the wonderful Elizabethan epoch. It has been truly said that Queen Elizabeth showed her greatness as a woman by her faculty for gathering about her a galaxy of great men. They were good men, too, of whom any nation might be proud, and their names live stainless in history with her own in the most wonderful scroll that any nation can show since the world began. It was immediately after that epoch that the Golden Age of English literature set in. Then out of the soil in which the good seed had been sown sprang the intellect of Spenser, Milton and Shakespeare. Puritanism had sanctified the national mind. Protestantism had done its work.

Generations have come and gone. Many and great changes have ensued. The nation has sent forth offshoots to every part of the earth. England has become the Mother of Empires. America is the oldest of her daughters. Colonies are her other daughter nations. For every nationality that is in formation there must be the springtime of seed sowing, the summer of efflorescence, and the season of matured popular mind. But from time to time upheavals of discontent and fermentations of restlessness indicate variety and activity of thought and feeling. In the Anglo-Saxon world at this very juncture one of these periodical agitations is violently felt. London is its focus. A great discussion is in course into which ministers, statesmen, politicians, philosophers and intellectual citizens of many grades are plunging. The air is filled with the echoes of a huge controversy which is bewilderingly mixed. I have never heard anything like it and I am wondering what is to be the outcome. The newspaper columns are devoted on a great scale to this extraordinary debate, which is religious, economic, industrial, political and sociological. It is about Socialism, about Christianity, about the rights of man, still more about the rights of women, even more about the rights of children, the rights of the poor, etc., etc. I say that the mixture is distracting. How far this is the case may be illustrated by this remarkable fact, that a few hours before this writing the Rev. R. J. Campbell was addressing, with the greatest eloquence he ever exhibited, an audience of 4,000 people at the Alexandra Palace in North London. This great oration was purely on Socialism. The famous pastor of the City Temple now proclaims himself to be a determined Socialist, and he is no mere blatant demagog. He takes precisely the same ground adopted for some years past by Canon Scott Holland, of St. Paul's Cathedral, the noted leader of the growing ring of the Christian Socialists in the Anglican Church. Mr. Campbell seems to be gradually breaking off from intercourse with his brother Free Church ministers, excepting, of course, those who definitely side with him. He is mixing things furiously. For his Socialism is appended to his manifesto of rebellion against orthodoxy. Now, Canon Holland and other Christian Socialists have avowedly sought to save orthodoxy and to interest the masses in it by their advocacy of Socialism. But Mr. Campbell first startled the world by demanding an entire restatement of theology, and then delivered his next thunderclap in the shape of an overture in socialistic accents to those very working classes against whom he launched his famous article in the "National Review."

Dr. Clifford and Mr. Silvester Horne have just sent forth indignant protests against some recent utterances from the pulpit by Mr. Campbell, amongst which was a declaration that the "Nonconformist conscience is the Pharisaic conscience." I myself happened to hear the sermon in the City Temple in which this utterance was made. Only a genius could have preached such a discourse, but the effect has been to create immense disturbance. Dr. Clifford has pleaded for charity and toleration to be extended toward the brilliant but erratic successor to Dr. Parker, but even he is now losing patience. Moreover, so excellent a judge of public feeling as Dr. Sinclair, the famous Archdeacon of London, has, in an eloquent address at the Church Congress, emphatically denied that there is what Mr. Campbell calls a universal demand for a restatement of the Gospel. I am bound to say, as I dispassionately survey the prospect, that I have never perceived any such demands. I never heard from any quarter any wish for any restatement. And my conviction is that, however many restatements might be sent forth, these would exercise no effect whatever on the multitudinous minds which love sin rather than the Gospel, and which will reject the demands of righteousness in any form. The great danger of nations at this hour is the tendency to the lowering of ideals.

The Call for Better Houses of Worship

Extract from Address delivered at the National Convention

By B. A. Abbott,
Of Baltimore.

The Church Extension Board is helping to meet the needs of our work by fostering a better church architecture. It is helping to educate us in one of the fine arts which has always been allied in a special way with religion. It is no extravagance to say that many of our church houses have been a hindrance rather than a help to our plea. We can not offend the taste and run counter to every law of grace and sentiment of beauty and hope to win the attention of the people. Architecture is a fine art It belongs to culture and prosperity. It is the revelation of a people. It is the way they assert their rights to a permanent existence and their claims to consideration as factors in life. In architecture, strength and beauty are wed to adorn life. The aesthetic, the moral, the spiritual and the practical are united in men's dreams and men build their dreams not into air castles but into castles of wood, brick, iron, stone and granite. America is emerging from the raw age and the touch of refinement rests beautifully upon many things. It will still grow more and more, for Americans have a passion for education, and education is simply the harmonious growth of the whole nature in the right direction. Now to erect mean houses—that are simply halls and lyceums—in the midst of a civilization which lavishes money on adornment and taste even in commercial buildings, is to bring hurt upon the estimation in which people hold Christianity and to hinder the progress of the primitive faith in an age which sorely needs it to throw light on our knotty, vexed, perplexing social and commercial problems. We should build houses that will command respect and awaken a religious emotion when men look upon them.

The Church House, a Vessel of the Sublimest Religious Ideas.

A church is a tabernacle, a sanctuary and a meeting-house. As a tabernacle, it is the place of the manifestation of the Presence of God; as a sanctuary, it is the holy place where the ordinances of religion are observed and the bread of God's word broken to the hungry of heart; as a meeting-house, it is dedicated to the cultivation of brotherhood and the purifying of human love. There can be no house too rich in adornment nor majestic in strength to symbolize such ideas as these. It is doubtless easy to criticise fine houses but they must be pleasing to God, the Great Architect, who has builded worlds of such massive strength and adorned them with a beauty which wakes the soul to worship and to joy. God has written his autograph in the delicate tints of the tiniest flower, certified the divinity of the aesthetic faculty in the glory of sunrise and sunset, called us to attempt the expression of the spiritual in a magnificent way by rearing the mountains and set us the pattern of music in the many voices and endless range of tones in that great musical instrument, the ocean. No one can look upon a sunset and call consciousness to register his emotions without knowing that colored windows may write the deathless story of the life of the Master upon his heart with the golden pen dipped in the fountain of the rainbow in a manner that may wake him to the ecstacy of adoration as nothing else can. The spoken idea, clear out as a diamond, must always be the supreme way of divine revelation, but it is also true that many souls find God best in the rapture of pure emotion and that church alone reckons well which takes full account of both these truths. Beauty is the garment of God and it is profane to imagine him wearing any other; therefore, the prayer upon the lips of him who builds a house to dedicate to God should ever be "Let the beauty of the Lord, our God, be upon us." If Church Extension stimulates us to build more houses and better houses and more beautiful houses, and houses richer in aesthetic adornment, where window and door, pulpit and pew, baptistry and communion table, and the mystical blending of lights and shadows combine to hush us into a deeper reverence, till we utter softly "This is none other than the house of God, and this is the gate of heaven," then Church Extension will have paid for itself a thousand times over.

Church Extension—A Business Enterprise and More.

It will be a sad blunder if we treat Church Extension simply as a business enterprise in the heart of a religious movement. Every house that shelters a true church of God is a sacrament to the community. It stands a silent but unfailing witness of God's presence in the world. It is the one house that belongs to everybody. It is a religious symbol and it reduces whole communities into one family. The hardest question that confronts the church to-day is, whether our civilization shall be material or spiritual. The temptation in the wilderness still is "Command that these stones be made bread," but the church must say "Man shall not live by bread alone." It is for the church to determine whether civilization shall be a head of gold and a body of silver going on feet of clay, or whether it shall stand on fine brass wrought in the furnace of God. Perhaps one of the ways in which we may help to deliver our age from the materialism and skepticism which too often beset us is through a more noble church architecture. The church stands in the dark places where men stumble and points them to the bright and morning star.

One of the beautiful old legends that bears so much of thought and dream to us out of the best thinking of the past, is the legend of the quest for the Holy Grail. It was the cup out of which the Master supped at the institution of the Lord's Supper. Tradition has declared that Joseph of Arimathea brought it to the British Isles. Valorous and stainless knights of every Christian land rode forth, searching for it everywhere. The search became a consuming passion and men left their lands, their kin, their own loves and went away to find this hallowed cup. The search was in vain in the outward form but it threw a radiance of religious sentiment over all hearts and bloomed in many of the most beautiful ideals in English life. Deep under the quest for the Holy Grail was the passion for God. And though never realized in form, it is realized in essence in every true house of worship, for there Christ comes into the soul and sups with it and the soul sups with the Christ. It is the place where the soul is delivered from the winter of worldliness and wooed into the full blown flower of spiritual experience by the summer atmosphere of the presence of God.

> "For here the habit of the soul
> Feels less the outer world's control;
> And by the silence multiplied
> By these still forms on every side
> The world that time and sense have known > Falls off and leaves us God alone."

Church Extension's Good Account of Its Stewardship.

The sum of my message then, is this: Because its account of its stewardship is abundantly satisfactory, laying at your feet to-day the magnificent permanent fund of $643,906.84, and the large income last year of $173,842.00; because it has managed our money wisely, immortalized, vitalized and spiritualized it; because it equips weak congregations for performing their divine function in the community; because it stimulates us to build better houses of worship and lifts our hearts up in the fine aims and ideals of spiritual life, Church Extension holds a capital place amongst the forces tending to the permanency and progress of our plea and it deserves our faith, our love, and our liberal gifts, so that when our movement touches the century mark our Church Extension fund will have reached the million dollar mark.

The Convention as Interpreted by a Young Minister

An Address to the Church at Fulton, Mo.

By W. A. FITE

These great annual conventions of our people—not of the clergy, but great mass meetings for the membership—serve as a mighty unifying force to a great religious people which are held together by no other authority except the authority of Christ, and no other power except the power of truth and love. These annual conventions find their type in the three great annual feasts of the Jews—the Passover, Pentecost and the feast of tabernacles. These feasts more than anything else unified the Jewish nation, made them of the same spirit, filled them with the same purpose, and cemented their hearts in a common fellowship. So these annual meetings of ours have a similar effect upon our brotherhood. We get much the same perspective; our distorted views of truth are corrected, our differences harmonized, our aims and purposes made one.

I wish I could precipitate this morning the spirit, power and fellowship of the convention in this message and thrill your hearts as mine has been thrilled. I wish I could concentrate the good things expressed at that convention and give them to you in a flood of potent eloquence. As it is impossible to preserve the flashes of a sparkling diamond, which must be seen in order to be appreciated, so it is impossible to crystallize the greatness of the convention; and for one to appreciate it he must have been there to have seen and heard for himself.

It is not my purpose this morning to give a report of the convention. You can get that from the papers, from those who are experts in reportorial work. It is my purpose to bring to you the spirit of the convention. To give you a character sketch of it, to portray its individuality, not to give you the facts of the convention, but rather the significance of these facts. Three words seem to me to characterize the spirit of the convention. They are—Service, Liberty, Fraternity.

I. Service.

Well might the convention have adopted the motto of the Black Prince, "I serve." For everywhere it seemed to be written, "We are here not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give our time, our talents and our money for the ransoming of many." The convention seemed to be saying, "Jesus has died for the world, and now we propose to live for it." "He gave his life up in death for us; we purpose to give our lives up in service for him!" "Souls to save and serve, kingdom of God to extend, gospel to preach more extensively, more fully, more sympathetically, more affectionately," were spelled in mystic letters in all its sessions. If we were on the Mount of Transfiguration it was that we might go from its heights into the valley of service to cast out the demons of sin and to heal the broken-hearted. The reports of the various societies showed that their aims had been realized for the past year; these reports and the great victories of the closing year thrilled every heart with joy, but no note of self-satisfaction was struck. These were an incentive and an earnest of greater results for the future. The convention said we do not want generous offerings to our various missionary enterprises that we may make glowing reports and be thrilled with unpardonable pride, but that we may employ more men to send into the spiritual harvest field already overripe and waiting for the Master's reapers. Jesus Christ is King and his kingdom must be over all. His imperialism is the imperialism of love, but it must be world-wide. His is a universal dominion, and until his throne is set up in every heart and his scepter rules every will by the omnipotent power of truth, love and grace, and until he has conquered not only sin but the domains of art, science, lierature, government, law, industry and has made all the glories of the world pay tribute to his divine greatness, our work as his followers is not done. Our chief business is to hear and heed his marching orders, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," that his divine kingship may be complete.

What greater purpose could animate a gathering than "Service, service, service," the service which brings salvation and eternal life, beautiful, princely, Christly service. Met, not to attend to our own business, but the business of the King; not to discuss doctrine, but to plan to preach the gospel; not to learn how to make money, but rather to spend it, and by divine alchemy transmute money into manhood and turn the streams of silver into salvation.

Can not we as a church learn anew this lesson of service, for I am persuaded that many of us have already learned it, but we need it enforced. We are saved to serve. Let these brains, and these voices, and these pocketbooks of ours be not ours, but at the service of our fellows that needy men everywhere may feel the touch of unselfish spirits. Let us not suffer our church services to become means of delectation and passing pleasure — even though it may be the highest pleasure, soul pleasure—but the place for the renewal of our strength to make life's loads lighter.

II. Liberty.

The convention was an exemplification of the motto, "In faith unity, in opinions liberty, in all things charity." We found again that while we are bound to serve, we are free in the liberty wherein Christ has made us free. We find that while we are the slaves of Christ, there is the sweetest liberty in this slavery.

Before the convention there was grave apprehension on the part of many, owing to certain controversies being carried on, that there might be some roots of bitterness springing up in the convention which might terminate rather seriously. But the God of Peace and the Prince of Peace seemed to rule in the hearts of the people richly and a spirit of peace pervaded all the sessions of the convention. Then found that the things about which they differed were matters of opinion and non-essentials in which there should be the largest liberty of thought. Good men, thinking men, men of equal spirituality and intellectuality may hold contrary opinions about Rockefeller's gifts, but both being true to Christ in faith and obedience there is no need of a breach between them, and this the Norfolk convention demonstrated. For the sake of the peace and prosperity of our Zion, a fortunate compromise was reached whereby no more from this doubtful source would be solicited; and an enthusiastic praise and prayer service followed, in which it seemed that the very throne of God was let down into our midst. It has been a firm grasp of this principle of liberty in opinions and non-essentials which has served us from many a division in the past, and while we as a people have passed through many a logomachy, we have maintained that perfect unity for which we plead.

How appropriate that this spirit of liberty should prevail in a convention held in a city celebrating the first settlement of our forefathers who came to this country that they might enjoy the blessings of civil liberty and religious freedom!

May I impress upon you that all need this lesson sealed upon our hearts? If there have been divisions real or apparent among us, have they not come of our differences of opinions? All we not all brothers in the faith and love of our common Savior? We do not think alike, we do not see all things alike; but where the Spirit of the Lord is there is liberty, and it is utter childish immaturity for bitterness or unfriendliness to spring up in a congregation or a great brotherhood with a plea such as ours.

III. Fraternity.

Not only did the spirit of fraternity prevail among the members of the conven-

PLEASANT SUMMER
Right Food the Cause.

A Wis. woman says:

"I was run down and weak, troubled with nervousness and headache for the last six years. The least excitement would make me nervous and cause severe headache.

"This summer I have been eating Grape-Nuts regularly and feel better than for the six years past.

"I am not troubled with headache and nervousness, and weigh more than I ever have before in my life. I gained 5 lbs. in one week."

tion, but a larger fraternity characterized it. This was seen in the convention's attitude toward the Baptists of northwestern Canada and toward the federation movement. J. A. L. Romig, our missionary of northwestern Canada, and W. T. Stackhouse, superintendent of Baptist missions in the same territory, told of the union of our churches and the Baptist churches in that region, and their reports of that region were enthusiastically received. Brother Stackhouse gave an address on the union of these churches, one of the very best addresses of the convention. So favorable was the convention toward fostering the work in northwestern Canada that it was decided to appropriate $10,000 to that work. Like sweethearts separated in youth by some trifling quarrel and making up in old age and celebrating the victory of peace by marriage, so the Baptist and Disciples in their youth courted and married and became one religious body in 1813, but afterwards by misunderstanding became divorced and formed two separate bodies in 1828-30; and now after many years of alienation are renewing the courtship of youth which promises a permanent union of the two bodies.

In a general mass meeting at the convention resolutions relative to federation were adopted looking toward a better cooperation among all evangelical churches in Christian work. These resolutions are not binding on any of the churches. Such, of course, is impossible in churches whose government is of the congregational form. Such action carries no authority over any church or preacher, but is merely expressive of that fraternal feeling which we have toward those other religious bodies who are "casting out demons in the name of Christ" and whom we would not "rebuke because they follow not us," but bid God's speed. Neither do these resolutions involve the surrender of any principle for which we have stood, nor commit us to any policy which is unscriptural, or contrary to conscience. Thus the spirit of brotherhood strikingly characterized the convention at Norfolk.

On October 19, 1781, Lord Cornwallis at Yorktown, in the vicinity of modern Norfolk, surrendered to Washington, the thirteen colonies became free and a brotherhood of states, united in the cause of liberty, was formed; on April 9, 1865, General Lee at Appomattox Court House, in the vicinity of Norfolk, surrendered to General Grant, and brothers who had fought against brothers were at peace and the union of the nation was preserved, and the fraternity of the North and South made possible. So when our national convention meets in this section fraught with the victories of fraternity, it is fitting that this spirit should be one of its most salient features.

Additional Report of Christian Woman's Board of Missions

By MRS. M. E. HARLAN

From every field our superintendent of missions, Mrs. Helen E. Moses, brought a message of joy because of the large number won for the Kingdom, 4,820 conversions being reported, Jamaica first in number and Mexico second.

Self-Support.

The growth in plan and achievement toward self-support was noted as a marked feature of encouragement in a number of our fields. Outside of the homeland the largest increase is in tuitions at Monterey, Mexico, $1,500 gold being the year's receipts.

Response of the Native Christians to the Call of Need is observed to be in proportion to the growth toward self-support. India and Mexico sent gifts to the stricken ones in Jamaica and Jamaica sent offerings for mission work in California.

No Retreat at Any Point.

Though some fields are recognized as exceedingly difficult and call for great sacrifice and redoubled effort, it was the united voice and deep felt purpose of the entire National Board to go forward at any cost to strengthen the weak places and add equipment to the already strong.

Advance Work

Is as follows: Ten thousand dollars in excess of last year for Jamaica, specifically for the rebuilding of the wrecked church properties.

Three new workers are to be sent to India. Increased appropriations will be made for a number of stations and a dispensary established at Maudha.

Property is to be purchased at Saltillo, Mexico, and the dormitory further considered for Monterey.

Seven thousand dollars for Porto Rico was accepted as the special financial obligation in advance of last year. Two mission homes are to be erected. The Nebraska auxiliaries will raise the $1,000 for the home to be occupied by Dr. and Mrs. Alton. The raising of money for the Girls' Orphanage is to be continued.

The employment of two new workers, now on the field, is the advance plan for South America, and with Ohio's centennial gifts, to purchase property for a building plot.

Continued support of our educational and evangelistic work in the United States is second to none of the purposes of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions.

Increased effort for the Pacific Oriental work under the direction of W. P. Bentley is to be an aggressive feature this year.

New Fields.

Siberia, Africa, and New Zealand Island are to receive aid—evangelistic work in the latter and educational and evangelistic in the former.

On recommendation of the Texas State Missionary Board that the Christian Woman's Board of Missions become responsible for the oversight of the Mexican work in Texas, this new obligation was accepted.

A Special Feature.

In the corresponding secretary's report was the announcement that the mission at Kulpahar, India, is named in honor of our president, the queen of hearts in the realm of service, Mrs. Helen E. Moses.

Declared Purposes.

Watchword—Deeper spirituality, higher aspirations, greater achievements.

Aim—Members 70,000; Tidings 35,000; offerings $250,000.

Methods for Achievement.

1. That special effort for the organizing of new auxiliaries be made during the entire year, with November and October as a period for a simultaneous organizing campaign. That during these months every auxiliary is urged to cultivate some adjacent field and prepare the way for a new auxiliary and junior mission band, and under the guidance of the state officers, when an organizer can not be sent to assist, complete the organization.

That five points be emphasized C. W. B. M. day—our day for the securing of offerings from the churches.

1. New members.

2. Increase of offerings from the churches over last year.

3. Cultivate fields for living links and in each, when possible, secure definite pledged support for some missionary.

4. In churches where there is no auxiliary, present the work with the view of organizing.

5. Where there is an auxiliary secure a pledge to enter the simultaneous organization campaign, or some time during the year to prepare somewhere the way for an organization.

All rejoice that the aim of last year was exceeded on every point.

With faith in the Father and in the power of the gospel, the entire national board looks in hope toward the future.

HEART RIGHT
It Makes a Great Difference.

"About two years ago I became alarmed because my husband had attacks from fainting spells caused by weak heart, from drinking coffee.

At first he did not like Postum, I had not then learned to boil it long as directions say, to get the rich flavour and brown color.

"After it was made right, he liked it, and now for more than a year he has not been troubled with his heart—in fact, his general health is better than for years." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Our Budget

—State missions have the right of way. Every church should send in its offering.

—The Sunday-schools must not forget children's day for home missions, November 24.

—Preachers should send their revised addresses at once to the American Christian Missionary Society for publication in the Year Book.

—Elsewhere we report, through the pen of B. L. Smith, the National Council of Congregational Churches. This is one of the most important church gatherings in America, and it is interesting to see how this body is managing its affairs.

—We are always glad to receive news items, but we entreat brethren to make them just as brief as possible and send them as promptly as they can. This is the time of year when our columns are especially crowded. Address all such matter to the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

—We report great evangelistic successes. Brother Scoville at Lincoln, Neb., has already won more converts than in any of his previous meetings, and more than 1,400 will doubtless be the number at the final count. The churches everywhere are arousing themselves to do greater things for the Master's cause.

—On another page we publish a lengthy extract from the fine convention address of B. A. Abbott. This is an era with us of church building, and on other pages will be found accounts of some recent dedications. Brother Abbott has said some true things wisely and well. His address was on behalf of the Church Extension Board.

—We asked Brother Wright to send us an account of his visit to the annual convention of the Baptists of Quebec and Ontario. It will be seen from his words found elsewhere, how he and Brother Stackhouse drew out the union sentiment from this eastern part of Canada. The president and corresponding secretary of that convention are to be with us in New Orleans next year.

—We publish on another page an address by W. A. Fite, the subject of which is "The Spirit of the Norfolk Convention." Brother Fite has truly characterized that great gathering and the Fulton church ought to be happy in thus having that great convocation interpreted to its membership. Some churches have not yet seen the wisdom of even permitting their pastors to go to the convention, to say nothing of making it easy for them to go. The church always receives the greater benefit.

The Editor of The Christian-Evangelist at the Norfolk Convention.

—The Alabama brethren have been in convention this week in Jasper.

—H. J. Dudley, a consecrated minister, has accepted a call to the church near Harrisburg, Pa.

—For the two snap-shots of the Norfolk Convention on this page we are indebted to Percy Kendall.

—D. M. Morris has resigned his work at Galena, Kan., but has not determined yet his future field of labor.

—On another page we print some of the program for the Georgia convention, which is to meet at Atlanta, November 18-21.

—J. H. O. Smith is able to report 225 additions to the church at Oklahoma City since he entered upon its pastorate, May 12.

—Rufus A. Finnell is to conduct a meeting for R. G. Jones at Sandoval, Ill. Prof. B. J. Radford will supply for him at El Paso.

A. R. Moore, president of the Alabama Missionary Society, and a Convention Speaker.

—Roland A. Nichols has started a good meeting at Millersburg, Ohio, with seventeen additions at the time this paragraph was written.

—T. E. Cramblett, president of Bethany College, dedicates the new church at Claysville, Pa., November 17, and McMechen, W. Va., November 24.

—J. F. Montgomery, who for some time was located at St. Petersburg, and Tampa, Fla., is now preaching for the churches at Hico and Hamilton, Tex.

—P. E. Hawkins, of Hartford, Kan., has just been assisted in a meeting by M. B. Ingle and A. M. Zimmerman. The results to date we have not heard.

—D. M. Harris, of Galena, Kan., writes that all the churches of that city have federated in an evangelistic meeting, the ministers taking their turn, each to preach the gospel as he understands it.

—Evidently the people in the country and smaller towns and villages have not heard of the "banks scare," now subsiding, judging from the stream of renewals, and new subscriptions flowing into this office.

—Lewis O. Lehman expects to close his work with the Central Christian Church, Havana, Ill., on the first of December, or January, when the pulpit will be open to some bright young minister.

—Robert Lord Cave sends a good word for J. A. Brown and S. W. Daugherty, of their meeting reported for the West Side Church, San Francisco. Both, he says, are trained specialists, whose work is worthy of the success they have thus far achieved.

—The work at Howell Station Church, Atlanta, Ga., goes forward. This congregation is composed chiefly of the working class. They believe in the gospel of the helping hand and recently made an offering of $52 for the Baldwin Orphanage. D. L. Bond ministers to them.

—A brief note tells us of the death of William Matthews, one of our preachers who lived at Kansas City, Kan. His illness, due to a stroke of paralysis, extended over two years. Sister Matthews resides at 920 Ann avenue, Kansas City, Kan.

—The new house of worship at Wauseon, O., was dedicated by L. L. Carpenter on October 27. It is built of limestone and brick. The interior is finished in white oak and the cost was about $19,000. Charles R. Oakley is in his fifth year of ministry for this church.

—T. H. Bassett writes us that all are delighted with the individual communion service which the church at Paxton, Ill., has just installed. A teachers' training class, with twenty-seven members, has just been organized. All departments of the work are progressing satisfactorily.

—The faculty of Drake University have just passed resolutions upon the death of Daniel R. Lucas. They recognized in him not only one of the most helpful friends of that institution, but of education in general, and of every movement for the uplift of the young manhood and young womanhood of the land.

—A. F. Reiter expresses himself as well pleased with his work in the new University at Enid, Okla. Yet when he read our Washington bishop's recent account of the dedication of Peter Ainslie's Temple at Baltimore, he got a little homesick for the cobble street city and a chat with the delightful pastor of the Temple.

—Lew D. Hill, of Blandinsville, Ill., who has been preaching lately for the Bushnell Christian Church, will continue indefinitely. It is proposed by this congregation to hold a series of revival meetings some time during January. Improvements have recently been put upon the building and prospects are bright for steady growth.

—One of the members of the South Side Christian Church, Kansas City, Mo., says that all of that church's activities have taken on new life since Burrus A. Jenkins entered upon the pastorate. There have been quite a number of additions and the church is just beginning a revival with P. J. Rice, of Minneapolis, doing the preaching.

—Clinton Lockhart, President of Texas Christian University, writing of the meeting held there, already reported, says the work of Brother Dubber has been a help to the whole community. His sermons were fundamental, vital and forceful, dealing much with the ideals of Christ and the Christian life. He indicates that Brother Dubber has not yet settled upon his future place of ministry.

W. T. Moore and T. W. Phillips, discussing "tainted money."

—R. J. Bamber, our minister at Versailles, Ky., made us a call on his return from Lenox, Ia., where he had just concluded a successful meeting with the church at that place. Brother Coakwell is the pastor.

—The outlook is fine for a good meeting which George A. Jones is to hold for the Fourth Christian Church, at Cincinnati, O., of which he is pastor. This is a hard field, but the church is in excellent shape. Brother Jones can be secured for meetings during December and January, and may be addressed at 5134 Carthage avenue, Norwood, Ohio.

—We learn that there have been many important subscriptions to the endowment fund of Texas Christian University, under the new plan of organizing an endowment company. These subscriptions were taken during the season when it was most difficult to secure pledges. Colby D. Hall, the educational secretary, is very active in this work.

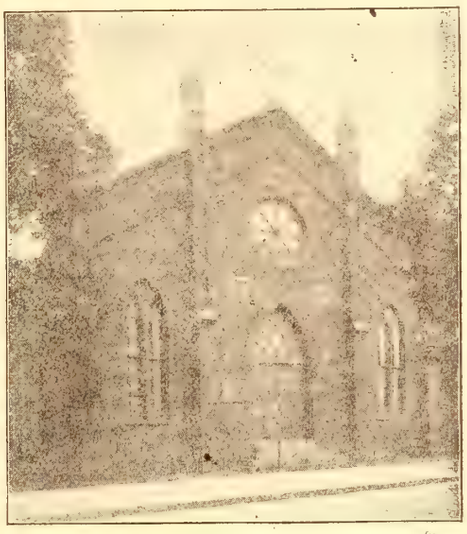
—There are hopes that a church may soon be started at the growing new town called Turlock, in California, where Henry Shadle, who has been the state evangelist and pastor at different places, is now living, as well as Dr. B. F. Clark, of the West Side Church, San Francisco. It is possible that Edward T. Nesbit, one of our ministers, may move there.

—For our church at Clearfield, Ia., there has been a good year. There were seventy-nine additions by confession and baptism, with a total of 104 added, giving an average of two additions per Sunday. For all purposes there was raised $1,742, with $522 borrowed. A good proportion of this was for mission purposes. S. R. Reynolds is the minister.

—Mark Wayne Williams has resigned at the West London Tabernacle and taken charge of a new church at Acton, a suburb in the west of London. Mr. Henry Varley, who formerly was minister of the Tabernacle prior to W. T. Moore taking charge of it, has been acting as supply for several weeks. He and Mrs. Varley have just celebrated their golden wedding.

—The brethren in North Carolina are certainly waking up. They have just held their best state convention, and we give some account of it from two of our correspondents. A. B. Cunningham is to give most of his time to the editing of the state paper. He has resigned his pastorate in Washington, and will look after the Rock Mount Church until a pastor can be secured.

—The Lord's day before Thanksgiving is children's day for home missions in Bible schools. We trust this rally day will be largely observed. It never has had the importance attached to it that we have given to children's day for foreign missions; but patriotism for the winning of the homeland to Christ must be insisted on just as much as the taking of the gospel to heathen fields.



—Christian University, Canton, Mo., has had a splendid opening this session. President Johann writes: "The attendance is about 20 per cent larger than it was last year, and the Christian atmosphere about the school has never been better. Our students now preach for more than 75 congregations and have reported nearly 1,000 converts during the last twelve months. All that we now need is more financial help."

—T. A. Lindenmeyer, who has resigned the pastorate of the Frederick Avenue Church, St. Joseph, Mo., is open for an engagement as regular minister, or evangelistic meetings in December. He has just been holding a revival at Urich, Mo., and during November is engaged with the church at Hayden's Grove. Churches desiring to communicate with him may address him at 512 North Twenty-second street, St. Joseph, Mo.

—H. M. Hale, who for some time was compelled to give up regular ministerial work by reason of ill health, is now in condition to preach again and will be open for a time to assist pastors in evangelistic work. His wife will accompany him as singer. He hopes later to find a location where he can do a good work. Brother Hale, whose work we have heard well-spoken of, may be addressed at 738 North Thirteenth street, East St. Louis, Ill.

—The work at Toledo, Ohio, is moving forward. There are now in its ministry two recent graduates from Hiram, W. B. Alexander at the East Church, and Brother Lines at the South, both of whom are succeeding nicely. Brother Finch, of the Norwood Avenue Church, is able to rejoice in the payment of the debt on the property. At the Central there are constant accessions and affairs are in a good condition. Grant W. Speer is its pastor.

—Our church at Fayetteville, Ark., has decided to make improvements to the extent of $2,500, and on the matter being suggested $1,600 was raised in a few minutes on a recent Sunday. The Daughters of the Dorcas, a society of the young ladies of the church, are planning to install a pipe organ that will cost $2,000, of which $1,400 has already been raised. This congregation is prospering under the energetic leadership of Frank Thompson. There are additions nearly every Sunday. A rally of the Endeavor societies has just been held and the minister surprised by a gift from the Juniors of a life membership in the C. W. B. M.

—The contract for a new brick and stone edifice at London, Ky., to cost over $11,000, has been let, and the work of excavating commenced. This will be one of the most handsome church buildings in Eastern Kentucky. The Sunday-school will be in the basement. All departments of the church work are advancing here under the ministrations of Clarence E. Miller, who has around him a consecrated band of Christian workers ready to make sacrifices.

—The congregation of the First Christian Church, Duluth, Minn., is completing some important improvements—a stone foundation, a new roof, and decorations to the auditorium. Since Baxter Waters has been the pastor, not only have the various departments of the church shown growth, but a new organ was purchased, and improvements on the plant made. The pastor has been preaching a series of morning sermons on the teaching of Jesus, while in the evening he is giving expositions on the Acts of the Apostles.

—I. H. Fuller, who resigned at La Monte, Mo., is now at work in his new field at Fremont, Neb. S. Gregg, the former pastor there, has entered upon work for the state board. He is beloved by his late congregation. Brother Fuller writes us that J. W. McClure has retired from the active ministry, but is the Bible school superintendent. Brother Fuller's first work will be in helping to develop the school and in scattering good Christian literature. He promises to keep in touch with the readers of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

—R. M. Messick sends us a note from Halfway, Baker County, Ore., 365 miles from his home in Salem. He is visiting his only living son, J. B. Messick, and went to supply, for a time, the place of Brother Rawlins, the pastor, who is now in California. We have about eighty members in Halfway. Brother Messick says that he had just had the pleasure of reading THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of October 10, and while he enjoyed it all, he calls special attention to the article, "Led by the Spirit." He speaks enthusiastically of the country there.

—C. R. Neel, who has been for the past two years state evangelist of Minnesota, has accepted the work at Helena, Mont., beginning November 1. Brother Neel has done a splendid service to our cause in Minnesota. He is a forcible preacher of the gospel, careful and judicious in his ministration. He has had excellent educational advantages and has preached with success to our churches in Rochester, N. Y., and Southport, England. During his evangelistic work in Minnesota, many churches have been revived, and through his efforts led to larger work.

—W. H. Book has entered upon his third year's work as pastor of the Tabernacle Christian Church, of Columbus, Ind. He and his wife recently gave a banquet in honor of the event, to which the officers of the church and their wives were invited. Addresses were made by a number of friends, including Z. T. Sweeney and Lieutenant Governor H. T. Miller, who spoke in highest praise of the work which Brother Book had accomplished. The church supports two living links in the foreign field and gives liberally to home missions. Including the donations made to Butler College the past year, the Tabernacle Church has given, during the year, more than $140,000.

—There is a call for strong preachers and men of executive ability for prosecuting the work in Northwest Canada. The importance of the field is much heightened by the fact that we expect to co-operate largely this year with the Baptists. Alexander McMillan, who is the corresponding secretary and treasurer of our Western Canada Christian Missionary Association, testifies both as to the excellence of the climate and the great outlook for the country. Those who are willing to consider such a field should address themselves to W. J. Wright, corresponding secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society, or Brother McMillan, box 511, Winnipeg, Manitoba.

—Alma M. Benson sends us some news from the church at Haverhill, Mass., the little shoe city of New England. Our church there is weak in numbers, but strong in faith and determination. With few members its financial reports show to great advantage and much commendation is due for this liberal giving. W. R. Mains and his wife, late of Kentucky University, are now leading the work, and since their taking the pastorate the church has taken on new life. At the close of the New England convention Mrs. Newton Knox, the state C. W. B. M. president, and Sister Cunningham, the national vice-president, visited this church, to the great joy of the Haverhill auxiliary, which is anxious to keep in closer touch with the work of the brotherhood throughout the land.

—W. W. Weedon entered upon his sixth year at Marion, Ill., November 1. During his pastorate there, 196 persons have united with the church. Missions have been well supported, a debt of over $2,000 on the property paid, new pews placed in the auditorium at a cost of over $800, and the pastor's salary promptly paid in advance each month. The C. W. B. M. auxiliary of this church is on the roll of honor. The Endeavor Society is doing an excellent work, the Bible school is the best in the history of the church and altogether the outlook for the future is most hopeful.

—There will be a rally of the Disciples of Christ in St. Louis, at the First Christian Church, Locust and Compton avenue, on Thanksgiving evening. F. A. Mayhall is to preside. The Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is to speak on the topic, "A Sunrise Movement for Sunrise People." There will be special organ solos by Miss Adelaide Tandy. It will be a most interesting meeting, we are sure, for the program is under the auspices of the Junior Bible class, of which Mr. Thomas Curtis Clark, whose poetry so often graces our columns, is the leader.

—The Carthage church has established a fine record for itself, as our readers already know, in the way of missionary gifts. During the past year there have been 122 additions, the net gain being eighty-two. The total receipts from all departments were $4,247, being $400 in excess of any other year. Of this $1,270 went for missionary work. The church has become a living link in both the home and foreign societies, supporting Dr. Widdowson in Africa and David Greer in Oklahoma. The resident membership is 325. The church is without indebtedness and has a tidy little sum in reserve for building. Newell L. Sims is the pastor.

—We have received a copy of the "Sherman (Texas) Daily Democrat," of November 1, announcing the death, in that city, of Mrs. O. A. Carr, widely known among our people as an educator and as the wife of our minister, O. A. Carr. Sister Carr was a woman of more than ordinary ability and energy, and her life was very largely devoted to educational work in Kentucky, Missouri, and finally Texas. Her death occurred on October 31, as she was entering upon the sixty-second year of her life. She was the founder and at the time of her death the president of the Carr-Burdette College, in Sherman, Tex. Our sincere sympathies are extended to Brother Carr and the bereaved family and friends.

—Church Extension receipts showed, for the third week of October, gains—contributions from the churches $249, from individuals $526, number of contributing churches 25. But for the following week there was a loss, in the same divisions, of $276, $1,918, and seven contributing churches. The loss in the individual receipts is due to the fact that last year $1,000 was received on the Frank H. Main loan fund, which was not paid that week, and an annuity of $1,000 was received last year, while no annuity money was received during the fourth week of October this year; $500, however, was received from a friend in Nebraska the previous week. Remember that the aim is to swell this fund to at least $300,000 by the time of our Centennial.

—At White Hall, Ill., until recently there was no regular minister for about five years. J. E. Wolfe took up the work the first of April, and each week the prospects of its growth have been brighter. Brother Wolfe stated some aims to be reached when he first took charge of the work, and among these are a graded Bible school with trained teachers, the debt paid off by January 1, 1908, an evangelistic effort and the entire church and workers rightly organized. Three of these aims have been achieved in three weeks, under the leadership of J. O. Shelburne, who added sixty-two members to the working force. A teacher-training course is to be started at once, and an old debt has been provided for. The membership is now about 250, the increase since Brother Wolfe took charge, being 97. Everybody is delighted with Brother Shelburne's work. Many in the town laughed at the advertising matter before the meeting began, as they never dreamed such results could be brought about.

—J. D. Hull has resigned at Kendallville, Ind., to take the work at Mishawaka, after November 10. During his pastorate at Kendallville there have been 185 additions to that congregation and 97 elsewhere in his evangelistic meetings. Improvements have been put upon the church building. In the Bible school the attendance has reached 326 and contests with the schools of the First Church, South Bend and Jefferson Church, Fort Wayne, have been won. The C. W. B. M. reached the roll of honor. We are glad to note that three of the young men have started in to preach, one has entered upon singing evangelistic work, and others are in college preparing for the ministry. A teachers' training class of over thirty has been organized. Brother Hull is in close touch with outside interests, too, for he is president of the ministerial association and the Good Citizenship League of his town and is corresponding secretary of the first Indiana district. He does much evangelistic work with his brother, and his wife, who is the district manager of the C. W. B. M., frequently occupies the pulpit.

—"After reading your paper now for about a year, I am constrained to say that while I was prejudiced against it on account of certain adverse criticisms which I had read in certain other columns, it is by far the best representative of our plea and position that is published by the brotherhood. I can only wish that our ministers throughout the brotherhood may come to get the 'wool' pulled off from their eyes as I have in this respect."

The foregoing is an extract from a sample letter of which we are receiving scores now, showing how many good men have had their minds poisoned by misrepresentation of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Is it worth while to continue to sow the seeds of suspicion and prejudice in the minds of the people who must reap the harvest from such sowing, to find at last that they have been the victims of partisan blindness and narrowness? Whatever may be the disposition of the sowers, we are sure there is a rapidly-decreasing field in which such seed will find hospitality. If there were no other motive for discontinuing this method of advancing one's own interests, the fact that such a course is bound to react in the long run against those who practice it ought to prove prohibitive.

More Union Sentiment in Canada.

I went from our recent convention in Norfolk to the annual convention of the Baptists in Quebec and Ontario, which was held this year in Woodstock, Ont. This is a beautiful and thriving town. One of the Baptists' best educational institutions in Canada is there. Many men are trained in Woodstock for the ministry. The institution is flourishing at the present time.

The convention listened to a great address by Rev. W. T. Stackhouse, Baptist superintendent of missions in Western Canada, who made such a fine impression on our own gathering in Norfolk. Brother Stackhouse told the Baptist convention that he returned from our convention with a conviction, a prediction, and a determination. A conviction that there was no reason why the Baptists and Disciples of Christ should be two bodies rather than one, and that every speech made in our convention would have been equally appropriate in a Baptist convention. A prediction that in Western Canada, at least, we would be one, enjoying visible, organic unity in the near future. A determination that as God gave him time and strength he would work to consummate this glorious purpose. This was received with enthusiasm by the convention.

I addressed the convention on Tuesday morning, October 22, and was accorded a hearty and fraternal welcome. I emphasized the great essentials in which the two bodies agree, and insisted that the differences between us were all but infinitesimal as compared with the agreements. Taking up Western Canada I showed special reasons why we should be one in that country which is in its formative period, and concluded by showing why all Christians, throughout the world, should be one and the scriptural basis on which they should be one. I was interrupted by frequent and prolonged applause, showing that the convention heartily received all the sentiments expressed. Ringing resolutions, rejoicing in the measure of union already obtaining in Western Canada, and praying for its deepening and enlarging, were passed. The resolutions also presented a sincere desire that the same co-operative and union movement might extend to all portions of Canada, and not be confined to the western half.

The convention elected its president and corresponding secretary as delegates to our next great convention, which is to be held in New Orleans October 9-15, 1908.

The brethren everywhere will surely rejoice in the spirit of union which is abroad in Canada, and by prayer and contributions, both of time and money, help to make the union complete and satisfactory.

Wm. J. Wright,
Corresponding Secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society.

South Carolina Convention.

The convention of the South Carolina Christian Co-operation will be held in Charleston, beginning the evening of November 21 and continuing through Lord's day, the 24th. The convention falls at the time of Charleston's gala week, so that it will be possible for delegates to get reduced rates.

Delegates should send their names to the undersigned so that preparation may be made for entertainment. Marcellus R. Ely.

Charleston, S. C.

D. R. Lucas Laid to Rest.

D. R. Lucas, whose death on November 3 we announced last week, was born on January 14, 1840. The funeral services in the Central Christian Church, Indianapolis, taxed the capacity of that large building, so many were the mourners that attended. Hundreds of veteran soldiers were present at the church to pay a last tribute to a comrade, and later they stood at the grave in Crown Hill Cemetery and took part in the beautiful G. A. R. service conducted by W. A. Ketcham, department commander. The sermon at the church was delivered by the pastor, A. B. Philputt. His tribute to the man whom so many had loved and honored was simple, yet forceful and eloquent, and was full of promise to the living. The floral offerings that were piled about the coffin were beautiful and elaborate. The hymns that had often gladdened the heart of Brother Lucas in life were sung by a male quartet.

The burial service touched the hearts of those who stood about the grave. An impressive feature of the exercises at the grave was the tribute paid by the Sunday-school children of the Seventh Christian Church. A class of girls, led by J. E. Tyler, sang "Rock of Ages" and "Jesus, Lover of My Soul." Then the children placed white carnations on the coffin, as they passed by and looked upon the beloved face. Just before the coffin was lowered a detachment of men from the Indiana National Guard fired a salute over the grave.

The mountain of flowers that had been deposited at the grave were hauled from the cemetery to be distributed among the hospitals of the city. Brother Lucas had expressed the wish that whatever floral tributes might be brought to him at his death should be used to gladden the hearts of the sick and unfortunate, rather than left on his grave to wither and die.

Brother Philputt was assisted in the church service by Brother A. L. Orcutt and Jabez Hall. In his remarks, Brother Philputt said in part:

"Brother Lucas was indeed a citizen. Nothing that affected the well-being of the city, the state or the nation was outside the pale of his interest. It never occurred to him that his being a minister of the gospel deprived him in the least of the right to hold and express opinions on all subjects. He would have been the first to acknowledge that he had the partisan temperament.

"He was a partisan in a good sense of the word, and not a slave to party. He loved his church, his political side, his favorite cause, whatever it might be, with a passionate love. He could condone and forgive much and still be loyal. But when things went wrong in the household of faith, political or religious—deeply and morally wrong—he was wont to cry aloud and spare not. He lived a clean and noble life. His thoughts were pure, his deeds were kind. I do not believe he has left a sting in any living heart. Little children loved him and he loved them. And the people loved him. They knew that he had his limitations as we all have. But he was a man among men and a brother to all.

"Our brother kept his life freshened by various interests and avocations. He touched many things and allowed himself some relaxations. As a minister of the gospel he never forgot the dignity of his calling. And yet he did not affect any cant or 'holier than thou' manner, for it never occurred to him that he was made of different clay from other men.

"It is usually perilous for preachers to be active in political campaigns, but he could so engage without forfeiting the esteem of those opposed to him. It is not usual that ministers are prominent in civic affairs, but such was his capacity for affairs that he had been called to many positions of honor, though seldom of emolument, by his fellow citizens."

The preacher referred to the many notable movements in which Brother Lucas had been interested, one of which was the building of the present Central Christian Church during his pastorate in 1892.

"The last great enterprise outside of the ministry with which he was identified," said Mr. Philputt, "was the Morton monument, being secretary of the association and devoting himself with assiduity to all the details of that great enterprise. When that was all over and the final report had been made, he said to his wife: 'My work is done. I have helped to build Drake University, the Central Church, and now the Morton monument. I see nothing more for me to do.'

"His prophecy has come true. To those who survive he leaves a goodly heritage. A life devoted to the services of God and the good of humanity."

Good Indications.

During the first four days after the first Lord's day we have heard from about twenty churches and with two exceptions, each one equaled last year's offering or reports a decided increase. Seven out of the twenty reporting are churches that gave nothing last year and two of them churches that never did give for any kind of missions before. Of course twenty is a very small number, but it is twice as many as reported in the same time last year. They are just the pioneers, the forerunners, for the rest of the month they will come in good and strong.

Let no church in Missouri ever dream that it has done its duty till it has taken the largest offering possible for state missions. Remember state missions have the right of way in November. This one month in all the year our own state, "Imperial Missouri," has the front of the platform. All other folks please be seated. T. A. Abbott.

An Explanation and an Appeal.

When the proposition to raise $500,000 as a Centennial offering to the endowment of Bethany College was first made, I had not the most remote idea that I would become actively identified with the raising of this money. At that time I even protested against being made chairman of the alumni committee, but finally consented to occupy that position. However, as the days have gone by, it has become evident that some one must take active charge of this great enterprise in order that it may be made a success. Nothing moves without something to move it. Personality is the power behind every great undertaking, and where this personality is lacking, the wheels of the enterprise are sure to stand still. In view of this undoubted fact, I have at last been induced to throw my whole personality and energies into the work of securing this great endowment fund for my Alma Mater. I was already loaded down with heavy responsibilities. Among other things I had begun the preparation of a great literary work, viz., "A Comprehensive History of our Religious Movement." But I have unloaded much of other work already in hand, and have agreed to superintend the campaign for raising the proposed Centennial offering to Bethany College. Of course I will continue my literary work to some extent, but will necessarily have to abridge it considerably during the time of my active canvass for the college. But nearly all my other engagements have been canceled, or will be canceled immediately, so that I may give my time and thought to the great enterprise now before me. I have felt that in some respects I could not round out my life in a better cause than to be instrumental in securing a liberal endowment fund for the college which Alexander Campbell founded, and which has done so much for the advocacy of the principles for which he contended. I feel that I could not spend the next two years of my life, if I am spared for this service, better than to give it unreservedly to the raising of this endowment fund.

But I can do nothing without the help of my brethren. Is not the cause as much theirs as mine? Is not every Disciple of Christ under obligation to do what he can to make this endowment fund a great success? Indeed, is it not a fact that our proposed Centennial, in 1909, would be practically a farce if Bethany College is not liberally remembered in our Centennial offerings? I do not wish to undervalue the importance of any or all of the pleas that are set forth in view of our Centennial celebration, but I believe that no one will dispute the supremacy of the plea which I make. It certainly ought to have the first place. It has been truly said that Bethany College is the mother of us all. In view of this fact surely no one will hesitate to contribute, at least, a small sum toward the raising of this Centennial fund. I make my appeal especially to the preachers and the old students of the college. If these will all actively engage as agents in the raising of this fund, the amount will be practically assured before the first of January, 1908. What is done should be done quickly. The old French proverb, "He who hesitates is lost," is of special significance with respect to the work now in hand. No one will miss a dollar, and this will secure fellowship in this great Centennial offering. But thousands can give more than this, and by so doing will add to their own happiness as well as to the efficiency of the grand old college, which stands for so much in the history of our religious movement. Will not the friends of the college enclose their contributions at once to the "St. Louis Union Trust Company," St. Louis Mo., stating that the money is for the Bethany College fund, and they will promptly receive a receipt for the same, while their names and addresses wil be entered in a book, which book will be preserved in the library of the college as a memorial of all who have remembered the college in its time of need?

I will be glad to correspond with preachers or with any one who is interested in this matter and who desires information or helpful suggestions with respect to the best way to raise this money. Already a number of preachers have pledged their churches for at least $1 for every member, while many other preachers have promised to put the matter before their congregation and take subscriptions for the same. Very much can be done in this way, but very much can be done also by personal application to friends of the college. Will not every Disciple of Christ become an active agent in securing this endowment fund? If even one-quarter of our great brotherhood would heed this appeal, the work would be speedily accomplished. Let there be no hesitation. Let every one take up the work at once, and soon I will be able to announce a great and glorious victory.

"An Adventist Preacher Joins Us."

Our hearts at the Tabernacle Church of Christ, Wilmington, N. C., were gladdened by the addition of I. W. King and wife from the Christian Adventist body. Brother King has been a preacher of that faith for twenty-five years and is a man who has done much good in the propagation of that faith. His labors have been in this state and also in Florida. His wife is a great help to him. They have not hastily made this change. I have talked many times with them and given them numerous tracts and books and they have read and talked their way into the broader, more scriptural brotherhood. Brother King has no small amount of ability as a preacher of the Word. He is desirous of doing all he can; hence would like to do some preaching and to be kept busy. Any church wanting him address at 1010 South Seventh street, Wilmington, N. C. I am in a meeting with E. E. Violett and singer, leading us. We are planning great things.

Preparing for a Big Meeting.

You may remember some good reports from the Bentonville church. Well, I have one to make now. The second Lord's day in January we have arranged with J. J. Taylor, our corresponding secretary, to hold us a meeting. Already the church is preparing for it—preparing for it gloriously. Let me tell how. It may prove a stimulating example to other good people.

About 6 p. m. some brother sent up to the preacher's home a huge watermelon, 30 inches long and 30 inches in circumference, weight 47 pounds. It was a genuine Ozark melon and had done duty at our great fruit fair, held here October 23, 24, 25. Was it a surprise? Why, it was only a forerunner. Delivery wagons soon stopped at the side and as groceries and things and more things were brought in, the poor preacher's eyes began to expand and to water. The situation became apparent and the preacher's wife saw the fruit jars, pickles, preserves, jellies, sugar, flour—oh, 'twere too long to tell the story—and—and—you know.

We are rich this one time, and it feels so comfortable. The melon? Yes, you've not forgotten it, I see. Well, we took it out on the front porch (thus giving it a place of honor) and laid it open from end to end. About forty persons ate of it, and I can testify to its excellence. Enough? Plenty, and some to send to a sister who could not come.

We had fine music, instrumental and vocal, and interwoven were strains of cheer, glad hearts and the sincere gratitude of one household that I can vouch for. Now, isn't that a fine preparation for a big meeting? Everybody in good spirits and Christian resolution. The effect on the preacher is magical. I hope he won't kill himself now trying to do greater and better things for a people so appreciative.

On November 3 I entered upon my third year for this church. For sacrifice, faithfulness and harmony I know of none its superior.

Our Christian Endeavor Society has grown until it is largest in the history of this church. J. Breckenridge Ellis is its president. Our prayer-meeting is excellent in this excuse-of-absence-seeking age. Our C. W. B. M. auxiliary is weak but still convalescent. We are hoping for its health and strength.

"Glorious things are spoken of thee, O city of God.
The Lord shall count, when he writeth up the people,
As well the singers as the players on instruments."

"I count not myself to have apprehended: but this one thing I do; forgetting those things which are behind and reaching forth unto those which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

J. W. Ellis.

NATIONAL COUNCIL OF CONGREGATIONAL CHURCHES

It was my privilege to attend the sessions of the national council of the Congregational churches in Pilgrim Church, Cleveland, O., in October. Under the auspices of the council were held the annual meeting of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions; the Home Missionary Society; the American Missionary Association, the Church Building Society, and the Sunday-school and Publication Society.

The national council is the general body; it elects its own moderator and carries the burden of the whole meeting, adjourning for the meetings of the various benevolent societies.

The council was composed of about 650 delegates, elected by state associations and district conferences. In addition there were about 850 visitors, making about 1,500 people from outside the city. This great gathering of a great people was not well reported by our local papers. If misery loves company this may be a grain of comfort to us.

The stated clerk reported the net loss of twelve churches during the past year; also a loss in the number of Christian Endeavor societies; a loss in the number of Sunday-schools and in scholars.

Each missionary society was left free to attend to its own special work, all matters of general interest came before the sessions of the council. The questions of union, labor, temperance, organized evangelism, decrease in the ministry and federation were all discussed in the council. The arrangement is a good one; it leaves each missionary board free to its own work and yet provides a free platform for the discussion of questions of general interest and concern.

The disposition by the council of the proposition of union with the United Brethren and Protestant Methodist churches was a matter of surprise. Considerable opposition to the proposed plan of union was developed, many being very much opposed to Congregational churches yielding any part of their independence and objecting to any form of ecclesiastical supervision; one man saying: "Jesus Christ, who was a layman, selected twelve laymen who organized a layman's church, not a clergymen's church." The whole matter of the union was referred to a committee of twenty-eight, to report at the next meeting of the council, 1910.

The council rejected the report of the standing committee on labor, on the ground of its being too favorable to union labor. It also refused to endorse the Beveridge bill, pending in the United States Senate, to prohibit interstate commerce in articles produced, in whole or in part, by child-labor.

The great address of the council was by the retiring moderator, Washington Gladden, on "The Social Crisis." It was along his well-known sociological lines. He said the swollen fortunes are tumors on the body politic and gave a trumpet call to the church to its great duty of realizing the social Christianity of Christ. It was a great address.

Justice Brewer, of the Supreme Court, gave a strong address on Christian Ethics. Former Governor Northern, of Georgia, told of the organization of the Christian League in the South, composed of Christian white men and Christian negroes for the purpose of bringing about a better understanding between the races and stopping lynching.

On Lord's day, instead of a great communion service, the Central Armory was rented and had a discussion of the labor question by three representative speakers; our plan of having communion services is of far greater spiritual uplift.

The council, by its advisory committee, asked the churches for a definite sum for each of the benevolent boards and preserved some proportion between them. The council planned for a consolidated missionary magazine, instead of the four different ones now published by the different boards.

The keynote of the home missionary session was: "The Advance in Home Missions is required by Loyalty to Christ." Loyalty to Christ requires advance in home missions among our foreign corporations; In the Evangelization of Our Cities, Among the Indians, On the Frontiers. That keynote of loyalty to Christ made it a great session.

The meetings continued over ten days and maintained their interest to the close.

Work Begun at New Orleans for 1908.

Active work in connection with the great convention of 1908 is already in progress in New Orleans. Committees have been appointed to take charge of the several departments of the work, and the indications are that the New Orleans convention will be one of the greatest gatherings of the brotherhood. Brother Wright, of the American Christian Missionary Society, was with us last Lord's day and remained over Monday, looking over the field and noting the conditions. He preached at the Soniat Avenue Church morning and evening to the delight of two large congregations. During his stay he visited the Atheneum, in which the convention will be held, the several hotels, and called upon the officials of the Progressive Union and many of our business men, all of whom are enthusiastic regarding the coming gathering of the churches. He also attended a session of the Protestant ministers and addressed them.

The people of New Orleans are stirred up upon the subject, and from all classes words of encouragement and offers of help are being received. The ministers throughout the state have sent in letters assuring the local workers of their interest in the subject and offering their services in every way in which they may be useful. There seems to be a general spirit of rejoicing among all the southern people we have heard from that the brethren have decided to come to the sunny south with this great gathering. The hotel rates will be published in a few days and they will show that these people are cooperating with all others with the object of making the convention a success.

North Carolina Convention.

The sixty-third annual convention of the North Carolina Christian Missionary Society was held with the congregation at Belhaven, Beaufort county, October 29-November 1. The attendance was much larger than the two previous years, there being about 300 delegates and visitors, and over 800 present sometimes at the night service. Delegates wore white badges and visitors pink, as the constitution of the society provides for vote by delegates only, though visitors participate otherwise in the deliberations of the convention.

This convention was great in results. There was greater harmony than last year. There were greater reports of work done. The C. W. B. M. had the first day. They report nine new auxiliaries and much other work done. They have $500 in their treasury with which to begin the new year. Mrs. Effie Cunningham, of Indianapolis, gave a fine address at the night session. Miss Elizabeth Tesh, a member of the Winston-Salem church, was secretary and field worker.

The officers for the new year are: Mrs. R. F. Hill, president; Mrs. J. W. Grainger, vice-president; Mrs. J. F. Taylor, recording secretary; Mrs. W. B. Brown, treasurer; Mrs. Hodges, corresponding secretary; Miss Alice Hines, superintendent Y. P. D.

The secretary of the State Missionary Society gave a comprehensive report that showed a good advance in the work. Reports from the files of "The Carolina Evangel" for eight months showed 1,500 additions to the churches; estimating for the other four months this gives probably nearly 2,000 for the year. There was also a gain in receipts, over $7,000 being raised. A special session was held for Atlantic Christian College, at which Dr. J. J. Harper, the president, made a good report of the school, showing the thorough character of the work done, and that the attendance is now better than in the beginning of any year he has had charge of the college. Prof. J. C. Caldwell, dean of the college, made a rousing address on the moral and other influences of the college, and made an appeal to wipe out the debt of $10,000, which was promptly done amid great rejoicing. The state board had collected on the college debt over $1,000 on the $1 campaign during the year. The college is about to purchase a property for a new dormitory, and altogether the prospects are now brighter than ever before. This was a great step taken by the convention when it secured pledges for the debt.

Another important matter was this, J. H. Mohorter, secretary of the National Benevolent Association, who delighted our convention with his address on "The Gospel of the Helping Hand," reported that he had just come from Tarboro, N. C., where a hospital worth $1,500, with an endowment of $5,000, and a monthly contribution of $75 from the county, will be turned over to our N. B. A. unincumbered, if our brethren in North Carolina will provide a board of directors to conduct it. A committee was appointed to visit Tarboro and carefully investigate the matter, and it is hoped we will soon have a Christian hospital in North Carolina. Brother Mohorter goes also to Dewdrop to look after an orphanage being started there by Ira C. Cowling.

W. R. Warren, of Pittsburg, gave a good address on Centennial Aims, and H. A. Denton, the new secretary for home missions, made a good impression in his address. J. A. Lord, editor of the "Christian Standard," made a great address on "Liberty." If all our church papers will live up to the spirit of that address there will not be much lack of unity among the Churches of Christ. It was decided to continue our state paper, the "Carolina Evangel," which has been such a valuable aid to the state work for the past eight months, and had much to do with working up the great convention at Belhaven.

There were some changes made in the constitution of the state society. One provides for seven advisory members of the state board. Another that the convention begin on Wednesday, so that the C. W. B. M. can have Tuesday for their sessions, and changing the time of the convention to November, so that our national secretaries can economize in traveling from one state convention to another.

A plan for enlarging the work was adopted by deciding to co-operate with the Piedmont Union in putting an evangelist in the western part of the state. It was also decided to open a mission this year in Greensboro, one of the most important cities of the state. It is expected that the Roanoke district will co-operate in building up a church at Greensboro.

The old board was re-elected, the great majority of the convention believing that they should be continued as they had wrought hard, and done effectual service. They are: A. B. Cunningham, president; George Hackney, vice-president; J. S. Basnight, treasurer; L. O. Mosely, recording secretary; W. G. Walker, corresponding secretary. The next convention is to be at Kinston. The hospitality of the Belhaven church was bountiful. We had oysters in almost every style, and other good things.

Winston-Salem. J. A. Hopkins.

To the glad surprise of the Disciples of North Carolina, the state convention at Belhaven was held in good fellowship and adjourned in joyful anticipation of doing a greater work than ever before in the "Old North State." The reactionary preachers were Providentially kept from "raising a row" over the re-election of the most strenuous Executive Board that has ever guided our missionary work in the state. The re-election of this board, despite a summer campaign against its president and secretary, who had laid on the whip with quite unnecessary vigor, was a challenge to all non-cooperating persons that the churches will not tolerate any interference with their forward movements; that the day of lethargy is passing, and that the churches mean to wake up and move forward. The sun of hope is rising on our cause in this state, and the two watchwords of to-day are Evangelism and Education.

The Belhaven convention was the biggest one the state has ever known in regard to attendance, to money raised, and in regard to the program of the future work. The debt on Atlantic Christian College, of over $10,000, was provided for. The apportionments for future state work aggregated about $7,000. The missions at Wilmington and Rocky Mount are to be continued, and a mission is to be opened in the town of Greensboro. And not the least of the actions of the convention was the endorsement of the Carolina Evangel and an order to the board to continue its publication as the official organ of the Disciples of the state. President A. B. Cunningham will give the most of his time to the editing of the Evangel. He has given up his pastorate in Washington and will look after the Rocky Mount Church until a permanent pastor can be secured.

The great defect in the convention was the total neglect of the Sunday-school and the Christian Endeavor. Our churches in Eastern North Carolina are teeming with young people and the homes are full of children. The new life in the churches is due to the coming of the young people into the church work. These young people are brought into the churches via the Sunday-schools; and yet, the only recognition of the work of the Sunday-schools was to apportion each school a certain sum of money for state missions and to recommend them to have a rally day for "Home Missions."

It is a sickening fact that our societies, all of them, are keen on draining revenue from the Sunday-schools, but they are distressingly tardy about stimulating better growth, better work and better facilities for work. The converts that have been taught religion in the Sunday-schools are worth double their number of the average converts ouside of the Sunday-schools that have joined the church under the hip-hip-hurrah! revival.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

O. P. Spiegel in Los Angeles.

I have just closed a good meeting with the Broadway Church, Los Angeles, Cal., to which B. F. Coulter ministers, ably assisted by J. W. Utter. Brother Coulter is a leading dry goods merchant of the city, employing more than four hundred men and women, but he has always found much time to attend to the Lord's work. The Broadway Church has four active missions in the city, one among the negroes, with an active minister at each; a Japanese night school and mission, and two missionaries in Japan. Last year the church raised, besides minister's salary, $8,500 for the Lord's work, which, so far as I can learn, is more than was raised by any other one of our churches west of Kansas City and Omaha. Truly this is a great church, a good people. O. P. Spiegel.

Birmingham, Ala.

Illinois.

B. L. Allen is conducting his own meeting at Olney, assisted by F. E. Trucksess, of Indiana. The church at that place is very much alive. Sumner is planning to build. It is hoped they will soon have a man to lead the forces and help them with their building project. Bridgeport, in the oil center is without a man. A. L. West has closed his work at Mt. Vernon. The church at Little Grove, where I. G. Williams preaches, is repairing the church house. This is a splendid country church, with frequent additions. Brother Brown comes from Indiana to take the work at Palestine. G. S. McGaughey goes from Palestine to Robinson, a hustling oil town.

The writer spent Lord's day, November 3, at Patoka. This church is now on the missionary list. The interest in our district and state work is growing. This is our day of opportunity.

St. Louis City Mission Notes.

The Carondelet church has just vacated the old building they have used for seven or eight years past. The members have erected a tabernacle on the new lot, located in one of the newest and brightest neighborhoods of South St. Louis. This is but a plain structure for temporary use, as it is hoped a beginning can shortly be made on the Centennial building. Opening services were held recently, at which Brother Garrison presided, making a very graceful introductory speech on Christian Unity, which, though informal and impromptu, was a rich treat to the audience. Brief addresses were also made by several of our city pastors, and the whole service was a very happy one. The people are enthusiastic over the auspicious inauguration of work in the new location. At recent services nine have been added, seven by baptism. The Sunday-school closed an eight weeks' friendly rivalry with Maplewood's school, with Carondelet in the lead on both points of contest. I am holding the fort with this congregation for the present, and putting in all the time possible with other points in the city mission field.

At Clifton Heights the work is now making a start on a broad, firm basis. The loan of a lot for five years, through the kindness of J. E. Mitchell, ends all uncertainties for the present by enabling the brethren to put up a nice, neat, serviceable chapel. At the end of five years the congregation will know just what location and style of building will be required.

Overland Park Church, in a beautiful suburb, is holding its own and growing, and so far as part use of Union Chapel will permit, it is prospering well.

Strodtman Heights. This cause originated in the zealous work of a few Christian people recently removed to that new suburb. They called L. S. Hiers to their aid, and under his ministry there immediately rallied a membership of 30 or 40, including many converts. They are now putting up a temporary building to serve perhaps for a year or so. R. H. Stockton is generously donating them a splendid lot and they are bravely supporting Brother Hiers for his whole time. This new church has a future of fine promise. Our colored congregation consists of a fine, intelligent people. I have several times assisted them, both in preaching and conferring about the work. They are agitating for better premises than the rented hall they now occupy, and when better equipped have the assurance of growth and enlargement. Brother Harris, their pastor, is leaving and Bother Terry one of their own young men and a student preacher, will serve them until more permanent arrangement for the pulpit can be made. Other points are calling urgently for the opening up of work in their midst. St. Louis stretching out after a million population, is a marvelous field for city missions, but time, money, workers, all are, alas, too limited. G. E. Ireland, City Evangelist.

Kentucky Work for Sixty Days.

Harlan C. Runyon is just as busy since the convention as he was before. There have been about twenty added, 14 of them during a short meeting in which H. W. Elliott did the preaching.——S. J. Short reports 17 added in his Big Sandy Valley field and other good results.——L. B. Haskins says that Erlanger is doing well. He expects to leave that field January 1 and a good man is wanted who will preach there half time and the remaining two Sundays at nearby place.——C. A. Van Winkle has added 18 since last report to the papers. Over $500 raised for local work. Part of his time was spent away from Berea.——One baptism at Wellsburg and work doing well as indicated by E. T. Hays.——One hundred additions reported by D. G. Combs. He is now preaching regularly at Hazel Green and Olive Hill and much of this work was before he began this. Olive Hill has bought a $450 lot, and has begun to build a good concrete house.——Bardstown had the usual sermons by J. B. Briney and all are anxious for him to continue in 1908.——Three dozen additions constitute a part of the good results of the labors of J. W. Masters. The house at Harlan Courthouse is nearing completion.——Five added at Morehead and the house improved, as W. F. Smith tells us.——Sixteen added in September by W. J. Cocke. He has held a meeting at South Side, Lexington, with J. H. Stambaugh, and is now in one at Jackson, Breathitt county, since receipt of September report.——L. L. Carpenter will officiate at dedication of the Jellico house on November 17. A great day is confidently expected. R. G. Sherrer is anxious that the friends of this important work shall be present.——A meeting has been in progress for some time at South Louisville Church. Edw. B. Richey had the help of B. F. Tanner; 27 added at last report; 35 additions during past sixty days. Richey says this is the best meeting in the history of the church.——Twelve additions reported by H. L. Morgan.——Fifteen additions in September by Z. Ball. He is to move to Jackson county soon.——Three added by H. H. Thompson in Pike county.——Chatham work doing well, as reported by J. W. Ligon.——Nine added at Valley View and Irvine by O. J. Young.—Four added by C. W. Campbell at Livingstone.——Geo. D. Verco reports two additions at Clay City.——Elijah Petty held a meeting in Charter county with 77 added.——A house will be built at once if the plans formed are carried out.——One added at Second Church, Richmond, and the work doing well, as we are told by the minister, W. O. Foster.

H. W. Elliott preached 22 sermons at seven different places and sent out enough mail to require more than $40 postage. Indications encourage him to think that the month of November will be used more generally than ever before for taking the offering for our work. We plead for the largest liberality in supporting this work. Many of the appeals for help must be held until we know more fully what the churches will do for the work.

Receipts for the time since convention, $169.44—our obligations for that time about $1,400. This will suggest at once the imperative need of prompt remittance of every dollar to be had for the state work in Kentucky. H. W. Elliott, Secretary.

Harlow at Moberly, Mo.

In the Harlow-Dakin meeting with the Central Church eighty have come forward—forty-four to make the good confession and thirty-six to unite by letter or statement. There is one more night and we expect others. It has been a great meeting. This is Brother Harlow's first meeting since the death of his son, Clyde, on August last. It was a great trial to him to begin again without the boy, but he bore up bravely and the Lord sustained him.

He is an independent, vigorous thinker and an able, fearless preacher of the Word.

Fred G. Dakin, of Wilmington, O., is a young man of modest demeanor, earnest and energetic, and is an effective leader of choir and congregation. His solos are touching and tender. He has been in the Christian church only a little over a year, but is taking high rank among our leaders of song. He was accompanied here by his excellent Christian wife who is anxious to help in the good work.

Our people express the highest appreciation of both evangelist and singer. They begin in Wabash, Ind., November 3. W. B. Taylor.

SOME OF OUR CHURCHES RECENTLY DEDICATED.

Fredonia, Kan.

On October 6 was dedicated the new house of worship at Fredonia. F. M. Rains preached three sermons and over $3,000 was raised, providing for all indebtedness, save a five-year loan of $2,000 which we obtained from the Church Extension Board. All the churches of the city joined in the morning service.

The church building, constructed of stone and red pressed brick, trimmed in white, is 70 feet long and 53 feet wide and will seat 500 people. Seven memorial windows were placed in the church. One given by T. C. Singleton, in memory of his wife, is a scene representing "The Resurrection Morn," and is made of mosaic glass. Another was given by the pastor and his wife in memory of his father, A. L. G. Johnstone, and represents the scene, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock." The cost of the building will be about $9,500. During the past year this church of about 200 members has raised in cash and pledges altogether $8,500. At regular services there were added 45 adult members. The Sunday-school attendance has been increased from 80 to 182. The collection on dedication day was $27.50.

To mention all to whom credit is due for the consummation of the undertaking, would be to name almost every person in and many friends outside the church. But it is no more than just to make special mention of the gifts of T. C. Singleton and family, which amounted to over $1,200. Mr. Singleton is not a member of the church, but his wife was and it was her greatest desire while living that a new Christian church might be built in the city. H. M. Johnstone is the pastor of this vigorous and growing church.

Christian Church, Fredonia, Kan.

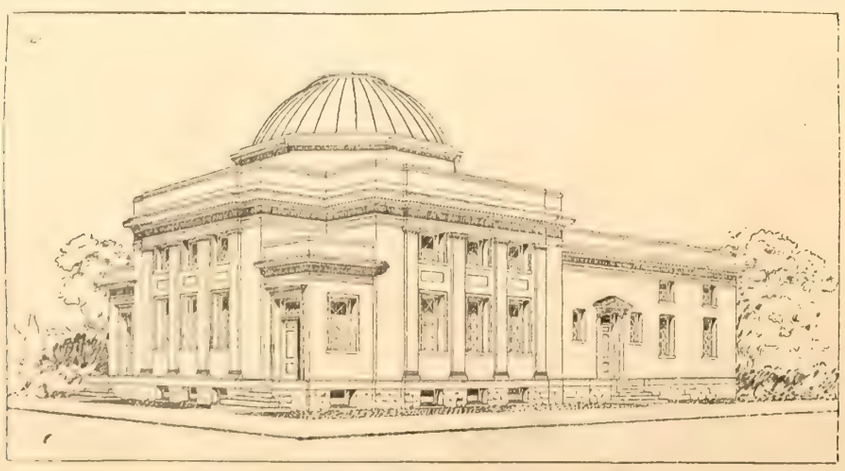
Canyon City, Colo.

Two years ago I came from Kentucky to Colorado and accepted the pastorate of the church at Canon City, where there were about 150 members, with poor equipment for work. The house was an old structure in a bad condition and wholly inadequate for the needs of the congregation, while all the other churches had large, beautiful and well-equipped buildings. A meeting was at once begun, which continued for six weeks, resulting in about thirty accessions and the edification of the whole church, for which principally the meeting was held. About $4,000 was then subscribed for a new building. Two splendid corner lots in the heart of the city were purchased at a cost of $2,000. But the amount on hand was insufficient to construct a building commensurate with the needs of the congregation and the growth of the town. Some help was secured from the outside, but not enough to justify the effort, and the work was delayed for a year. Then came the failure of the fruit crop, upon which the largest constituency of the church is dependent for support, and it seemed that the work would be delayed for several years.

But some of us kept hope alive in our own hearts, and just at this time the Church Extension Board came to our relief with a loan of $4,000, the largest ever granted to Colorado. This was a source of much joy, but still we were not able to begin our building, which would cost approximately $15,000. A banquet was given by the Ladies' Aid to the members of the church. Bayard Craig and L. G. Thompson, of Denver, were present and spoke. A canvass of the town was made. The building was at once begun. When its walls were nearly up another disaster came. The second fruit crop was totally destroyed, but the work was in the hands of a contractor and had to go on; nor did we desire it to cease.



The triumph was achieved in this wise: H. O. Breeden, known, beloved and honored throughout our great brotherhood as one of God's noblemen, was secured to lead the church in an evangelistic campaign, at the close of which the temple of worship would be dedicated. Sunday, September 22, was chosen as the day to begin. The campaign was well advertised. A packed house greeted the evangelist and the work was well begun. The number of personal workers in a membership of less than 200 is always small. Besides, the religious census of the city which was well taken, gave but little material upon which to work, for the majority of the population were already identified with the churches of their choice.

When the appeal was made, over $5,000 was pledged gladly and cheerfully. This exceeded the most sanguine expectations of many. But the entire amount was not pledged and the dedicatory exercises were postponed a week. In the meantime some people who were absent on Sunday were seen, and the business men seeing the heroic struggle rendered good help, but the burden still rested upon the congregation. When the last Sunday came we believed that the proposition could be handled and when the final effort was made, it was only ten minutes until the $7,000 mark was overreached by $400. It was a scene such as is seldom witnessed, the memory of which will go with those who were present for many a day.

The expense of the campaign was handled with ease. The collections in the meetings made up for deficiency in pledges. The church has learned that a great undertaking appeals to the dignity of its members. During the 22 days of Brother Breeden's preaching 65 were added to the church, which now numbers about 250, with splendid prospects for a steady normal growth. When all conditions are considered the victory was one of the greatest our people have ever had in the west. The number of accessions was not large as compared to some other fields, but large for this. They will doubtless remain a permanent strength to the church. They were won, not by excitement and over-pressure, but by genuine teaching and earnest persuasion. H. O. Breeden's conception of the Gospel is vital and spiritual. He presented the truth with such sincerity, simplicity and eloquence and with such a spirit of love that none could refuse to hear. Many of the pastors of the city attended frequently and heard the plea of the Disciples which was made instructive to all and offensive to none.

The church edifice is a magnificent structure of the Greek style of architecture and is an adornment to the town. It is better located than any church in the city. The Sunday-school room has not yet been constructed, but the auditorium will accommodate about 500 people and will be sufficient for several years. A splendid basement will serve temporarily for Sunday-school and social purposes. In the middle of the room is a beautiful dome giving light from above through an art glass design. Hoffman's Christ in Gethsemane and two other less expensive but beautiful memorial windows adorn the auditorium. The design of the building is thoroughly classic and satisfies both the aesthetic and the spiritual taste.

First Christian Church, Canyon City.

Colfax, Ill.

The new church at Colfax, Ill., where N. H. Robertson ministers, was dedicated Sunday, November 3, by F. M. Rains. The building is a handsome one, located in the central part of the town just one block from Main street. In a very brief time $7,475 was raised, and this, with $350 from the Sunday-school collection, makes $7,825, or $1,825 over all indebtedness. The cost of the building was $17,000 and the lots $2,000. Everything is well arranged for Sunday-school work and for the social life of the church. The seating capacity is 500. The building is furnished with the best of everything. The basement is large and is equipped with kitchen, pantry, dining room, cloak room and Sunday-school rooms. The church is lighted by over 200 electric lights. The gift and memorial windows, four in number, are from hearts interested in God's work. The choir loft will seat thirty singers and has room for piano, organ and orchestra. The Sunday-school has had no small part in the work of the new church. The faithful superintendent, J. P. Arnold, keeps everything moving along well in the school. The average weekly offering since June 1 has been $23.50 and the largest attendance 170, the average attendance being about 130. The school has paid $1,000 into the church building fund this year, and has pledged $500 more on the debt. The school gave $65 last Children's day, the largest amount it has ever given. The congregation has worked hard and is now happy in its new church home. A revival meeting is now in progress, J. H. Stambaugh, of Lexington, Ky., assisting the pastor, and a good meeting is expected.

N. H. Robertson, Pastor.

Hillsboro, Ind.

Sunday, October 27, 1907, was the day for the rededication of the Church of Christ at Hillsboro, Ind. The building has just been remodeled at a cost of $2,250. Four new Sunday-school rooms and a basement have been added, making the house the best equipped, the most commodious and the most handsome of any building of the brotherhood in Fountain county. S. S. Jones, of Danville, Ill., preached a dedicatory sermon and made a plea that called forth such a hearty response that more than enough money was provided for. Before the day of dedication $1,580 had been paid to the treasurer. Brother Jones called for $700 additional, and the pledges totaled $800.

The church is one of the oldest in this part of the state. It was in the autumn of 1873 that a few faithful Disciples called upon L. C. Warren to hold them a meeting. The M. E. church was secured. After the delivery of a few sermons the interest became so intense that it was expedient to move into other quarters. Consequently some of the sisters scrubbed out and thoroughly cleaned the old school house, where the meeting was continued, and finally closed with 75 additions. During the progress of the meeting brethren were busy raising money for building purposes. A lot was donated by J. J. Williams. Three trustees were elected and a building committee appointed. On the third Lord's day of July, 1874, O. A. Burgess was called upon to deliver the dedicatory sermon. On Monday following the church was formally constituted.

Since then this congregation has been served by some eminent men. Among them are L. C. Warren, James Conner, J. M. Canfield, O. P. Badger, W. H. Kerr, B. F. Daily and A. L. Crim. Prominent among the young men whose service has been more recent and whose names are inseparably linked with the progress of the church are George A. Watkins and W. H. Alford. The congregation is now being served by the writer.

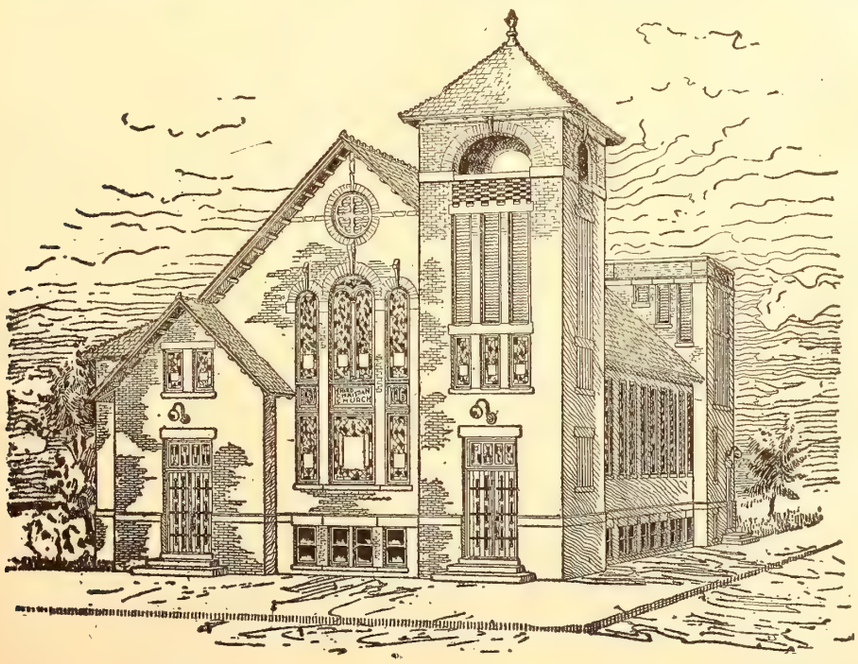
Youngstown, Ohio.

The Hillman Street Christian Church, Youngstown, O., was dedicated by F. M. Rains. He raised about $8,000 in cash and pledges. The church was planted by the Welsh Missionary Society of Mahoning and Trumbull counties. Alanson Wilcox was chosen evangelist. During July, 1900, the old structure was erected and in the following November was dedicated to the worship of God. Brother Wilcox started a Bible school with 94 in attendance, which has enjoyed a steady growth until the present enrollment is about 300.



F. D. Draper, Youngstown, O.

The church, which was organized with sixty charter members, now has 236, has enjoyed the blessing of two faithful ministers in Brother Wilcox and L. J. McConnell. Much credit is due them for the happy condition of things. The present minister has been on the field two years, and with the same enthusiasm the work has continued to grow. In that time 96 have been added to the church. Never did he meet with a more devoted, conscientious, untiring and united people than in Hillman Street Church.

The new church home is colonial and of modest design, covering an area of 4,500 square feet. The building is of brick veneer with trimming of stone. The basement is of brick and has three entrances at grade lines; also from these same entrances you reach the auditorium. The basement will be used for Bible school work and has a seating capacity of about 450. Aside from this, in the basement is located a kitchen, a serving-room, a check room, a steam heating plant and all necessary closet room. The auditorium on the first floor has a seating capacity of 350 and gallery of 150. Opening from the side of the auditorium, with sliding doors, is the overflow room, seating 100, and opening from the rear a parlor, seating 50, making a total seating capacity of 650. From the side entrance alone you reach the auditorium, the Bible school room, the pastor's study, the library and boys' reading room. Not including either auditorium there is ample room for Bible school work. Considering the economy in construction, etc., we feel we have incorporated in this plan requirements for effectual church and Sunday-school work. We have secured Roland A. Nichols for a meeting in January, and we are aiming for large things in our Master's kingdom.

F. D. Draper, Minister.

Hillman Street Christian Church, Youngstown, O.

Omaha, Neb.

S. D. Dutcher has done great things for the First Christian Church, at Omaha, Neb., and he has been enthusiastically supported by the congregation of his church. A beautiful new building has just been dedicated by Z. T. Sweeney, and we present on this page a photograph of it and the pastor of the church. Brother Sweeney pronounces it one of the most beautiful and practical church buildings of any in our brotherhood. It is located centrally in the best part of the city, on the corner of Twenty-sixth and Harney. The building and lot cost $60,000, $18,000 of which remained to be provided for on dedication day, and in a short period more than $20,000 was pledged, thus amply covering the full cost. In view of the fact that there is little wealth in the congregation, this is a great victory and an inspiration to the whole state.

The structure is of Doric Greek architecture, massive stone columns being on two sides of the building. The basement is devoted to Sunday-school and other purposes. Broad stone steps lead to the second floor where there are parlors and all modern conveniences for social life, in addition to a fine audience room furnished in mahogany and graced with a pipe organ, the gift of Dr. Mercer.

Brother Dutcher is now president of the ministerial association of Omaha, and holds a place of honor in that city. With two vigorous churches led by aggressive ministers, our cause now has a bright outlook, not only in Omaha, but through this leadership it will impress itself upon the state as never before.

Fitzgerald, Ga.

On October 6 occurred the dedication services of the Central Christian Church at Fitzgerald, Ga. It was the intention to raise $1,000, but President T. E. Cramblett, of Bethany College, as usual, surprised the people and brought the amount to over $2,000. N. G. Buckley, the retiring minister, has done a noble service for Fitzgerald and is much missed by his many friends. G. A. Maldoon, Bethany College '07, succeeded Brother Buckley, and is endeavoring to carry on the work to a glorious end. The Central Christian Church has the best building in town and an excellent opportunity to preach Christ and unity in his service.

Fitzgerald is a flourishing town of nearly ten thousand people and growing continually. It affords excellent opportunity for young business men. The climate is fine and many people from the North are making their permanent home here. There is no other Christian church within fifty miles of this place. The need of workers is great.

George A. Maldoon.

—Romans 14:12-23.

Memory verses, 19-21.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Judge this rather, that no man put a stumbling block or an occasion to fall in his brother's way.—Rom. 14:13.

This fourteenth chapter of Romans states two general principles which Paul applies first to the particular question of the propriety of eating certain kinds of meats and then to the larger question of Christian liberty and Christian conduct as a whole.

The first principle is that Christians should not judge each other. There are differences of faith and differences of opinion as to the propriety of certain form of conduct. Each man is responsible to God. If my neighbor does things of which I can not approve, it is not my place to be offended by it, or to denounce him, or to imitate his example though not having his opinion. If my neighbor, believing a certain thing to be right, does it, and I, although believing it to be wrong, also do it, I am not really following his example. For him it was not sin; for me it is.

Perhaps Jesus meant his words to be taken more nearly in a literal sense than we usually suppose when he said, "Judge not." An eminent professor of philosophy and ethics has said that no man is ever justified in passing an unfavorable judgment upon any act of another man unless he intends to do something about it. There must, of course, be a judgment that something is wrong before there can be any effort to right that wrong. I can not, for example, fight the saloon unless I am convinced that the selling of liquor is wrong. This involves passing judgment, to some extent, upon the saloonkeeper. But I have no right to pass even so much of a judgment upon him unless I am prepared to follow up my judgment by some sort of effort to remedy the condition which I have pronounced wrong. Whether or not this criterion is universally applicable, it would certainly put an end to a vast amount of idle and purposeless criticism.

No man liveth or dieth to himself, says Paul (Rom. 14:7). The context clearly shows that this is not intended as a statement of the undoubted fact that men influence each other. It is rather a statement of the immediate responsibility of all men to God. We live not unto ourselves but unto God. That being the case, so long as we live by the best guidance of an enlightened conscience, let us not be troubled by the criticism of other men, and let us not trouble other men with our criticisms regarding matters which, after all, are questions between themselves and their Lord.

The second principle is that, while abstaining from the criticism of others, we should be stern critics of ourselves. In particular we should see to it that mere trifles of opinion or customs are not allowed to interfere with the really important interests of life. The strongest verse in this part of the argument is this: "Destroy not with thy meat him for whom Christ died." This is the strongest statement of the value of a man. Man, when his value is stated in terms of Christ's love and suffering, will appear to any Christian to be well worth the sacrifice of some of our own private preferences and desires.

The Kingdom of God is not eating and drinking, but righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Spirit. Here the apostle warns against narrow and petty views of what religion is. It does not consist in eating this or abstaining from that. It is not determined by diet or social usage or dress or manner of speech. These things are of importance only as they are surface indications of something which lies far below the surface of life, namely, that righteousness and peace and joy which are found only in and through the Holy Spirit. The wider apprehension of this larger and deeper view of religion will have two effects. First, it will make the "strong Christian" willing to give up any practice which he sees may lead his weaker brother astray; second, it will strengthen the weak brother so that he will not be led astray by following with a doubtful conscience every example which he sees set by others with a good conscience.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

By Charles Blanchard.

Not Now but Afterwards.

Topic November 20, Heb. 12:11; 1 Peter 1:3-13.

"What I do now ye know not but ye shall know hereafter." It is the Master's assurance and gracious promise. It is Love's promise and Love will not fail us at the last. This world is his who holdeth the oceans in the hollow of his hand and who upholdeth all things by the word of his power. All things are ours in him. The future belongs to the people of God. The treasures of truth and the triumphs of the truth are in our hands. The Christ of the centuries awaits the fulfilling of the promises of the ages. "He shall not fail nor be discouraged till he hath set judgment in the earth. The isles also wait for his law." And while he waits we must work, for upon us the ends of the earth have come. We are the heirs of the ages, if so be we are the children of God and joint heirs with the Christ to an inheritance incorruptible and unfailing, which fadeth not away. Eternal life and eternal things are ours. Immortality is the portion of his people. It is the gift of God to such as seek for glory, honor, immortality and eternal life. We walk amid the shadows now, but above us the star of hope is shining. The Sun of Righteousness hath arisen upon us with healing in his wings. But as the world lies at times in its own shadow, so we walk sometimes in our own shadows. Night belongs to the earth. It is but its own shadow. Our doubts are caused by our walking with our faces earthward. These light afflictions, which are but for the moment, work out for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory, while we look not on the things that are seen, but on the things that are not seen; for the things that are seen are temporal but the unseen things are eternal. It is the upward look that lightens the way and the load. Hope sings in the heart and hushes the murmuring plaint. Patience prevails. Love never faileth. Grant us the waiting heart, O my Master, the while we walk in the midst of the shadows and the deepening darkness that gathers around our earthly pathways. The way is weary, hands grow nerveless and feet lag in the dusty and dreary way. We can not see into the dim future. Our eyes are holden. Go thou with us our Emmaus way. Break the bread which thou hast blessed for us. As our days are so shall our strength be. Grant unto us shoes of iron and brass. We walk our wilderness way, as thy people of old. Give us bread out of heaven to eat. Help us that we may eat of that true bread that came down out of heaven and which giveth light to the world. We are hungry—feed us. We are thirsty—give us to drink of living waters. Grant that the trial of our faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, may be found unto praise and honor and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ; whom having not seen we love; in whom, though now we see him not, yet believing, we rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory, receiving the end of our faith, even the salvation of our souls. Of which salvation the prophets have enquired and searched diligently; which things the angels desired to look into, but which are brought unto us in the revelation of Jesus Christ. Wherefore let us gird up our loins, be sober and hope unto the end. Our help is from the Lord. Our hope is in him. Our expectation is from him, therefore we can wait.

S. Topic.

In 1905 there came to this country 1,026,499 immigrants. Of this vast multitude Italy furnished nearly twice as many as any other nation—over 225,000. In that year there came 129,910 Hebrews, 102,137 Poles, 82,000 Germans, and 62,284 Scandinavians. In 1906 the immigration was larger than in 1905 by nearly 75,000.

The religious character of this vast immigration has greatly changed in recent years. Whereas it was formerly largely Protestant, it is now very largely Catholic. Fifty years ago Austria-Hungary, Italy, Poland and Russia furnished only four-tenths per cent of immigration. This percentage has rapidly risen until since 1900 it has ben 70 per cent.

"We may well ask," says Josiah Strong, "whether this insweeping immigration is to foreignize us, or we are to Americanize it." Our safety demands the assimilation of these strange populations. It is a great problem, and the Protestant churches of this country are largely responsible for its solution.

A Roman Catholic priest recently made the statement that if they can hold the Catholic immigrants true to their church, this country, at the present rate of immigration, will have a majority of Catholics within twenty-five years. It is a startling yet true statement.

Our country ought to remain, as it has been in the past, pervasively Christian and Protestant. Protestant Home Missions is the prime agency by which this can be accomplished. It is the one practical, sensible and effectual way of dealing with the perplexing problem of immigration. The great duty of the present hour is to enlarge, strengthen and push forward vigorously the work of home missions.

Charles F. Aked, in his inaugural sermon in the New York Avenue Baptist Church, speaking of the vast numbers and varied character of the immigrants coming to this country, "The quickest way, the most economical and the most permanent way of making of these people good Americans and good patriots is to make them good Christians. To you and me, who know, and to men and women like us, is entrusted this solemn responsibility and the splendid privilege."

It is personal work which counts most, such missionary work as you and I can do without change of residence or occupation. "It is my firm conviction," said Felix Adler, "that no well-to-do family should be without the bonds of relation, of sympathetic and helpful relation, to some one or more poor families in the neighborhood."

Have we not neglected too much the foreigner in our own neighborhood? He is as much a stranger to us as if he were a thousand miles away. "When Christians begin to bring themselves into the right personal relations with the foreigners, the foreigners will begin the process of Americanization forthwith." A good place to begin is on our own street, right in our own community.

What one woman can do, by thorough consecration and perseverance, is illustrated by Jane Addams, of Chicago, one of the leading settlement workers in America, and founder of Hull House, located in the midst of the densest foreign population of that city. "She has been the friend of thousands of troubled mothers, the inspirer of multitudes of boys and girls, young men and women." Her Christian influence touches almost every phase of social and moral life in the great city of Chicago.

The church is more awake now than ever before to the necessity of mission work among and in behalf of our large foreign population. "Scores of heroic men and women are giving their lives to the cause of social betterment; thousands of immigrant children are growing up into splendid American manhood and womanhood; the light of American ideals is penetrating many of the dark places."

DOWLING, the greatest authority among us on such matters, we called MARION STEVENSON, with his brilliant intellect, great heart power, and sanctified ambition to serve well his day and generation as an interpreter and teacher of the Word.

Quickly following his advent into this House were prepared the following

Squally Weather.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

The agitation of new questions has split every church in Christendom, and it is a sad comment that those questions were nearly all of the schools. It is even sadder that the great moral questions in their highest agitation have so seldom divided and have healed so much easier than those of the creed, as instance the slavery question, and now the liquor question and Rockefeller money. There never was a sharper or more direct issue in the history of the race than that between the church and the saloon. The saloon has every element of sin and crime, and yet the church is so much at peace with it that they live and prosper side by side.

The evil of being creed-bound in our church relations is apparent to all who will think. It puts away from us the moral distinctions which alone can separate us from God. But still worse than being creed-bound is to be anticreed-bound, and so absorbed in our protest as to spend our endeavors against creedism, rather than against the great sins of the world, and so be no better prepared to meet the oncoming tides of organic sin than others.

If we stop to ask, what is Christianity to do for the world, where shall we find an actual answer? The writer feels safe within the lines of truth in saying that at no time since the close of the first century has the Church ever faced its greatest enemy, which is world religion.

The Country Churches.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

For several years I have been very deeply interested in this subject and am truly glad to see the wisdom manifested by THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in introducing this subject at this time.

I think the "Country Church Problem" will be solved when country church leaders cease striving to put on "city airs" and city church leaders live as humble and pure lives as they did when living in the country, for a large majority of the zealous church workers of the cities were reared on farms. There would exist a more hearty co-operation between them if the city brethren would erect plainer houses of worship in which the common people would feel at home in plain clothes, and the country brethren would build better church houses and keep them cleaner and more comfortable than many of them are.

A very large majority of the 1,300,000 members of the Christian Church were converted in the country churches, and this fact goes to prove that the gospel as preached by Christian preachers wields a deeper influence over common people than over so-called aristocracy, as it did in the days of Christ when "He preached to the common people and they heard him gladly." So let us labor to draw the common people to Christ.

The most of my preaching life has been spent with city churches, but six years ago I resolved to give my attention wholly to weak and neglected country churches, and I rejoice over the results which I can not now take time and space to detail. Of course, I have another profession which assisted in my support. We need more men who can do something more than preach for a living to go out and plant and strengthen rural churches.

Strife and differences between churches, pulpits and religious papers is more readily condemned by the plain, honest toilers of the country church and this has much to do in discouraging them in co-operative efforts. A. L. McQuary.

BALE.

George W. Bale was born in Stark county, Ohio, November 7, 1834, and died at his home in Iowa City, Iowa, October 18, 1907, in his seventy-third year. He was a charter member of the Iowa City Church of Christ, and was closely identified with all of its interests till the close of his earthly life, and in his death the church sustains an irreparable loss. Seldom do we find a man in whom the attributes of Christian manhood were so harmoniously blended. In 1859 he was married to Charlotte Morgan. Six children were born to them, four of whom are living and share the bereavement with the mother. A daughter and son, Edith and Alvin, preceded their father to the better land. Those who remain are William G. Bale, of Winnipeg; George W. Bale, jr., of Estherville, Iowa; Bert F. Bale and Mrs. Anna F. Spencer, both of Pleasant Valley, Joanson county, Iowa. The funeral was held from his late home in Iowa City, conducted by Percy Leach, the present minister of the Iowa City church, and T. J. Dow, of Minneapolis, Minn., a former pastor. T. J. Dow.

BERRY.

J. F. Berry was born near Washington, Ill., November 20, 1836. He was educated at Eureka and Bethany, graduating from Bethany in 1867. He began preaching in 1859, and faithfully continued until ill health compelled him to cease a few years ago. On March 26, 1868, he was married to Julia M. Parmley, who survives him. Eight children blessed their home, of whom four sons and two daughters are living. Brother Berry was an earnest and zealous preacher of the Word, wise in his methods, patient and true to the cross. He ministered in West Virginia, Iowa, Illinois, Kansas, Nebraska, Georgia and Florida. He passed on before us October 9, 1907, at Dexter, Mo. George Thom Smith.

Dexter, Mo.

BROOKS.

At his home in Nevada, Mo., on October 20, W. C. Brooks, aged 87 years, passed to his reward. Brother Brooks was born in Alabama, grew to manhood in Mississippi, but for a number of years had made his home in Nevada. At Columbus, Miss., at the age of 25 years, he obeyed the gospel under the ministry of Alexander Campbell, who was on a preaching tour through the South. He was, at the time of his death, one of the most beloved and honored private citizens of our community. He was deprived almost entirely of his eyesight in his declining years, but the eye of faith grew stronger, so that "it was light at eventide" when the angels came to bear him over the river to that radiant shore of an eternal day. W. W. Burks.

COLCORD.

Our honored and greatly beloved brother, R. B. Colcord, died at his home in Pasadena, Cal., October 13, 1907. He was a pillar in the church for many years. He united with the Christian church under the ministry of Knowles Shaw in 1875, and became a charter member and an elder in the church in Sterling, Ill. He was called to the same office by the church in Pasadena. He endeared himself to the people by his loving and faithful leadership. His last words were concerning the faith which, by the grace given unto him, he had been able to keep. He was a prince and a great man in Israel. By reason of his strength his years became four-score. He was full of the Holy Spirit and of faith. Such a life can not be terminated. He being dead, yet speaketh, and his works follow after him. Brother Colcord's daughters, Miss Luella and Mrs. G. W. Pearl, are here in Pasadena.

DAVISS.

Caroline Johnson-Daviss was born June 20, 1817, and departed this life September 25, 1907, aged 90 years, 3 months and 5 days. At the age of 12 she made the good confession and ever since has lived a beautiful Christian life. She was married in 1832 to John Daviss, who preceded her to the homeland twenty-three years ago. To this union were born eleven children, of whom are living: Will, of Mulkeytown; Nancy Yancey, of Duquoin, Ill; Jack, of Anna, Ill.; Jane Isabelle, of Murphysboro, Ill. She leaves two sisters and three brothers, all of whom reside in Kentucky, to mourn her loss, besides a host of distant relatives and friends. Her life was long and full of kind thoughts and gentle influences. Funeral services were conducted by Ernest Reed, her pastor in the church at Mulkeytown.

Ernest Reed, Pastor.

GOODIN.

Hardin Goodin was born near Knoxville, Tenn., October 21, 1813. He died near Pittsfield, Ill., September 30, 1907. He was a member of the Christian church nearly seventy years, and for a long period of his life was an elder and preacher. He married Rebecca Kinman March 15, 1835, and that union lasted almost seventy years. Seventy descendants survive him. W. H. Cannon.

Lincoln, Ill.

GWIN.

William W. Gwin was born in Indiana September 29, 1827, and died at his home in Keota, Iowa, October 17, 1907, aged 80 years and 18 days. Early in life he gave his heart to the Lord Jesus Christ, and honored his confession with a noble, consistent, Christian life. He was a charter member of the Christian church of Keota, its first elder, a trustee and president of the official board. These positions he held at the time of his death. He is survived by three sons and three daughters and his aged companion. Brother Gwin was a reader of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST from the first. Funeral service was conducted by Leon F. Davis.

SELLARDS.

Mary A. Foster was born in Jackson county, Ohio, March 25, 1836. In 1857 she was married to D. F. Sellards. To this union seven children were born—six boys and one girl. In 1863 Mr. and Mrs. Sellards moved to Mt. Ayr, Iowa, where they remained till 1901, when they came to Clarinda. Mrs. Sellards was a woman of beautiful character, and was loved and admired by all who knew her. Her hopeful face and winning smile were always a blessing to those who came in contact with her. She united with the Christian church a half century ago, and was a faithful and consistent member until the time of her death on October 3, 1907. The husband and four children have preceded her to the better life. A host of friends extend their warmest sympathies to the bereaved children—D. F. Sellards, of Gravity; J. A. Sellards, of Dallas Center; Dr. J. W. Sellards, of Clarinda, and their families. W. T. Fisher.

Clarinda, Iowa.

STONE.

Richard Franklin Stone was born January 8, 1828, and died in Palmyra, Mo., September 17, 1907. For many years he lived in Adams county, Illinois, where he married his faithful wife and they reared to manhood two sons who, with their mother and five grandchildren, mourn his departure. Few men had a kinder or more generous heart than Brother Stone. While he fell short of what he desired to be he clung in his thought to Christ and was ever ready to do what he could for the church. I ever felt he was my friend through the long years of our acquaintance. E. J. Lampton.

WALKER.

Louisa W. Walker, wife of Elder John W. Walker, departed this life March 26, 1907, aged 63 years, 6 months and 24 days. She was a true wife, affectionate mother and an intelligent Bible and sacred literature student, as well as an industrious, faithful Christian.

The Spendthrift.

He left so little, did you say?
He had so brief a time to stay.
'Twas hardly worth his while to gather
Dross of our little earthly day.

The things that other people prize
He gave to others, being wise,
Being so heavenly foolish rather,
That he kept his gains for Paradise.

Hardly a keepsake did he leave,
And all his gold was fugitive.
He kept those things that will not perish,
For him the widow and orphan grieve.

He gave with a light laugh indeed,
As he and gold were ill agreed;
Held it the poorest thing to cherish,
Saved that it filled another's need.

He had his Pilgrim's Scrip of Hope,
And Living Waters in his cup,
The Staff of Life that still suffices
The stumbling soul, to lift it up.

Being so soon a traveler,
Of earthly things he had no care;
But on the road that's Paradise
He went the lighter, being bare.

Who moves about from place to place
And whispers to the worlds of space

But the Middleton people had not been found napping; they had sent a stenographer to the meeting to report the actions and deliberations of that body from the first, and this person kept them posted by private wire direct. So that as soon as the committee's work was ready, he had it down in short hand and within a half hour it was before the representatives in Middleton, who armed themselves with various necessary documents, among the rest Judge Taylor's strange court report and proceedings; Dr. Reid's articles that had been rejected by the "Times," and in fact all the articles that had been printed or written, which President Brown had preserved in scrapbooks and letter-press files.

The delegation consisted of over fifty persons, most of whom had been former residents of Eaton. They sat in a body and presented a splendid appearance on that morning of the controversy. The governor of the state had heard of the stir, and he also took a seat with the Middleton people, and several other dignitaries with him. To the surprise of the conference and the Middleton people, the committee had had the articles of the "Phoenix World" and the defunct "Times" reprinted in circular form and placed in the hands of every member of the council. But Charlie and his "Mack bride," as he called her, were sufficient for the occasion and had copies of the answers and court reports on hand, and at the proper time these were distributed also.

The attack was most virulent indeed, so acrimonious were the accusations, that even the chairman was moved to call the speakers down to greater moderation of speech and the use of language that became a body of the dignity and purpose for which this one was assembled.

The principal points of accusation were: First, the unscriptural and unwarranted holdings of the new body; such as, healing by faith without the use of means; the common holdings of property with no individual title; the requirement of tithes and excessive offerings, all of which impoverished the people and gave them no opportunity to accumulate property in their own rights and left them liable to become state and county charges and the like. The organization was next attacked as being inimical to the church that was organized by the Lord Jesus Christ and set forth in the writings of his apostles. Its missionary activities, both home and foreign, resulting in the destruction of the church and its organizations and the proselyting of its membership to that which has no church, but a loose order of Socialists. Third, the climax of the attack was reached when they invaded the question of the order being an immoral one, and having sprung from people of doubtful and pernicious record and living in a worse state than polygamy.

The attack had overreached itself, for even the council for the most part were displeased with the methods pursued by the committee. But it was the turn of the Middleton people to now occupy the floor, and the president of the assembly, who was also mayor of the city, told how he had lived in the country where Middleton had sprung up and how it had originated. He also gave some points of its progress and its present marvelous prosperity and the splendid condition of its people; its poor and its rich dwelling together and the Lord's blessing resting upon them alike. His speech was of such noble spiritual tone, with no retaliation or flinging back, such as might have been expected, that all began to admire the man if not the cause. But a large majority were convinced of the cause being a just and righteous one before he finished.

The next man who came upon the rostrum was the president of the bank and the treasurer of the city, who gave the financial working of the plan and also incidentally touched upon the prosperous condition of the people, whose deposits he had charge of, saying "There is scarcely a man, woman or child in the whole community that has not a deposit in the bank ranging from $10 to $20,000."

The next man who was permitted to take the floor was Dr. Reid, who, in a masterful speech, told of the things his eyes had seen, in the practice of the presence of God's spirit, for healing the sick. He also told of the hospital and the noble corps of Christian physicians, that they had engaged; and how they had many applications from without, which they had to refuse—three out of five—for want of accommodations. And that a far less per cent of deaths occurred with them than with any other hospital in the wide world, and he invited a careful investigation of all their methods and practices. It was true that they prayed for the sick and led as many as possible to trust God alone for their healing, without other means; but as there were many who were without faith, and could not be led to trust God, without such things to lean upon, they invariably made a difference and accommodated such with means. Then there were a class of unfortunate people, who needed habits corrected; tumors removed or simple food remedies, which they used wisdom in administering, according to their needs. They often acted as a tender, wise mother with children. He made it very plain that all good and wise methods that science had discovered were not despised or neglected, while at the same time they certainly did make a great deal of faith and prayer, which they believed were given for God's truly spiritual-minded children for all time and not to be put aside for anything.

Charles Taylor next came forward and told the story of the persecutions and how the articles appeared, presenting as he did the court report of his deceased father and the other letters and articles in correction of the slanderous circulars that were already in the hands of the council. This produced a profound sensation and was a master stroke to introduce President Brown, who took up the objections of their plan being unscriptural and socialistic; and that it was inimical to the Church as organized by Master; and that it proselyted and destroyed that institution.

"Tell me, gentlemen," said he, after he had taken up the scriptural aspect, "which of the hundreds upon hundreds of the different denominations in the world to-day, have the church as organized by our Lord Jesus Christ, and we shall have a basis for this contention; otherwise it is not worthy that we contend about it. Did the Master organize a church, in the sense of present day organizations? Or did he proclaim a kingdom, which was left without an outward expression? Truly he spoke of the Ekklesia and have we not as much right as any one else to take the definition of that word, which all lexicographers admit to be the "called together," or "called out" congregation or assembly, and by mediaeval translation and invention came to be called church. Thus we choose to call our organization after the more primitive term, translated into the simplest and most direct meaning possible; and so far as being guilty of proselyting or seeking to destroy any other organization, we plead not guilty to the charge. We have been put to our wits' ends to keep thousands upon thousands from coming to us, for the reason that we could not prepare room and place for them fast enough.

Our missionaries have gone out upon the simple command of our Lord and Saviour to disciple all nations, and if the missionaries of other denominations have come to them with their converts begging to be taken into our system, because, as they testify, ours appears to them more scriptural and better adapted to missionary effort than those to which they are attached, we are in nowise culpable as any one of you would do the same, and do so every year. In fact, brethren, it has been the fond hope of about every denomination thus far started, to absorb the rest and to be found the chosen of God in bringing the world to Christ. Our system, as has been shown by the able mayor of our city, was forced upon us by the circumstances we found ourselves in at the close of what was one of the most remarkable awakenings of the age in these regions. We found ourselves at a point of defeat, because of the denominational preferences expressed by the representatives of some twelve sects, hence we all agreed to drop our sectarian preferences and to go back a step beyond that taken by the founders of these excellent systems, and even drop the word church, using the more primitive term, Christian Congregation. And why should we fear reproach for this? Does not the fruit borne bear witness to the tree?"

At this point a gentleman arose in the audience and began to make his way toward the platform. President Brown saw that it was Brother Pratt, the evangelist, who about nine years before had opened the Word to him and the people of Middleton so effectually. He had not appeared before, for the reason that his work had called him to the far East and just at this time he had returned to the Pacific States. When Mr. Brown saw him coming forward he ceased speaking and stepped down to grasp his hand, saying: "Here is the very man who is responsible under God for the awakening that led up to these remarkable results."

Millions of Reason for Confidence.

Our farms produce more than $6,500,000,000 per annum, and the prospect is good for an average crop. Our mines yield more than $1,500,000,000 and our forests more than $1,000,000,000, and neither of these sources of wealth has been exhausted. The output of factories in other than food products is $12,000,000,000, and no fires have been extinguished. The railways earn more than $2,000,000,000, and they are all in successful operation. The pay rolls of our factories and railways aggregate approximately $3,500,000,000, and the scale of wages has not been reduced. In other words, the real sources of the people's wealth have not yet been affected, and the ability of industrial concerns to pay dividends is not measured by the market price of stocks. Logical reasons for serious conditions are, therefore, wanting. Psychological reasons are never wanting.—Former Secretary Shaw.

The Way the Boy Put It.

Patrick A. Collins, mayor of Boston for a number of years past, believes that a boy's word is worth listening to. One time complaint was made to him that a saloon was located too near a certain public school. The politicians and others interested in keeping the place open urged him not to interfere with the resort. The school authorities desired it closed and removed.

After the mayor had listened to arguments from both sides he said:

"Well, I'm going to let the boys of the school tell me what they think of the place. Send me," he said to the principal of the school, "half a dozen of your brightest boys. I'll listen to them."

The next day half a dozen of the boys, ranging from 10 to 15 years of age, called on the mayor. Each boy gave some reason why he believed the saloon ought to be taken away, until it came to the last one, a youngster of 12. He looked the mayor squarely in the eye, and gave as his reason:

"My school gives me a chance to be mayor of Boston some day; the saloon can't. I think us boys ought to have all the show we can get to be mayor. That's all I know about it."

The mayor threw himself back in his chair and laughed heartily; then, straightening up, he said to the last spokesman:

"My boy, you have said more than did all the politicians and the teachers. You shall have the show to be mayor. That saloon will have to quit business at once."

The boys gave the mayor a hearty cheer, and marched out of his office. They had conquered, and were consequently happy and triumphant.—Congregational Work.

The Foolish Bee.

BY CAL. OGBURN.

A young bee went away from the hive early one morning to gather honey. After flying a long distance it found a great profusion of wild flowers, and began to sip the delicious nectar they contained. How much more pleasant, it thought, than to be shut up in a dingy old hive! So from flower to flower it went, quite unmindful of an approaching storm. When too late, it endeavored to reach home, but was overtaken by the terrific storm and perished.

Young people, may none of you fail to reach home in time! Better start now. There are innocent pleasures and pastimes that are sweet, but if they cause you to forget home, or cease to love it with all your heart, you are in danger notwithstanding the "good time" you are having. There is no place like home. Do not go far away. Bring the honey you have gathered to the home-hive before the storm overtakes you.

Had To Do It.

"See here, Harry," said the boy's father at 5 o'clock in the morning. "Don't make so much noise. Nobody can sleep."

"But I must, papa; it's part of the game. I'm playing I'm an alarm clock."

The Hungry Parrot.

Everybody knows one or more of those conscientious egotists who can not rid themselves of the idea that no one can be trusted to carry out the simplest details of routine work without their personal supervision. It was one of these men who sailed for America, leaving in his brother's care a parrot, of which he was very fond. All the way across the Atlantic he worried about the bird, and no sooner had he landed at New York than he sent over this cablegram to his brother:

"Be sure and feed parrot."

And the brother cabled back:

"Have fed him, but he's hungry again. What shall I do next?"—Tid-Bits.

The Loom of Life.

Life is a flying shuttle. But the pattern grows, the web is wrought. It takes both dark threads and golden to work out God's design. You can not judge the purpose of the Weaver by the thrust of one shuttle or the weave of one thread, whether it be dark or bright. "All things work together for good to them that love God." We are yet on the loom. The shuttles are not yet empty. Give God time to put this and that, dark threads and bright, together, and complete the purpose of his providence. With every new day let us think less of our present desire and more concerning the divine Weaver's design.—G. B. F. Hallock, D. D.

Nuggets From "Success."

The ability to work one's woes up into fun is the art of arts. What a tremendous advantage one has who can do this—who can laugh at his misfortunes.

We grow into the likeness of the thing we habitually contemplate.

Find out what your employer least likes to do and do it for him.

Doing one's best at each moment is all there is of life.

Do not hang a dismal picture on your wall, and do not deal with sables and gloom in your conversation.

Rectitude is only the confirmed habit of doing what is right.

There are a hundred "successful" men for one that is contented.

Beware of looking at sin, for at each view it is apt to become better looking.

Other things equal, it is the noblest man or woman who puts the highest and noblest estimate upon others.

Not a Plain Talker.

"Can your little brother talk, Dorothy?"

"Yeth; but nobody but the dollyth can understand what he thayfh."

A Pertinent Question.

Tommy had ben punished.

"Mamma," he sobbed, "did your mamma whip you when you were little?"

"Yes, when I was naughty."

"And did her mamma whip her when she was little?"

"Yes, Tommy."

"And was she whipped when she was little?"

"Yes."

"Well," inquired the child, his brain cleared by the position he had just occupied, "who started it, anyway?"

A Geyser Clock.

One of the most curious clocks in the world is said to be that which tells the time to the inhabitants of a little American backwoods town. The machinery, which is nothing but a face, hands and lever, is connected with a geyser which shoots out an immense column of hot water every thirty-eight seconds. This spouting never varies to the tenth of a second. Every time the water spouts up it strikes the lever and moves the hands forward thirty-eight seconds.—American Home Monthly.

To Dreamland.

Come, little mischief, get ready to go
On your journey to dreamland, where fairy folk dwell.
Put on your traveling dress, white as snow;
Jump into your boat, as it rocks to and fro,
Glide over the waters that lazily flow
Past the Islands of Nod, where the sleep-lilies grow,
Each drowsily ringing its bell.

Baby will see many wonderful things
When she reaches the shores of the happy Dreamland.
Slower and slower the cradle-boat swings,
Like a tired birdling with soft, drooping wings.
Lower and lower the mother voice sings—
Safely its cargo the little craft brings,
Till its keel gently grates on the sands.

Breaking Sad News.

How often are friends called upon to break the news of sudden and unexpected or approaching death to loved ones. Claudius Clear (Dr. W. Robertson Nicoll, editor of the 'British Weekly,") has received an interesting series of papers showing how bad news has been broken, from which we take the following:

"John B. Gough was visiting the orphanage in company with Spurgeon, and after they returned to the office, Spurgeon asked to be excused. Gough objected, and asked where he was going. He received an evasive reply, and declared his purpose to follow Spurgeon unless specifically informed that he must not. Together they entered the infirmary, and Mr. Spurgeon was soon at the side of a little consumptive, who, as soon as he saw who it was, uplifted a face full of smiles and tears, and began to thank him for the canary bird which chirped in the cage above his head. Spurgeon listened as the frail child told out his joy, and finally said: 'I sent the bird to sing for you until you hear the angels singing.' The boy caught his gracious meaning and lay trembling and silent. Spurgeon folded his arms about him, came to his knees and prayed that God would prepare the boy to hear the angels sing. As he rose to his feet he gave the invalid a kiss, pressed his hand, and went out."

One correspondent wrote Dr. Nicoll: "Years ago, when living in a Lancashire town, my mother engaged a servant from a neighboring village. When the girl had been some little time in residence, there came a knock at the door early one morning. It was opened by one of the family, when the mother of the girl was found standing there. 'I've come to tell our Emma 'er father's dead. 'E choked,' she said."

The following is to be found in Dr. Brown's "Horae Subsecivae":

"On the morning of May 28, 1816, my eldest sister Janet and I were sleeping in the kitchen bed with Tibbie Meek, our only servant. We were all three awakened by a cry of pain—sharp, insufferable, as if one were stung. Years after we two confided to each other, sitting by the burnside, that we thought that 'great cry' which arose at midnight in Egypt must have been like it. We all knew whose voice it was, and, in our night clothes, we ran into the passage, and into the little parlor to the left hand, in which was a closet-bed. We found my father standing before us, erect, his hands clenched in his black hair, his eyes full of misery and amazement, his face white as that of the dead. He frightened us. He saw this, or else his intense will had mastered his agony, for, taking his hands from his head, he said, slowly and gently, 'Let us give thanks,' and turned to a little sofa in the room; there lay our mother, dead. She had long been ailing. I remember her sitting in a shawl—an Indian one with little dark green spots on a light ground—and watching her growing pale with what I afterward knew must have been strong pain. She had, being feverish, slipped out of bed, and 'grandmother,' her mother, seeing her 'change come' had called my father, and they two saw her open her blue, kind, and true eyes, 'comfortable' to us all 'as the day'—I remember them better than those of any one I saw yesterday—and, with one faint look of recognition to him, close them till the time of the restitution of all things."

The choicest example of the gentlest manner of breaking sad news was given by our Lord, when he told his disciples of the death of Lazarus: "He saith unto them, Our friend Lazarus sleepeth; but I go, that I may awake him out of sleep. Then said his disciples, if he sleep, he shall do well. Howbeit Jesus spake of his death; but they thought that he had spoken of taking of rest in sleep. Then said Jesus unto them plainly, Lazarus is dead; and I am glad for your sakes that I was not there, to the intent ye may believe; nevertheless, let us go unto him."

Blessed is the man or woman who in breaking the news of death can by words and tone of voice soften the blow to the stricken hearts. Yet many there are who can do it. They may not be great or learned, but they are wise and Christ-like. It is a grace that should be cultivated, for none knows when he may be called upon to exercise it.

She Had Outside Duties.

The public-spirited lady meets the little boy on the street. Something about his appearance halts her. She stares at him in her near-sighted way.

The Lady—Little boy, haven't you any home?

The Little Boy—Oh, yes'm, I've got a home.

The Lady—And loving parents?

The Little Boy—Yes'm.

The Lady—I'm afraid you do not know what love really is. Do your parents look after your moral welfare?

The Little Boy—Yes'm.

The Lady—Are they bringing you up to be a good and helpful citizen?

The Little Boy—Yes'm.

The Lady—Will you ask your mother to come and hear me talk on "When Does a Mother's Duty to Her Child Begin?" next Saturday afternoon at 3 o'clock at Lyceum Hall?

The Little Boy (explosively)—What's th' matter with you, ma! Don't you know me? I'm your little boy!—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Catarrh of The Stomach

A Most Dangerous Disease, Which Causes Serious Results, Unless Properly Treated.

Catarrh of the Stomach is very common and is known as one of the most obstinate diseases, which when neglected or improperly treated with cheap patent medicines, tonics, drugs, pills, and other secret quack remedies, results in a broken down constitution and often consumption and death.

Catarrh of the Stomach, like every other disease of the stomach, except cancer, is the result of poor digestion. The digestive organs have become weak, there is a lack of gastric juice, your food is only half digested, and as a result you become effected with loss of appetite, pressure and fullness after eating, heartburn, vomiting, waterbrash, tenderness at pit of stomach, slimy tongue, bad taste in the mouth, constipation, pain in limbs and face, sleeplessness, nausea, belching of gas, diarrhoea, sick head aches, dizziness, mental depression, nervous weakness, and many other common symptoms.

If your stomach cannot digest the food you eat, then the stomach needs a rest, as that is the only way you can get rid of your catarrh, but in the meantime your body needs plenty of nourishment, because you must live, and in order to live you must eat, and if you must eat your food must be properly digested, and if your stomach is too weak to do the work, then you must get a substitute that will do the work.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are the only known substitute that will digest your food as well as any healthy stomach. They contain vegetable and fruit essences, aseptic pepsin (gov. test.), golden seal and diastase, the very ele ments necessary to digest all foods.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are not a secret remedy and for that very reason thousands of physicians all over the United States recommend them to their patients for catarrh of the stomach, dyspepsia of all kinds, and other stomach troubles. Experiments and tests have proven that one grain of the active principle contained in these tablets will digest 3,000 grains of food.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are in the form of pleasant tablets or lozenges and are sold in large fifty-cent boxes at all drug stores.

Send us your name and address and we will send you a free sample package. The relief you will get from this trial package alone will convince you of the merits of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. Address F. A. Stuart Co., 150 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

Getting Information Out of Pa.

My pa, he didn't go downtown
Last evening after tea,
But got a book an' settled down
As com'fy as could be.
I tell you I was offul glad
To have my pa about
To answer all the things I had Been tryin' to find out.

And so I asked him why the world
Is round instead of square,
And why the piggies' tails are curled,
And why don't fish breathe air,
And why the moon don't hit a star,
And why the dark is black,
And just how many birds there are,
And will the wind come back.

And why does water stay in wells,
And why do Junebugs hum,
And what's the roar I hear in shells,
And when will Christmas come;
And why the grass is always green,
Instead of sometimes blue,
And why a bean will grow a bean,
And not an apple, too.

And why a horse can't learn to moo,
And why a cow can't neigh,
And do the fairies live on dew,
And what makes hair grow gray.
And then my pa got up an', gee,
The offul words he said!
I hadn't done a thing, but he
Just sent me off to bed.

Advance Society Letters.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

I have just received the thirty-sixth quarterly report of work done in the Advance Society work. It is from Nannie D. Chambers, Richwood, Ky. This prompts me to say a few words about the real work of the Advance Society and what it has accomplished. The first purpose of this society, when it began in the autumn of 1898, is the first purpose of it to-day, nine years later.

The Advance Society is, in the first place, for young people, and, in the second place, for anybody who wants to join a society for the entertainment and improvement of that part of him which nobody can see or know anything about, unless that person uses it in public. I mean the mind. Every one has a mind, more or less, but outsiders can know nothing about it except from the way that person talks or acts.

We children of the Advance Society have made up our minds that we are not going to spend all our reading time on novels and stories. We see many grown people, even grown enough to be married, who will read nothing but novels or the newspapers, and who, for that very reason, are doing very little for their minds.

These people go around and eat as much, and fill up as much space on a crowded bench, as anybody else. But their minds stopped growing ever so long ago, and perhaps they know no more now than they did when they graduated; possibly less.

One thing about people who read nothing but novels—I mean people who love novels and read a good many: They lose interest in the ordinary affairs of life (and there are very few affairs of life that are not ordinary), and they don't like to have company. And, as I say, their minds quit growing. Their minds get small and knotty and unsympathetic, like apples kept in cold storage. Poor, poor people, how I pity them!

I don't mean that it is wrong to read good novels, if you intersperse them with history and poetry and read the Bible every day. A good novel, for instance, like the kind I write, is really a benefit; but too many good novels, taken one after another, are bad for the mind. Everything is that way. I know of nothing more improving and elevating and thoroughly enjoyable than a good sermon when it is twenty minutes long. A good sermon that is twenty-five minutes long is excellent, but it is not quite so good as one of twenty minutes. A splendid discourse of half an hour is a good thing, but there are other things that are better.

So, when we are quite certain that too many novels are injurious, we are also sure that good novels at intervals, say two novels this fall and winter (I am to have two novels published this fall and winter) will be a positive help—to the author, if you buy them.

But the work of the Advance Society is not merely to keep us from reading stories all the time, it is to get us to read other kinds of books. If I were a public speaker and wanted to make a sentence that would sound fairly well, I should say, "Our work is not only negative but positive. A sentence like that sounds well in the profound stillness of the auditorium, and a man who doesn't know how to subtract minus five from plus five, can use it, without saying anything about where he got it.

What are the rules of our society—that society which has members in almost all parts of the known world except Plattsburg, Mo., and Bentonville, Ark. (my two home-towns)? They are very simple—just look at them:

We read at least one verse of the Bible every day.

We read at least five pages every week of a history we are studying at school.

We read 30 lines, at least, of poetry, weekly.

Every week we memorize one quotation from some good author.

We keep an account of our work in a note book.

That is all. Five rules. When these have been kept for 12 weeks, if you will write to me, stating just what you have read and how much, you are placed on the honor list. For instance, to return to our text, Nannie D. Chambers is now placed on the Honor List for the 36th time. That means that for 12 times 36 weeks (let those multiply that who can) she has kept the five rules.

Suppose you forget to read your Bible one day; or to read your five pages of history one week? Well you must begin all over again on that particular quarter; but if you have already been published on our Honor List once, keep 12 more weeks (from the day you forgot), and then you are entitled to a second time on our Honor List, and so on.

When does one join this society? Any day. How much does he pay to become a member? Not a penny. What must he do? Fall to work on the five rules. I'd rather he'd write to me saying he is going to take up the work; but he doesn't even have to do that.

You say, What about that orphan and missionary of the Av. S.? That is purely voluntary business, and has nothing to do with our rules. You say (for it seems you are determined to object). "But do I have to write letters to the Av. S. department?" Certainly not. All you have to do is to keep the five rules.

But, of course, we are always glad to receive letters from our Av. S. members. For instance, here is one from Fred Eagers, Lonly, N. Y.:

"I have not written before, because I wanted to see if I could keep the rules before I did so. I am proud to say that I have kept the rules for 12 weeks, so please put me on the Honor List. I think I am the only one in this part of New York who belongs to the Av. S., but I like to think about those others who are keeping the same rules I keep, even if I never see them. I like the girl from Smithfield; I would like to know where some of our old members are. You see I call them our old members; for, I have read the Av. S. page from the beginning, but never joined till last summer. Give my respects to Felix."

G. Gordon, El Oro, Mex.: "As I came home to-day (Sunday), a fight was on at the bullring, and the rabble were shouting with fiendish glee. This is the first they have had for several months, and I had hoped I would never have to pass another while in El Oro. I think my antipathy to bull-fighting increases apace. It fairly incenses me for this infamous torture of dumb animals to be sanctioned by the laws of any land. I would be ashamed to look at myself in the glass if I had been yelling with delight at the throwing of the cruel darts. An Apache is the victim of chicken-heartedness in comparison. But let us leave this loathsome subject.

"I see Harry Buckley, of Lawrenceburg, Ky., hadn't fallen asleep while you were fabricating your points about that trip to Mexico around the Gulf. Say, man, I am going to send you—let me see—$3 U. S. for Missionary Drusie Malott. I think that girl is O. K., and I want to encourage her in her work, what little I can. I would send more, but as I am to leave El Oro for the States, the trip will about clean me up down to a conservative reserve fund. I will send the $3 the first Monday in November, as I don't want it put on my October expense account. I guarantee you won't publish this in your Av. S. letters—not that I care if you're a 'mindter,' but I 'dessay' you wouldn't 'keer' to see this bunch of English in your page. Old Catawampus, the office cat, has just come around to my desk, and is doing his best to engage me in conversation, but I am loyal to my employer and have cut him off with a few curt remarks. He is now lying on my table beside my typewriter, wearing his accustomed superior air of wisdom, whereas we all know he doesn't know beans."

We are pleased to publish such bunches of English whenever a promise of $3 for our missionary is embodied in them. As to the $3, a cry of joy will go up from us when we get it. As to the writer's antipathy to cats, which he always insists on in his letters, we, for our part, believe it is only half-hearted, and when "G. Gordon" leaves El Oro for the States it wouldn't surprise us if he boxed up Catawampus (just as we did Felix when we left Missouri) and carried his whiskers and hairs with him. But we are sure he'd never admit it if he did.

Our Orphan Charlie, St. Louis: "I have not started to school yet. You see, I am so far advanced that I can not go to school here in the Orphans' Home, and I can not go to the public school because we have contagious diseases, such as sore eyes, whoopingcough, etc., at the home, so the board of health will not permit me to go to the schools in town. I think they have now found me a place where I can stay outside of the Home, that I may go to school.

"Mrs. Harrison bought me a pair of shoes, for which she paid (you will think it an awful price) $3. I also bought some crutches; they cost $1.50. Please send a check to Mrs. Brown, matron of the Christian Orphans' Home, for that amount, and she will pay Mrs. Harrison for the shoes and Mr. Wright for the crutches. If you think $3 a big price for shoes, they must be very cheap in Arkansas. Just recently I bought a pair of $2 shoes, which did not last me over a month. I need a winter suit very bad, and Mrs. Brown asked me to tell you about it. I received a letter from my sister (Bessie) to-day. She says that she is wearing glasses. The doctor told her she would have to wear them all her life. I received your two books, 'In the Days of Jehu' and 'King Saul,' sent me by your mother. I thank her very much."

At no time am I prouder of the voluntary work of the Av. S. and its friends than when I am able to take from our treasury money to buy this orphan a pair of shoes and a pair of crutches. That winter suit is all right; or, as they say down in Mexico, O. K. Tell Mrs. Brown to buy as durable a suit as a limited sum will buy and send me the bill, which I will pay with the money the friends of Charlie have sent me from many states and countries. Let's know the color of it. Personally, I don't like stripes in my clothes, but go ahead and get stripes if that's what you like, for I think they are thrown in free. Of course, you mustn't pay any attention to my notion about what shoes ought to cost. I have been so long in a land where everything is so cheap it hurts your conscience to take it from the counter, that I've lost track of St. Louis prices. But, really, did I say shoes oughtn't to cost $3?

After all, we haven't room for Drusie's letter this week.

Bentonville, Ark.

A Word to the Boys.

The King of England's famous surgeon, Sir Frederick Treves, has this to say to the rising generation. It comes from one who knows:

"Boys, don't bother about genius, and don't worry about being clever. Trust rather to hard work, perseverance, and determination. The best motto for a long march is, 'Don't grumble. Plug on.' You hold your future in your own hands. Never waver in this belief. Don't swagger. The boy who swaggers, like the man who swaggers, has little else that he can do. He is a cheap-jack crying his own paltry wares. It is the empty tin that rattles most. Be honest, be loyal, be kind. Remember that the hardest thing to acquire is the faculty of being unselfish. As a quality it is one of the finest attributes of manliness. Love the sea, the ringing beach and the open down. Keep clean body and mind."

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST

A WEEKLY RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER.

ST. LOUIS, NOVEMBER 21, 1907.

THE HARVEST RECOMPENSE.

THERE'S a glory in the passing of the things that cannot stay,
And a recompense of rapture, rejoicing
with each day:
In the music of the Maying-song of robin and of thrush —
In the trailing of the twilight, in the humor of the hush
Of Nature, listless, lulling, soothing sound and sight,
In the reconciliations of the still and starry night.

There's a glory in the going of the Summer's sun and sky,
In the bounty of the beauty of the things
born but to die;
In the symbols set in dew-drops, seen on every flower and leaf;
In the sunrise of rejoicing, in the sunset of relief;
In the mystery of the marvel of the harvest recompense,
In the coming of the glory here, and in its going hence!

A most efficient aid to a great and successful revival meeting is a generous distribution of CHRISTIAN-EVANGELISTS throughout the community in which it is held. We will furnish them at a low price. Good results are bound to follow.

Do not delay further in sending in your order for 1908 Bible school supplies. There is bound to be a great deluge of orders a little later. It will be an accommodation to us and a good service to your school to have yours sent "before the rush."

George L. Peters of the South Joplin Christian church, Joplin, Mo., is one of the ablest preachers, and yet he gladly acknowledges that he is being greatly assisted by the ministry of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in a multitude of homes of his membership.

We sell the "Garrison Library" complete, including the books Bro. Garrison edited, as well as those of which he is the author, for $9.00. If you have part of the library we will send you the balance for that price and give you credit for the full amount paid for the books you now have.

—Have the secretary of your Aid Society write us for a proposition looking to the introduction of a CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST into every home represented in your congregation. In this way the "Aid" can earn money more rapidly than by quilting or will accomplish more good than by taking subscriptions for secular papers and magazines.

The preacher who is not doing his best to place a Christian paper in every Christian home is neglecting one of the greatest possible opportunities for the development of his church. The preacher is greatly mistaken who thinks soliciting his people to take our papers will in any wise injure his prestige with them. They will have all the more respect for his earnestness and real interest in their welfare.

The Boy Problem. By William Byron Forbush. We originally sold this book for 75 cents. The publishers have raised the price to $1.00. We send it, postpaid, for that, and it is worth it to all parents, Bible school and other teachers and writers. We have the sixth edition which was entirely rewritten.

The Quiet Talk Series. By S. D. Gordon. We have them all—Quiet Talks on Power, Prayer, Service, Jesus and Personal Problems. These books are too widely and favorably known to require commendation from us—simply a notice that we will send them, postpaid, for 75 cents each.

Daybreak in the Dark Continent. By Wilson S. Naylor. This is a vivid portrayal of awful conditions prevailing in Africa. But notwithstanding all the sanguine spirit of the author can see the daybreak. This is one of the strongest appeals to the true, chivalrous missionary spirit now sounding among the churches. Postpaid, 68 cents.

Beautiful Joe. By Marshall Saunders. We have the new and enlarged edition of this classic story of animal life of which more than 500,000 copies have been sold. This is to the canine world all that "Black Beauty" is to the equine. The dog is man's most faithful friend—a millionaire can not buy his affection away from a pauper. This will make a most appropriate Christian present for boys and girls. $1.25, postpaid.

The Price of Africa. By Wilson S. Naylor; 68 cents. This is one of the Forward Mission Study Courses, adopted as the official text-books for mission study classes in the United Society of Christian Endeavor and the Epworth League. The great lives dedicated on the altar of African missions are enumerated, and then a most satisfactory answer is given to the question of "Why This Waste?"

The Uplift of China. By Arthur H. Smith: 68 cents. This is one of the Forward Mission Study Courses. The strength and weakness of the religions of China are stated and discussed, together with conditions both favorable and otherwise to the diffusion of Christianity through that vast empire. At the close of each chapter are appended questions that will insure close attention to the most imporant phases of the problem of the exaltation of the Orient.

CHILDREN'S DAY FOR HOME MISSIONS

W. R. WARREN,
Centennial Secretary

Various aims, purposes and motives lead us to the observance of Children's Day for Home Missions. Supreme among these is loyalty to the Christ. Young and old who will take part in the exercises and the offerings will be made better friends of Christ by the day. The local church will become mightier in its testimony for Christ and in its proclamation of the Gospel by devoting this Lord's day to the larger cause. The co-operation of thousands of churches throughout the country in this happy occasion will glorify the Redeemer's name throughout all the land. Every missionary that the offering sends forth will go out as Paul went, determined to know nothing save Jesus Christ and him crucified.

The realization of the Centennial aim in the doubling of the number of Bible schools observing Children's Day for Home Missions will thus add many new stars to our Saviour's crown. For his sake the least and weakest school should fall into line. For his sake the youngest child and the poorest member should make some offering. He is fighting our battles for us; will any of us dare to desert him in a crisis like this? For in the last analysis every great offering day in the churches and Bible schools is a tremendous battle between Christ and Satan. The enemy of our Redeemer and adversary of our souls wages underhanded and dishonorable warfare. He appeals to prejudice, ignorance, selfishness, indolence and covetousness. Resist the Devil and do your duty.

THE LIVING LINK IDEA

An Address before the Foreign Christian Missionary Society at Norfolk

By L. E. Sellers

The cause of Jesus is in the hands of his friends. With a sublime confidence in our poor human nature our Lord has committed unto us the Living Oracles. Passing by the beings of spirit realms, he has revealed to us his purpose of bringing to every soul in the race the light that saves, and asks us to help him do it. By this one act he makes the chief glory of the Church to consist in her faithful proclamation of the gospel and the purpose of God to be fulfilled in its universal acceptance. He makes us partakers of the divine nature that we might become helpers in a divine enterprise. In one last sentence Jesus calls the Church to do a work different from that of any other institution and vastly more precious.

The sense of possessing a message upon the reception of which the salvation of the nations depends, should make us both grateful and humble. Grateful, because God has so honored us; humble, because its possession is fraught with such tremendous responsibility. The fluctuations of spiritual life and zeal through the centuries have been the exact register of the fidelity of the Church to her mission. In those periods when the purpose of Jesus has gripped the Church, spirituality was dominant and the songs of conquest rang like the battle hymns of a conquering army.

We of to-day are witnesses of a spiritual awakening. Slowly but surely the Church is arousing herself from the lethargy of the past and is reading afresh the great commission. She is becoming conscious of her failures to meet the Lord's expectations, and is inquiring as to ways and means of discharging her simple, supreme duty to the regions beyond. By prayers, conferences and conventions, the leaders of the hosts of Christ are calling for a new definition of personal sacrifice, and heaven bends low with tokens of approval. Tons of literature are informing the Church of the world-wide work, and reports from our noble missionaries burn like fagot fires on the altar of devotion to home. It is mid-morning in the greatest period of the Christian era, and the best is yet to come. It is to be expected that an enterprise so vast and important should involve serious difficulties, hardships and questions that test the faith of the Church. But, brethren, we may say what we will of world-wide missions, we may speak in glittering generalities of the purposes of God and the love of Christ; we may laud to the skies the heroism of missionaries who have blazed a path through trackless continents, and whose lives flash the light of God across the centuries, yet in its last analysis there is just one problem in this missionary enterprise; large, complex, difficult of solution, it is impeding the march of the missionary, hampering God in his providential movements in the race, and the solution of it would, in a generation, in very truth make the kingdoms of this world the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ. That problem is the old, threadbare, uninviting, shunned, oft-misunderstood problem of financial support. This is the crux of the whole matter. Though unpopular in most quarters, it must be proclaimed as the one supreme dynamic yet to be devoted to the work of world-wide conquest. A billion people just now are waiting for the gospel; the gospel is in the hands of consecrated messengers; the messengers wait to be sent and supported by the Church; the Church, pleading extenuating circumstances, at last lays upon the altar of devotion the gold that neither reduces her fabulous wealth, nor her comforts nor her luxuries.

Again, be it said that the problem of Christendom is the christianization of her wealth. The Protestant Christians of the United States were worth last year $24,000,000,000, and added to their wealth last year $800,000,000. What they gave to the foreign mission cause was one-four-thousandth of their wealth; was one-twelfth of a tithe, not of their income, but of what they saved out of their income last year. If they had given one-tenth of what they saved out of their income, they would have multiplied their gifts to foreign missions 1,200 per cent.

Still, in these marvelous resources of the Church, though selfishly administered, there are signs of cheer and promise. Is it not a significant fact that just at the time when the Church is most bountifully blest in material things, doors have been flung open making entrance to all nations with the gospel easier than ever before. This is but another way of saying that there is a marvelous conjunction of favorable conditions. On the field nations weary of idols, conscious of degradation, ignorance and soul hunger, and awaking to the progress of the western world. At home a mighty army of consecrated men and women offer

Whose Fault?

The politicians are of many minds as to the degree of responsibility which the President must bear for the present financial condition of the country. His extreme opponents throw the whole blame upon him. Most critics who are inclined to be at all fair recognize that the prevalence of speculation, the misuse of trust funds, the departure of many banking institutions from the safe lines of conservative and legitimate banking in the hope of making large profits by manipulation of the stock market, the gradual rise of prices to an abnormally high level, and the general extravagance among all classes which has been encouraged by the long-continued era of prosperity, have brought the country to a condition where it was ripe and ready for financial disaster. The President's anti-trust agitations, they say, have furnished the immediate occasion for the collapse. The Boston "Traveler," quoted approvingly by "Harper's Weekly," says: "The President found the financial edifice. He observed the high explosives surrounding it. He was responsible for neither the presence nor the character of these elements. He merely applied the match that produced the explosion, and in the same sportsmanlike spirit he admires the activity of Mr. Cortelyou, who was first on the scense with his ambulance, and has no objections to having us believe he sent him to the explosion."

Lack of Confidence.

It is a truth, and a commonplace, especially current at such crises as this, to say that a stringency in the money market is due to lack of confidence. When every man wants to get all of his money in gold or bank-notes and is afraid to leave it on deposit in bank, it is suddenly discovered that there is not enough cash to go around. Ordinarily you can get your bank-balance in cash if you want it, but when everybody wants the same thing at the same time there is not enough money in existence to supply all at once. The trouble is not lack of money, but lack of confidence. First, the depositors lack confidence in the banks; second, they lack confidence in their fellow-depositors. The loss of confidence in the banks was, in the main, unreasonable, for most of the banks are sound and safe. But it was discovered that some great eastern bank had been engaging unsuccessfully in speculative high finance. Depositors believed that their money was being used to play the markets under conditions which gave the big bankers all the chance of winning and left upon themselves all the possible losses. Then came the run on the Knickerbocker Trust Company and the closing of its doors. Then every man who had a dollar clung to it, and every man who had a cheque or a deposit slip for a dollar tried to cash it. The thoughtful man knew that the country was prosperous and the banks generally sound, and that there was no real ground for a panic, but he was afraid that so many fools would be cashing all their cheques and hoarding all their cash that it would not be possible for him to get even what he actually needed. So the thoughtful man, who had confidence in his bank but not in his fellow-depositors, acted very much like the man who had no confidence in anybody. The money of the country was tied up at once. The adoption of clearing-house certificates was a wise expedient for the protection of all parties. It affords an increase in the amount of circulating currency. No one wants to hoard clearing-house certificates. In fact, a good many people are rather anxious to get rid of them for fear they may not be good. Moreover it accomplishes a gradual return of confidence as people find that, while they can not get real money at the bank, they can get something that serves most purposes about as well. The worst is past. The return to normal conditions may not be immediate but it will probably bring with it a return to saner methods and more conservative standards than those which have lately prevailed.

The Reaction.

The danger now is that the movement for the control of corporations and the reform of industrial conditions generally will receive a backset from the experience of the present month. It is easy to say now that the trouble has been caused by governmental interference with private business, and that therefore the only safe course is for the government to take its hands off and let capital choose its own course. It does not follow. Commercial wrongs still need to be righted. Monopolies still need to be broken up. The railroads still need regulation. Standard Oil still needs to be prosecuted for rebating. The present flurry was not caused by a loss of public confidence in the earning power of those corporations which have lately been under fire and which are being made subject to governmental regulation, and there is no reason why an unreasonable fear of a recurrence of trouble in the money market should be allowed to interfere with a continuance of the effort to bring them under a proper control.

"In God We Trust."

We are told that the design for the new gold coinage does not include the motto: "In God We Trust." The President is responsible for the omission. Congress has never taken any action in the matter, one way or the other. Whoever got up the old design put the words on because he thought them appropriate. The President leaves them off because he thinks them inappropriate. For most of us, the question has about as much interest as the presence or absence of the name of God in the Constitution. The use of the name of the Deity in the Constitution or on the coinage will not make this a Christian nation, nor will its omission prevent it from being one. It is true, is it not, that the motto on the coins is more likely to be taken in a spirit of levity and to be made the occasion of cheap witticisms, than to suggest reverent reflections concerning our dependence upon God?

The United States of Europe.

Is there anything inherently absurd or impractical in the suggestion that the several countries of Europe should unite in a federation, or at least a confederation, in which the relations of the different nations would be similar to those existing among our states? Sir Max Waechter, a wealthy and knighted British subject, though a German by birth, has laid before the European sovereigns a memorandum incorporating this modest suggestion. His plan includes the abolition of armaments, except such as are needed for service at home, like our state militias, and the consequent saving of the billion dollars a year that it costs to maintain them. There would be free trade among the states and a uniform tariff against the rest of the world. If such a proposition could be seriously discussed, it would be found that the arguments against it would be strikingly similar to those which were advanced against the adoption of the Constitution which aimed to "form a more perfect union" of our first thirteen states.

The Harvard "Crimson" announced recently, as a piece of routine news, that Prof. Peabody's lecture on "The Political and Social Significance of the Life of Jesus Christ" was postponed on account of the football mass meeting which was scheduled for the same hour.

Haywood says that he was acquitted "because when the unions are united they are invincible." If that is true, he ought to be tried again. But it is not true. The invincibility of the unions had nothing to do with it. He was acquitted because the evidence did not prove his guilt to the minds of the jury. Any organization of men which is "invincible" in the courts, whether right or wrong, would be an exceedingly dangerous institution.

National and Confederate cemetaries may be united.

The President has approved the $100,000,000 Treasury note issue; also $50,000,000 in canal bonds.

The President has summoned a conference to consider ways and means of best conserving the natural resources of the country.

Things Which Make for Unity

Some one recently suggested that as we had recently put ourselves on record as favoring co-operation, as far as possible, with our religious neighbors, why not adopt the same policy in reference to brethren who call themselves by the same names, and hold to the same fundamental principles of the gospel, but who are sometimes described as "anti" brethren, because of their opposition to missionary societies and some other practices which they regard as unauthorized and harmful innovations? It is very evident that the very same motive, if it be genuine, that prompts brethren to seek a closer co-operation with other Christian bodies must necessarily prompt the desire for a closer co-operation and greater unity with brethren of the kind described. As far as we are concerned, we have always felt a strong desire to close up all chasms between ourselves, in order that we may more successfully prosecute our great work in the world. As the years go by this desire grows more intense. There is nothing consistent with conscience and with the interests of the Lord's work that we would not do to promote that closer unity and fellowship with those of our brethren who are estranged from us because of our doing those things which we feel we must do to be loyal to our Lord. What can we do to bring about this better understanding and closer unity among ourselves? We suggest a few things which, it seems to us, would promote this desirable consummation.

1. We can at once cease to use all opprobrious epithets in describing each other, and all misrepresentation of each other's principles and practices. Some of these, no doubt, arise from an honest misunderstanding of facts, but if there is the sincere motive to do each other the fullest justice, this ignorance will not long continue. We have just read in one of the journals representing the class of brethren to whom we have referred, a representation of the position of the Editor of this paper, that is as far remote from the facts, as the east is from the west. We do not like to believe that this all comes from malice or from a desire to misrepresent a brother.

2. We can accord to each other, as far as the facts will justify us in so doing, honesty of purpose and a sincere desire to promote the interests of Christ's kingdom. Even where there is room for doubt we can give our brethren the benefit of the doubt. The difficulty in doing this is far greater with some than others, and arises out of our inability to see how a different environment and different point of view affect one's opinions and judgments. When we have advanced far enough in Christ's grace to recognize our own fallibility of judgment and liability to error, it is not so hard to admit that others may be honest and yet differ from us.

3. If we are prepared to admit each other's sincerity and loyalty to what each believes to be right, then we ought to be willing to freely accord to each other the right to worship God, and to work for the spread of his kingdom according to the best light which each one possesses. For instance, if there are brethren who cannot conscientiously organize themselves into missionary co-operations, or societies, but who are willing to work for the Lord in some other way, we have no right, as we have no desire, to un-Christianize them because they cannot work according to our methods. If there be those, as there are, who cannot worship God in a public assembly, with a good conscience, if an organ or other instrument of music be employed in the worship, God forbid that we should refuse them the name Christian, or the right of Christian fellowship, because of this view. In saying this, we believe we express the conviction of the great body of people known as Christians, or Disciples of Christ, who co-operate in missionary societies and who use instruments in the public worship. Can we hope for the same charitable judgment on the part of our brethren who believe us to be in error in those things? Can they believe us to be honest and sincere in our desire to honor our Lord, even though we be mistaken in our methods? If so, a large part of the chasm is already removed.

4. We should be glad to have a number of our representative brethren representing these views, to meet together for prayer and conference, at some central place during the present winter, not so much to argue their differences as to emphasize the great facts and truths which they hold in common, and to get a clearer understanding of each other's principles and point of view. Is not this possible? Is it not desirable? We have apostolic precedent for such a conference, and it is certain that no harm can come from it, while much good might result. If it could result in nothing more than this: that the representatives of each of these two wings should be able to say to their brethren, through their papers, "We have not been able to see eye to eye, as yet, as to the best methods of advancing the kingdom of God, but we have learned to believe in each other's sincerity and earnest desire for the prospering of our Lord's cause, and we recommend that the spirit of brotherly love and forbearance with each other prevail among us and that we intermingle and co-operate as far as possible, in the hope that some time we shall be able to see eye to eye, and stand together, heart to heart, in the work of our common Master"—that would be a consummation well worth while.

In a little less than two years we are to celebrate the centennial of our birth as a religious movement whose aim is to bring about the unity of the people of God. Ought we not, before that time, to come to some such mutual agreement as that indicated above? There is no division among us if we have simply adopted different methods of work and worship, while we recognize each other as brethren and manifest the spirit of fraternity in those things wherein we agree. Among all our Centennial aims, there is none higher or worthier, as it seems to us, than this effort to bring about a better understanding and a closer unity between those who stand committed before the world to the restoration of New Testament Christianity, nor would anything do more to commend our plea for unity to the religious world than the exemplification of that unity among ourselves.

The one thing which we hope will not result from this word in the interest of peace and unity is that it should revive a newspaper controversy over plans and methods, which was too long continued, and from which no possible good can come. But if the plan here outlined should commend itself to the brethren on both sides of this issue which has been raised, and it should be faithfully carried out, we hope that it may bring about such a feeling of brotherly love where estrangement and prejudice now exist, as will cause joy among the angels of heaven, and receive the benediction of Him who prayed that his followers might be one.

"The Heart of the Gospel."*

A new book dealing with the problem of the Atonement need occasion no surprise. Christ's death is, indeed, "the heart of the gospel" and it raises a problem which the human mind can never cease to think about. Indeed, the more one experiences in his own life the power of the cross, the more he is bound to seek some satisfactory explanation of its relation to the forgiveness of sin and the redemption of the race. The fact that many theories of the Atonement which have been propounded in the past have been outgrown, is not going to debar other thinkers from seeking a more satisfactory statement of what is involved in the great tragedy of Calvary. Even if our present-day views should, in their turn, be outgrown, they will at least have served the purpose of satisfying, in a measure, the intellectual demands of the thinkers of to-day, as their predecessors served to satisfy the demand of the times in which they prevailed.

The author of the volume under consideration, is one of the clearest of thinkers and writers. His praiseworthy aim in this work, as stated by himself, is "to find the basis for the new evangel which is to bring in the new evangelism, in a conception of the Atonement which is at once vital, reasonable and preachable." In his introduction the author states four tests by which every view of the Atonement must ultimately stand or fall. Briefly stated, these are: (1) "Does it represent God and man as ethical beings having ethical relations to one another?" or does it remove God from the sphere of personal relations, thereby "reducing the Atonement to an abstraction, and making it a transaction felt in heaven, without reference to what it accomplishes in the hearts and lives of men?" (2) "Does it find its verification in Christian experience?" (3) "Does it put the emphasis upon the side of things on which knowledge and certainty lie?" That is to say, does it deal more with the question as to how the Atonement affects God or with how it effects man? (4) "Does it produce satisfactory ethical results?" "What place does it give to the moral forces which make for righteousness?" As Dr. W. Robertson Nicoll puts it, "Would it, if accepted, produce piety after the New Testament type?" These, it must be confessed, are crucial tests of any theory of the Atonement which may be propounded. Especially does this last one go to the very heart of the problem. Well may we question the correctness of any view of Christ's death which does not produce the highest ethical results, and which does not promote a piety of the New Testament type.

In our author's chapter on "The use of terms," we are warned against a hard, literalistic interpretation of words and phrases which while serving well the age for which they were written, have lost much of their signific[illegible] for our time. "At the heart of them," he says, "there is a core of spiritual truth; but they have become obsolete except among theologians; and they require to become translated into their modern equivalents to become intelligible to the average modern mind." No theory, therefore, ought to be built on a mere figure or illustration. "The truth is not to be made identical with the mold into which it is cast; its abiding substance is not to be confounded with its passing forms." That there have been many mistakes of this kind cannot be doubted by one who is familiar with the history of thought on this subject.

In his chapter on "Atonement in the Old Testament" the author finds a golden mean between the extreme position "which sees in the Old Testament explicit references to Calvary's sacrifice, and the position that denies even implicit reference to it". There is all through the Old Testament a recognition of the sacrificial principle. The sacrifices under the law were "shadows of things to come." And yet our author believes that it is not so much in these sacrifices as in the teaching of the prophets that we get the highest idea of human vicariousness and its virtue. It is in the Suffering Servant of Jehovah that the Old Testament rises to the loftiest conception of suffering and its relation to human redemption.

In another chapter the author traces "The Place of the Atonement in New Testament Teaching", first in the synoptic gospels, then in John's gospel, and finally in the epistles and the book of Revelation. Summing up this survey of New Testament teaching the author finds that while these New Testament writers "display the same variety of treatment that we might expect to find among a similar number of writers today, and that while they had no logical system of thought touching the doctrine of the Atonement," preaching, instead, a "factual gospel", there is, nevertheless, in all their writings, an "underlying unity of thought". "Upon the fundamental truth that salvation comes through the sacrifice of Christ, there is absolute agreement". Also, "that with the final passion of Christ the redemption of man is inseparably connected". This is so interwoven with the New Testament that to tear it out would be to tear the New Testament into shreds. Another point concerning the nature of the New Testament writers on this subject is worthy of note, namely: that they write out of their own experiences. "Before they began to write down a single word, the death of Christ had ceased to be looked upon by them as a sign of failure, and had come to shine as a new glory, as the fulfillment of His Messianic mission. They had also come to have personal experience of its power in their salvation". Only as men write on this subject, in this spirit, will their writings possess any vital force or value.

The problem involved in the death of Christ is the problem of sin — not "original sin" but "the fact and experience of present and personal sin". How to cure men of sin and to relieve them from its blighting and destroying influence was the great problem with which God has to deal. Sin is too awful a fact to be ignored or minimized. Until sin is apprehended as the root of all the world's tragedies, until its irrevocableness, when once committed, is understood, and its guilt felt; until it is seen how it shuts out God and closes the gate of heaven, there exists no problem of the Atonement. It is in this recognition of the reality, the universality, and the enormity of sin that we must approach the problem of Christ's death in its relation to forgiveness.

The importance of this theme will justify one or two other articles in review of this book.

We have received "An Open Letter to the Churches and Sunday Schools of America" signed by sixteen of our leading editors and publishers from the various religious bodies, urging the importance of placing a copy of the American Standard Bible in the hands of each pupil in the Sunday-school, by the Sunday school itself. It recommends that Sunday-schools everywhere use the American Standard Bible. We regret that it does not also recommend that these various Sunday-school publishers use exclusively the American Standard Bible in their publications and helps.

Notes and Comments.

When a religious newspaper boasts that it is "endeared to its readers" by "the enemies it has made"—that is, by the character of the people who disapprove its spirit and policy—it is worth while for thoughtful people to inquire, "Who are these 'enemies' whose displeasure at the paper's course endears it to its readers?" The answer to this question, when found, will reveal a situation that is both interesting and instructive as respects our present whereabouts in religious journalism.

A striking illustration of the accuracy of the daily press in reporting events in the religious world, is seen in the following clipping from "The Evening Post", said to be a leading daily of New Zealand:

"There are some queer university professors in the United States, if what one reads in the papers may be trusted. It is reported that one Dr. Hoffman offered £1,000 to Professor McGarvey, of Kentucky University, if he could "prove that Jonah was not swallowed by a whale," and the intrepid professor undertook the impossible feat of proving a negative. After selecting "six whales' throats and showing that none were capacious enough to admit a human body, he claimed the wager, which the doctor refused to pay, and the professor is suing for the money."

Now, did you ever! If this thing keeps on, the Professor is likely to wake up any morning and find himself famous—not for his lifelong devotion to Bible teaching, but for his alleged participation in a freak law-suit which never had an existence, except in the muddled brains of yellow journalism. By the time this extract finishes its trip around the world, we may expect to read that Professor McGarvey has resigned his professorship, renounced his faith in the Bible, and has gone on the lecture platform to prove that no whale's throat was ever large enough to admit even a minor prophet!

Francis E. Clark, D. D., editor-in-chief of "The Christian Endeavor World" had an article recently in "The New York Observer" in memory of his twenty-first anniversary as editor. After telling a good many pleasant things about his editorial work, he adds this bit of personal experience which is not very different from the experience of the average editor of a religious journal:

To edit a paper in these days is not all "bread and cheese and kisses." We have had our "kicks" as well as our "ha'pence." Some of our readers have known far better than we how to run the paper. Some of them have been "surprised and grieved" that we were so obtuse as not to recognize the merits of their contributions; occasionally the business management has been belabored by some one who, when the objectionable matter was explained, has asked pardon for his misapprehension—he called it "impertinence," but we wouldn't.

The editor of THE CHRISTIAN EVANGELIST extends his congratulations to his young fellow-editor, Dr. Clark, who puts into his writings much of that spirit which has made him so universally loved.

Editor's Easy Chair.

The brief, busy day is ended. To-night finds us in the Easy Chair at home. It is the chair that was presented to the Editor by his loved and lamented friend, A. M. Atkinson, one of the Lord's noblemen, whose memory is precious, and whose name is inseparably linked with the cause of ministerial relief, for which he laid down his life. The chair itself calls up many precious memories of the great-hearted man whose gift it was, and among these his sudden but noble departure from us at Cincinnati during our great Jubilee Convention, while pleading with his business brethren to consecrate more of their time and means to the Lord's work. That tragic death ought to insure the perpetuity of our business men's organization, and his last words might well be its motto: "Quit you like men: be strong." That states the very elements most needed in this critical and crucial period of our history—manliness and strength, consecrated to religious ends and aims. What great enterprises strong men can accomplish when their strength of intellect and their means are sanctified to carrying out Christ's work in the world! The last convention laid upon twenty-five of our strongest men one of the greatest enterprises ever projected by the brotherhood. It will require the co-operation of other strong men among us to carry it through. "Quit you like men: be strong."

We have passed the childhood period of our reformatory movement. We have reached the age of manhood, and can no longer plead the immaturity of youth. We have arrived at a period in our religious development when we are confronted with great problems and enterprises which demand the intellectual grasp, the all-conquering faith, the sublime courage and daring of full-grown men. It is no time to be indulging in childhood prattle over childish things. It is a time for clear, broad vision, and for bold, manly action. Into our hands God has put a dispensation of truth demanded by the times in which we live. Never was a holier cause committed to the hands of mortal man than the Christly plea for union among those who own Jesus as Lord. It is only as he guides us and strengthens us that we can worthily accomplish the work he has laid upon us. 'Quit you like men; be strong!" Let us gird ourselves, then, as did the racers and wrestlers of the Olympian games, for the mighty tasks which are before us, only we should gird ourselves with faith and hope and love, and with high Christian aims and resolves.

The night is very still out here at Rose Hill. The moon, approaching her full orb, rides majestically through the cloudless heavens, and the smaller stars hide their diminished faces before her queenly splendor. But how cold her bright beams fall upon the earth! It is not the radiance of the sun shining out of its own unwasting fires, but only the reflection of his light, minus its heat and glow. It is the same difference that exists between one who speaks out of his heart the things which he himself has experienced, and the preciousness of which he feels, and one who speaks from a purely theoretical knowledge of things which he does not know from actual experience. These two classes of preachers exist, and we have no difficulty in distinguishing the one from the other. Some sermons are like the moonlight, beautiful, but vague, cold and ineffectual. Others are like the sunlight, clear, warm and life-giving. The one is a reflection of something from without; the other is an expression of something within. Paul preached what he called "my gospel," which was Christ's gospel passed through the alembic of Paul's own mind and heart and so made his own. Blessed is the man who has a gospel to preach which he himself has tried and found adequate to save!

The hands of the watch tell us the night is passing. How still this little study is, compared with the hurrying throngs we saw down on the crowded streets to-day! Those were the living men and women, each intent on accomplishing some task or enterprise, or enjoying some pleasure. But those who look down upon us from these bookshelves have for the most part ceased from their worries and labors, having joined

> "The sceptred dead,
> Who rule us from their urns."

In these cyclopedias, commentaries and dictionaries, and in these volumes of poetry, philosophy and theology we are permitted to hold converse with the mighty spirits of the past. What matters it that we did not know them in the flesh? We have their thoughts, their deeds, their characters—the immortal part that death cannot destroy. Some of our own best friends—kindred souls who have hearts to receive the message which we have tried to give—we have never seen. Perhaps we shall never greet each other here in the body. But heaven is dearer to us because of the hope of knowing them face to face in that world of realities. Twenty years within the four walls of this "den", or library, have we read and studied and prayed, and written and wrestled with the problems which came up in the course of our editorial duties. Is it any wonder the place has acquired a sort of sacredness for us? Here the clouds have lowered, and here the mists have cleared away before the bright shining of His face, whose smile is heaven begun on earth.

In glancing over the titles of these books —our silent companions that only speak to us when we ask them questions—we notice many which we read once with interest, some which we have only glanced through, and others which we consult as we have occasion to do so. But there is one Book which possesses the singular quality that the more we read it the more we relish it and the more we want to read it. It belongs in a class by itself. No other book treats such lofty themes, deals with problems of such vital moment to the race, answers so satisfactorily the deepest questionings of the human heart nor speaks with such authority to the conscience, as the Book of books, the Bible. Like Nature—an earlier volume by the same Author—it speaks to all our varying moods. It has a message for the happy and joyous occasions of life, and in times of trial and trouble, when the way seems dark and steep, it speaks in low, sweet tones, its message of comfort and hope. It has given strength to martyrs and to moral heroes and reformers, who, in the light of its promises, have faced persecution and death for the sake of righteousness and truth. There it lies on our desk, ready to speak to us when we have time to open it, and often a glance over its pages shows a passage which opens a window into heaven. Investigate it according to the most approved canons of literary and historical criticism? Most assuredly. It invites it. It demands it. But lay irreverent, iconoclastic hands on the sacred old volume and tear it to pieces in the interest of some new and unproved theory and at the behest of some rationalistic presupposition? Palsied be the hand, and paralyzed the tongue that would knowingly discredit this message of God to men—the inspiration of youth, the guide of our maturer years, the prop and stay of old age

Another busy day with its multitudinous duties and cares has come and gone, and night with its healing balm and its invitation to rest is here again. Let us shut out business anxieties from the sanctity of the home. Let there be poetry and songs and worship instead.

> "And the night shall be filled with music,
> And the cares that infest the day
> Shall fold their tents like the Arabs,
> And silently steal away."

To-morrow is the Lord's day with its holy calm, its church bells calling us to the house of God, its hallowed associations and all the rest of soul which it brings to burdened spirits. What a blessing it is to have the doors of our business houses closed on one day of the week, and all the houses of worship opened, where we may breathe the air of heaven and come more consciously under the power of spiritual realities! Without such a day the world would rapidly degenerate, the church lose its hold on men, and civilization would become vastly more materialistic, sordid and sensual. Thank God for the home, the church, the Lord's day and for what has made all these,—the Bible, and the Christ whom it reveals! Let us cherish these as gifts from God, and use them as He intended they should be, and we may hopefully face the future.

WHERE PROHIBITION PROHIBITS

WHAT PROHIBITION HAS DONE FOR A TEXAS TOWN

By Will H. Evans.

There was war in Fannin county. The brewers and their agents fought against the soldiers of temperance; and whiskey fought and its slaves, but they prevailed not, neither was their place found any more in this great county.

Fannin county is situated in what is known as the black land belt, along the northern boundary of Texas. The soil is as rich as that of the valley of the Nile; the people are prosperous and nearly 60,000 liberty-loving citizens call this their home. For many, many years the brewers, the distillers and the dispensers of intoxicating liquors had reaped a golden harvest in this rich commonwealth. Like the blood-sucking vampire they had gradually been sucking the life blood from this sleeping citizenship. Each year they grew bolder and bolder; they defied the laws; they laughed at the attempt of the people to check their business.

When the people talked of controlling them they added another gilded palace of crime, sin and shame, until they numbered sixty saloons, many gambling dens and houses of ill fame. Think of a situation like this in one of the richest counties in the great state of Texas; and when I say great I intend for it to carry with it all that greatness means, because there was a time when it was great enough to be a republic of its own—the only state in the great sisterhood that ever floated the flag of a republic—a state from boundary to boundary which at its greatest length is 825 miles on an air line; which produces practically one-third of the cotton raised in the Unted States, and whose oil fields have attracted the attention of the people of the world.

One morning when these whiskey dealers were planning for greater conquests, when they were proclaiming peace and safety, there was another meeting in the county's capital—just a small body of men, but they were a determined few. They were men with a mission; they had a purpose; they were men who believed in the cause of temperance. When they adjourned a call for a prohibition election in Fannin county had been made. Lines were quickly drawn for a great struggle. On one side were found the saloon keepers, the gamblers, the whiskey drinkers, the thugs, the thieves, the women of bad repute, and here and there a good man, whose interest in this world's affairs was wrapped up in dollars and cents, who would sell his soul for money. There also were found a few weak-kneed men who owned a little property and who lined up with this element for fear their revenues would be reduced. And yes; there was another company that belonged to this regiment—the negroes were there.

On the other side were found the advocates of temperance, the preachers, men who believed in law and order, men whose souls were not for sale for money, men who followed the teachings of Jesus Christ, who believed in the sanctity of the home and the purity of woman. On this side also we found the women and the innocent children. Having no ballot to cast, they cast only their prayers. This was the formation of the two great armies—the way they are formed in every great contest of this kind. The black flag was raised—no quarter was asked and none was given. This was one of the greatest struggles ever had upon free soil. All of the powers of hades seemed to be brought into action—every servant lent a hand; the brewers, the distillers, the wholesale liquor dealers and the Liquor Dealers' Association came with their power. It was a battle royal; it was a fight to the death. Father was arrayed against son—brother against brother.

The eyes of all Texas and friends of the warring factions in other states were turned on this battle field. The results meant much to the victors, much to the cause they represented. When the day for the election came, the very air told of the conflict; amid the din and rattle of war the prayers of the mothers, the cries of the widows and orphans, seemed borne upon every breeze. The time came for the victors to receive the medal of honor and for the vanquished to steal away in shame. The prohibitionists won the battle by 1,787 majority, a complete victory.

Reader, the victors in this battle were under the leadership of One who never lost a fight. The whiskey business has as many lives as a cat; it doesn't die dead the first time you kill it; so two years later it had to be killed again. This time the old wound was re-opened and made deeper. The people still ruled. To-day there is not in all Fannin county a single saloon, a whiskey joint, a gambling den or a house of ill fame. The reader may ask the question: What about the conditions of this battle ground before and since? This question I shall answer.

I shall treat the subject like a colored witness that I recently examined, who, upon being sworn, said, "Cap'n, is I s'posed to tell dis thing just 'xactly like it really happ'n'd"? I said, "You are." "Well, if dats de case, boss, 'twill be just plain facts widout no 'bellishments". So what I give you in this article will be just plain facts without coloring of any kind.

The change from the open saloon to prohibition was made in 1903. The comparison given is taken from the official records of each court or institution referred to.

Banks in this county in 1903, 9; banks in 1907, 17; total bank deposits in 1903, $1,127,279.36; deposits in 1907, $1,662,030.85; convictions for drunk in Justice court for 25 months with open saloon, 270; convictions in same court for 25 months under prohibition, 46; convictions for drunk in City court for two and one half years with open saloons, 316; convictions in same court for like period under prohibition, 135. (The Justice court and the City court have concurrent jurisdiction in cases of drunk, and are in same territory.) Total cases of drunk in this precinct with saloon, 586; cases in same territory without saloon, same length of time, 181; number of convictions for drunk in Justice court for June 1907, 1; same court for July, 1; same court for August, 2; convictions in City court for June, 1907, 2; same court for July, 1; since July 12 (and this is practically two months) there has not been a case of drunk in the city; number of saloons in Bonham in 1903, 13; number of saloons in 1907, 0.

The Grand Jury of Fannin county, which meets twice each year, reported in August, 1903, 98 true bills, 53 cases of felony and 45 misdemeanor cases. The Grand Jury for the month of August, 1907, reported 11 true bills, 6 cases of felony, one of which was for a crime committed many years ago, and 6 cases of misdemeanor.

There were confined in the county jail during the year, under whiskey rule, 50

CLEARED AWAY

Proper Food Put the Troubles Away.

Our own troubles always seem more severe than any others. But when a man is unable to eat even a light breakfast, for years, without severe distress, he has trouble enough.

It is small wonder he likes to tell of food which cleared away the troubles.

"I am glad of the opportunity to tell of the good Grape-Nuts has done for me," writes a N. H. man. "For many years I was unable to eat even a light breakfast without great suffering.

"After eating I would suddenly be seized with a terrible attack of colic and vomiting. This would be followed by headache and misery that would sometimes last a week or two, leaving me so weak I could hardly sit up or walk.

"Since I began to eat Grape-Nuts I have been free from the old troubles. I usually eat Grape-Nuts one or more times a day, taking it at the beginning of the meal. Now I can eat almost anything I want without trouble.

"When I began to use Grape-Nuts I was way under my usual weight, now I weigh 30 pounds more than I ever weighed in my life; and I am glad to speak of the food that has worked the change."

prisoners. There are in the county jail on this date, 1907, 9 prisoners.

The District Court dockets show that in 1897 there were 43 convictions for felony, one of which was hanged. This was the last hanging the county has had. These were the conditions when whiskey ruled.

Bonham, the capital of this county, had under the last year of whiskey rule an estimated population of 5000; estimated population of Bonham at this date 7500. The last year of the whiskey rule, Bonham built a small cotton mill for the manufacturing of cotton sheeting. Notwithstanding the fact that the whiskey people claimed that the mill would fail if prohibition went into effect it has increased its capacity twice, pays semi-annual dividends and the original stock has gradually increased and to-day it is one of the most successful mills in the state. There is considerable talk of building a second mill.

Since prohibition went into effect Bonham has within the past two years built a high school building costing some $40,000 and a ward school building costing some $12,000, is just building a $12,000 addition to Carlton College, a female school which has been located here since 1867. It has built a gas plant for lighting purposes, a fine hospital, extended the electric car line, greatly enlarged the telephone system, built many fine residences and business houses, thousands of feet of concrete sidewalks both in the business and residence districts, the streets have been kept in better condition, and besides these many enterprises a sewerage system is being built and will be completed within the next few months. It is very probable that many other enterprises will be constructed within the next twelve months.

Bonham is one of the most moral towns to be found anywhere. Her public school system is pronounced by the State University of Texas as the leading school in the state, there being only three other schools in the state which have reached such a high degree of proficiency. There are fifteen churches in Bonham which represent nearly all of the different church organizations. There are 1500 pupils in the various Sunday-schools, which is one-fifth of the entire population. The city's finances are in much better condition than they were under whiskey rule and progress has marked every coming year.

The county has improved at the same ratio as the town; every precinct has good school buildings, nearly every farmer is reached by rural free delivery, and hundreds of farmers have telephone service connecting them with long distance lines, farm buildings have been improved and there is no comparison in the condition of the people now and under the whiskey rule.

As I write this article there is an immense crowd of people in the town, principally farmers, traders, and shoppers from the country districts; in fact, the streets are thronged with people, and the city marshal reports to me at the close of the day that there has not been a single case of drunk or a single arrest for trouble of any kind during the entire day, which is the strongest evidence of the success of prohibition, for such a day under the whiskey rule would have resulted in no less than from six to one dozen arrests.

The above facts are open for investigation and the world is challenged to disprove them. The farmers and business people and the citizenship generally are in a prosperous condition and the promises of the future are brighter than for many years past. This is a place where prohibition actually prohibits.

THE CENTENNIAL CATECHISM

H. A. DENTON.
Centennial Secretary, A. C. M. S.

The Christian creed — the one that needs no revision—contains but one article. The Christian's program, however, contains many numbers, and I am of the opinion that it should contain a good many more than it does in most cases. A doctrinal catechism is of little value, and would be spurned by our brethren, but a missionary catechism—an American Missionary Catechism—a short American Missionary Catechism—ought to be very much in use by our brethren.

The American Christian Missionary Society proposes a Centennial Catechism. We are going to ask ten questions. Here they are:

1. What are you going to do about the Centennial Aim, "Every Bible-school in line for 1909"?
2. What are you going to do to help add 2,000 new contributing churches by 1909?
3. How much are you going to give to raise the annual receipts to $250,000 by 1909?
4. What part are you going to have in raising the $25,000 for a Bureau of foreign peoples?
5. What are you going to do to help raise $10,000 for Alaska?
6. How much will you give to raise the $10,000 for the Canadian Northwest?
7. How many Christian Endeavorers will you stir up on the Endeavor Centennial Aim, "$10,000 from the Endeavorers for Idaho, Wyoming and the Dakotas?"
8. What part will you have in organizing the 500 new churches we propose to have in 1909?
9. How many confessions of the 30,000 we expect to take in 1909 will you take as your share?
10. Will you be one to help us put 1,000 evangelists in the field to be supported by the American Society and the state boards to which we make appropriations in the year 1909?

There are ten questions in this catechism, which is a short catechism in the space it takes up, but a long one in the amount of work for which it provides.

I am reminded of Brother Muckley's ten-finger exercise on Church Extension. There are just ten of these questions. Put one of them on each finger. While, as appearing here, they are not arranged in order, you will notice that five of them relate to men, and five relate to money. Put one of these questions on each finger, and study them until you can say them all over three times a day. If a million and a half Disciples have ten fingers each, that would make fifteen million fingers in the brotherhood, a question on each finger in the morning before breakfast. Now, let us say them over, and again at noon, and again at night, until these fifteen million fingers can each one support a question and also its answer.

Brethren, here is some work both for the head and the hand, and it will be greatly facilitated by letting the heart supply the incentive. I propose that we learn the catechism. What do you say about it?

SCHOOL TEACHERS
Also Have Things to Learn.

"For many years I have used coffee and refused to be convinced of its bad effect upon the human system," writes a veteran school teacher.

"Ten years ago I was obliged to give up my much loved work in the public schools after years of continuous labor. I had developed a well-defined case of chronic coffee poisoning.

"The troubles were constipation, flutterings of the heart, a thumping in the top of my head and various parts of my body, twitching of my limbs, shaking of my head and, at times after exertion, a general "gone" feeling with a toper's desire for very strong coffee. I was a nervous wreck for years.

"A short time ago friends came to visit us and they brought a package of Postum with them, and urged me to try it. I was prejudiced, because some years ago I had drunk a cup of weak, tasteless stuff called Postum which I did not like at all.

"This time, however, my friend made the Postum according to directions on the package, and it won me. Suddenly I found myself improving in a most decided fashion.

"The odor of boiling coffee no longer tempts me. I am so greatly benefited by Postum that if I continue to improve as I am now, I'll begin to think I have found the Fountain of Perpetual Youth. This is no fancy letter but stubborn facts which am glad to make known."

The Living Link Idea.

ing themselves to the foreign field, and a Church, fabulously rich, great numerically and with a widening vision of the unrecome. God is striking the hour, and now, as never, we are about to witness victories deemed. Surely the fullness of time has eclipsing even those of the apostolic day. Whose heart does not beat faster in contemplation of these things, and who is of the cross in miracles of redemption God in this day, mighty in its possibilities and incalculable in its spiritual fruitage?

Herein is the divine, soul-stirring, irresistible incentive for giving. It is this view that establishes the claims of the work of God upon our means. This constitutes the genius of the Living Link idea.

If there is to be a new evangel in the Church of this day, when we sing of liberty and progress and commercial supremacy, that evangel will teach the stewardship of money, now in the hands of a selfish Church—a Church wearing the name of him who gave up absolutely everything as his portion to the world's redemption, and who now waits for his disciples to supply what is lacking and what he did not have to give. Perhaps some day we shall come to regard generous giving as essential to church fellowship. We shall lay as much emphasis upon it as we do now upon the obedience of faith or the necessity of the good confession. The sporadic efforts in various quarters to exact the tithe reveal the unsteady and chaotic state of our systems of financing the kingdom of God, and are prophetic of a coming day when the business side of the divine program shall be invested with a quickened conscience. Jesus does not require the impossible. Stupendous as the task may seem, the Disciples of Christ alone could thoroughly evangelize the whole of India in this generation if our gifts were commensurate with our ability. But when we remember that 60 per cent of our brotherhood have no share in our missionary efforts, it can not be said that we have no financial problem. Here is the vulnerable point in the policy of a great people. Eminent physicians are now declaring, with some show of reason, that moral and spiritual delinquency is due to a pressure of the skull upon the brain. Already in many cases, by a skillful operation, this unnatural pressure has been removed, and the subsequent moral condition of the subjects has been normal and true.

Here at last is the secret of a sinful indifference on the part of many Christians to the cause of missions. There is pressure on the brain. By a skillful use of his spiritual scalpel the pastor must relieve that pressure, and when one is in his normal condition he will become an enthusiastic supporter of our foreign work.

In spite of much indifference there has been great progress in our missionary enterprise. At the first, small gifts came from a few individuals. Then, other individuals joined their contributions. Next the basket was passed with due apologies. Then the basket was passed without the apology. Finally the basket was passed with an appeal. Following this, the work of systematic information was pursued and offerings were taken for this cause as though it were important. This was a great advance. Later a church or groups of churches determined to provide the support of a missionary. This created a new standard and a new name. It was the beginning of the Living Link movement among us. What could be simpler or more definite than a single church, or individual, or group of churches supporting a missionary at an annual outlay of $600? Its adoption has not only largely increased our missionary receipts but it has been the source of gracious blessings to many churches hitherto indifferent to missionary appeals.

It is the unanimous judgment of those who have measured its benefits and shared its blessings that our effective means of enlisting the churches and advancing the work is through the Living Link plan. It is a Living Link. The interest centers about a person, and the special field in which he works. Facts, not theories, beget conviction and enthusiasm. The theory of a Chinese famine would never have unlocked the store-houses of this land; the frank statement of a fact formed an irresistible appeal. So in the support of missions. Ask an offering from the church for the world-wide work, you are dealing with the theory of missions. The very immensity of the field bewilders the average mind. The gift is made to the cause of missions in its broadest sense. Produce a man—a living, equipped, spirit-filled man; a man who has the love and courage of a martyr. Ask that he be sent to China, to a particular field in China, and immediately the theory of missions fades out before the concrete reality of China's needs and how they are to be met. From that moment the burden of that man's work is upon the heart of the church that supports him. His name is a household word, and is mentioned with a love and reverence as though of kindred flesh and blood. And in many a prayer, rising on wings of faith, this servant is remembered in tenderest petition before the throne of grace. And when the people assemble for worship, prayer, sermon, and letters from the field easily keep fresh and vigorous the interest of the entire church in their missionary and his work. This is a simple interpretation of the great commission. It kindles in the conscience of the church the sense of divine fellowship.

In this labor of love, the minister must lead. He represents the crown and flower of discipleship. He is God's anointed. He is a voice. His is a holy office. His soul must flame with a divine enthusiasm. He must keep missionary fuel close to hand to feed the fires that sometimes burn low in his own breast. His speech must be coined in the mint of the prayer room. If he would make his a living link church he must believe in himself, in his people and in the great commission. He must remember just one thing—that Jesus trusts him and depends upon him. He must demonstrate his faith in the undertaking by making the first offering and the most generous of all. Such generosity is contagious. As ministers, we cannot expect our people to do what we will not do. They are willing to be led. Their enthusiasm and their gifts are usually the measure of the enthusiasm and the gifts of the preacher. As effects follow causes, so the churches can be made to glow with missionary fervor if led by ministers whose message is pentecostal. It would be strange if, under such conditions, a church failed to enter the Living Link class. It is a step fraught with manifold blessings. Nothing can take its place as a spiritual lever in the church. Nothing so crushes the spirit of strife, stops the mouth of the church gossip, fosters prayer, magnifies the Scriptures, broadens the congregational vision, facilitates the work of evangelism and pays local debts as congregational support of a missionary in the foreign field.

It is not a panacea for every congregational ill, but one living link missionary will bring more blessings to a congregation than the highest salaried choir in the brotherhood. It is good business; the fairness of it is manifest. It strikes the man in the pew most favorably. He is easily won by its sound commercial principles. It puts the responsibility where it belongs. The local congregation is the unit of power and support. It is the base of supplies. No army can long fight in the far field without an adequate home base. When a congregation assumes the support of a missionary it relieves the Foreign Board of any anxiety about it. The congregation very quickly comes to think of his support as being as much a part of its financial obligation as the support of its pastor. It is a moral debt, cheerfully paid. The hit and miss policy in vogue in many congregations is unknown in the Living Link church. A rainy day does not invalidate its contract. It is an obligation payable annually. It insures the Foreign Board of a stream of money, the total amount of which may be estimated in advance. No other plan is safe to-day. Our pay roll is becoming too large not to have back of it and under it hundreds of churches whose offerings are absolutely certain. Broaden the base of supplies, increase the number of churches who stand for definite contributions to the work, and the hazard of the hit and miss plan is mightily reduced.

The intrepid Blucher, dragging his weary Prussians to the field of Waterloo, encouraged them and inspired them by saying: "Soldiers, I have promised Wellington I would be there, and you will not make me break my promise." Returning to our homes from the heights of these convention visions we, too, may lay upon the hearts of our churches, or our pastors, the claims of the Living Link, and, when all else is said, quicken duty, interest, support, as you say: "I have promised my soul and my King, and you will not make me break my promise."

No better step could be taken in this convention than the determination to advance as many churches as possible to the Living Link class. We ought to have 500 congregations enjoying this spiritual fellowship. The favor of God would rest upon us as never before. It is a reasonable service which we should gladly render. The work demands it; the open doors invite it; the Lord expects it; your own heart prompts it. Shall it come to pass?

Fragments of Truth

C. F. Ladd

Not what men think, but what God says, is what counts.

God will not change his plan of salvation to suit our theories.

Some folks only read the Bible to find "props" for their ideas.

Calling yourself a Christian does not make you one.

It is a good deal easier to talk Christ than to walk Christ.

The only safe way is—go by the Book.

One "thus saith the Lord" is of more importance than one thousand opinions of the "world's wise men."

Some folks seem to think that God is under obligations to run his "salvation chariot" on their little, narrow-guage track.

The Pentecostal style of preaching is needed to-day. People need to be pricked in their hearts rather than tickled in their imaginations.

Our Budget

—All telegrams and news items must reach us by Saturday of this week for publication in our next issue—the Thanksgiving number.

—Next Lord's day is the children's day for Home Missions in the Bible schools.

—A great fall and winter campaign is on.

—It includes the whole church—men, women and children; prayer-meeting, Christian Endeavor and Bible school.

—Speaking of Bible schools, we invite the teachers and superintendents and teachers to the improved line of supplies which the Christian Publishing Company is sending out.

—We thank our friends for the beginning of their response to our recent suggestions at to "What Our Friends Can Do." It is a time for the hearty co-operation of those who see alike the needs of our cause.

—With all our doing, let us see to it that we help W. T. Moore in the great enterprise he is leading, of securing a Centennial endowment for Bethany College. What he asks from each will hinder no other work among us.

—As a result of a recent gathering of Baptists and ministers of the Disciples of Christ, in Cleveland, O., for fraternal discussion, similar meetings are to be held for three months. —J. G. Waggoner, minister at Canton, Ill., preached a strong discourse recently on the proper use of the Lord's day, which was printed in the "Daily Register" of that city. HELPERS TO SUCCESS AT WINFIELD, KANSAS.

Albert Nichols.
R. R. Hamlin. Leonard Daugherty.

With the pastor we present here the faces of R. R. Hamlin and Leonard Daugherty, his singer, who recently held a successful meeting for Albert Nichols and his church at Winfield, Kan. This church has never been so enthusiastic as now, and a new building for 1908 is almost a universal cry among the members. We should not, in this connection, omit to refer to the superintendent of the Sunday-school, whose picture we also print. Oscar Grafney has served without intermission since January 1, 1899,—nearly nine years. He is one of the zealous class of superintendents, and had no small influence among the Sunday-school forces in the work for this meeting.

Oscar Grafney.

—While our thoughts are still centered on the convention at Norfolk, through the reports of the things done and the speeches made there, let us not forget that prior to another convention comes the congress of the Disciples of Christ which is to convene in Bloomington, Ill., next April. The program promises to be one of unusual interest.

—Every department of the church at North Vernon, Ind., is being pushed more zealously, and the outlook is very hopeful. The church is looking for a minister who will take the lead January 1 for half time, and live in the city. There are several churches within easy distance who could employ the rest of his time. Address David B. Reeder.

—The work on the new Christian church at Jefferson City, Mo., is well under way. It is being built of stone and will have a depth of 105 ft., and a frontage of 54 ft. The main auditorium is to seat about 700 people and will contain a fine pipe organ. The basement will be devoted to the Bible school and other allied work. The total cost is to be about $25,000.

—D. W. Connor reports the work at Albion, Ill., in good condition. The C. W. B. M. auxiliary has been doubled and a Junior Christian Endeavor organized which has now forty-four members. The Senior society shows growth and is happy in the care of its orphan boy in India. The Bible school has taken on new life and numbers 120, while the prayer-meetings are also well attended.

—Harry G. Hill has just addressed big meetings for men in Terre Haute at the Y. M. C. A. Last Lord's day he was engaged in a similar service at Greenwood, and on November 24 is to speak at Indianapolis. Brother Hill has 527 male members in his own congregation and his Y. M. C. A. service is between his morning and evening services.

—J. Bliss Pickle, who has for some time been in Bethany College recently held a short meeting at his home, Hillsdale, Kings county, New Brunswick, and later at Buffalo Plains, Gunfell, Sask., Canada, with a result of thirty-three immersions and eleven by reclamation or letter. A church will be organized at the latter place. It is one of the mission points where his brother has been preaching.

—On another page will be found the statistical report presented to the Norfolk Convention. Brother Hoffmann, who has attended to this report for some years, was relieved of this work and W. R. Warren appointed statistician. With the facilities of his office at command the Centennial Secretary, it was thought, can more easily gather accounts and figures than have been furnished in the past under the conditions that have prevailed.

—A. P. Cobb, of Decatur, Ill., and Miss Pearl Critchfield, of Murray, Ia., are to conduct a meeting for J. Will Walters and the church at Niantic, Ill., beginning December 1. This congregation exceeded its apportionment of $75 for state missions, and has also furnished one of the eighty persons who agree to give $25 a year for five years to support a field agent for Eureka College.

—J. C. Alexander, of Bowling Green, Ky., reports the organization of a church at Ray's Branch, with forty-seven enthusiastic members. This is the result of a meeting with J. C. Hall. About half came by statement and confession and half from a church that had been broken up by Antiism. The Sunday-school averages about sixty in attendance. "Of course," writes Brother Alexander, "we use the best Bible literature—W. W. Dowling's."

—The Foreign Chrisian Missionary Society will conduct a three-months' campaign of missionary rallies this fall and winter. Practically the whole country, save the Pacific coast, will be covered. All told, 150 rallies will be held. This is by far the largest campaign ever undertaken. Some of the strongest missionaries on the field are to assist. On another page we give the dates arranged for the rest of November, and later we shall publish the December dates.

—A newspaper clipping tells us of the anniversary of B. H. Melton at Marshall Street Christian Church, Richmond, Va. During his five years' pastorate there the membership has more than doubled. A reception was tendered the pastor and his wife, and over 300 of the members and friends were present, public expressions that Brother Melton remain for many years longer in this pastorate being heard from many, both of the members and the visiting ministers.

—H. J. Crockett has resigned his pastorate at Abingdon, Ill., and will close his work there not later than January 1. His future location is not yet decided upon, but he expects to take work elsewhere, if opportunity comes. The church has had 186 additions during his labors there, has paid off an indebtedness of $600, and is free from debt. Any communications intended for the church should be addressed to F. W. Reynolds, clerk.

—Encouraged by the promise of assistance from the American Christian Missionary Society and the Board of Church Extension, the church at Hot Springs, Ark., is now planning for a vigorous campaign to secure the additional funds necessary to erect the new church building upon the lot they have purchased and paid for. We hope to be able to publish their plans in a later issue, and we trust that the enterprise may be speedily crowned with success.

—Elsewhere in this paper will be found the funeral discourse delivered by James N. Crutcher, at the funeral of his father, S. W. Crutcher. A few days before the latter's death he said to his son: "John Wesley preached his mother's funeral discourse, and I want you to preach mine." The sermon was delivered in compliance with this request, the service being held in the Christian Church, Pine Bluff, Ark., Sunday morning, November 3, C. C. Cline assisting.

—Clark W. Comstock has closed his work with the church at Huntsville, Mo., and begins next Lord's day with the Woodlawn Church, Portland, Ore. The state mission offering of the Huntsville Church was between $45 and $50. In the eleven months of Brother Comstock's administration over $400 was raised for missions, being about two and one-half times more than for any year some time previous to his pastorate.

—A brother wishes to know what course a minister should pursue in a town where the sentiment prevails that to be a good Mason or a faithful member of some of the other lodges, is to secure salvation. We should say it is his duty to point out the difference between the church of God and a lodge, and to show that salvation comes only through Jesus Christ and not through any benevolent organization, however praiseworthy its aim and work.

—R. L. Cartwright, who has been preaching at Herrin, Ill., sums up the work of the year there and reports 26 additions, $550 raised for special purposes outside the current expenses, $175 of this being for missionary work. This was the first year that many of our causes have ever been presented to the people there. Brother Cartwright and his wife are now at their new home at Villa Grove, Ill., where they hope to lay the foundation of a new Christian church next fall.

—D. G. Dungan is able to report eighty-five additions, seventy of them by primary obedience to the church at Illiopolis, Ill., where he is just closing his work to enter the evangelistic field as leader of song. He has had eight years of experience in this kind of work, being not only able to assist in preaching and personal work, but being a good cornetist. He is the youngest son of D. R. Dungan. He speaks very highly of his congregation at Illiopolis, and says that to them is due the credit for much that has been accomplished there.

—W. A. Webster, who has been preaching in and about Waco, Tex., since going to the state in September, has located near the University. For a couple of weeks he has been working in Teague, a new railroad town fifty miles east of Waco, where a Bible school and church have been organized. Eight saloons have been planted there already and the conditions are not easy for religious work. There is talk of erecting a church building and a three or four weeks' meeting is needed.

—T. H. Adams has decided to remain with the church at Edinburg, Ind., another year. The congregation would not accept his resignation. Since he took the work in hand there have been 179 additions. The audiences have increased 75 per cent while there has been great growth in other departments, the weekly prayer-meeting having an average attendance of nearly 100. He commences his fourth year with great prospects for an ingathering of souls. E. B. Barnes was to begin a meeting on last Lord's day.

—The headquarters of the state board of North Carolina have been removed from Washington to Wilson, where A. B. Cunningham, the president, and W. G. Walker, corresponding secretary, may in the future be addressed. The state paper is to be issued there. A fine record was shown at the convention just held, there being raised more than one dollar each for every member of our church in the state. This includes nothing but funds used in the state in evangelizing under the state board and $11,000 debt on the colleges.

—The church at Monett, Mo., has recently closed a fine meeting with Joseph Gaylor leading the forces. The minister, Reuben Blunt, says that what impresses everybody about Brother Gaylor is that he is a sincere Christian himself. He believes that the gospel is the power, and he loves God supremely and his fellowman as himself. There were more than fifty additions to the congregation in this meeting, which will be a great help to our church in this railroad town. The church never was in better condition than now. All officers are tithers as well as many others of the membership.

—A church was organized at Elgin, Ill., last January with thirty-two members. A meeting just held by W. D. Endres, its minister, assisted by V. E. Ridenour, leaves the membership at sixty-four. At one time we had a congregation and a building here, but now only a mission church. A centrally located hall was used and advertising secured an attendance. The watchword of this congregation is a membership of 100 within twelve months. The Sunday-school has doubled during the past year. Brother Endres speaks very highly of the work of Brother Ridenour, his illustrated solos, especially, being effective.

—J. C. Alexander of Bowling Green, Ky., sends his congratulations on the splendid way in which the questions of church federation and "tainted money" were handled at the Norfolk convention, and congratulates the brotherhood on such leaders as Power, Moore, Richardson, Tyler, Spencer, etc. He says: "It did my soul good to read the report (the summary of work printed on the first page) to our Sunday-school. If we will all pull together there is no guess what that report will be at Pittsburg in 1909." Aye, that is the word—"pulling together"! Let us have that, and we will amaze ourselves and the world.

—"I wish to personally thank you for the report of the Norfolk Convention and for the editorial in the issue of October 31. I was one of the unfortunate 'shut ins' so far as the convention was concerned, and like John Baptist of old when in prison, I was hungry for re-assurance that we were still big enough for God to lead us onward. So it was with humble thanksgiving that I read of the great things done at the convention. I thank God and take courage. We have a great work to do; may God keep us from coming down to such foolishness again."—David H. Shields, Salina, Kan.

—There is now a working church of thirty-eight members and Sunday-school with an average attendance of fifty-five at Bethel, Mo., where E. M. Carr has just held a good meeting. Brethren speak highly of his work and he is to preach for them for the present. This organization has been in contemplation with the county board for some time, and to its president, J. H. Wood, the thanks of the community are due. P. D. Shouse, who sends us this information, says Brother Carr does not preach the gospel in small doses but delivers it by the car load and guarantees it to be genuine.

—George L. Snively, of the Christian Publishing Company, has just visited Walnut, Ill., where he rededicated the church for R. L. Beshers and that congregation. They required $4,600 to meet the expense of remodeling which now gives a class room for each class and in every way makes the church building more adaptable to the work in hand, and $5,200 was the amount raised. H. H.

... its congregation at New ... near by, adjourned for this ... to meet with the brethren at ... This church is in the height of its prosperity. C. C. Carpenter, of Princeton, began a meeting on the Monday night following the dedication.

The church at Havensville, Kan., called Frank H. Bentley who, for the last three years, has been pastor of the North Topeka church. He and his wife are well known to the Havensville people and these are hopeful of a splendid year's labor. He enters upon the pastorate January 1. The building has recently been beautified, a fund is being created for the purchase of new pews and the salary of the pastor has been enlarged. T. J. Richardson feels quite confident that all the financial demands will be met. He says that the calendar system of weekly payment, which they have installed, is the finest method they have ever tried. The school there has been in a contest with its neighbor at Soldier, Kan., and the attendance has been more than doubled. Much of the growth will be permanent.

The church at Larned, Kan., has had a successful year's work. Since the new $14,000 church was completed, something over a year ago, there has been steady growth. H. A. Pearce finished one year of work with the church on October 27 last. On that occasion it was reported that there had been an even 100 additions to the church during the year, $1,800 had been expended for local and missionary work, a strong Christian Endeavor organized, the Bible school more than doubled, and every department showed substantial growth. A contest with the school at Lyons, Kan., is proving of great value. This closes in December. A teacher-training class has been organized. J. C. Pontius writes us that in the prayer-meeting the pastor has taken up various lines of work, the one most interesting being his lectures and quizzes on Paul's journeys.

The outlook at Butte, Mont., is not the brightest, with conditions always more or less unsettled as regards the labor question. The recent financial troubles have especially affected the Montana mining centers. Many of the members of our church are affected. Edward O. Tilburn, the minister there, reports, however, that the summer has been a good one. The attendance is well maintained and there have been thirty-four additions since he went there April 1; but some of the strongest members have moved, the total losses by removal being twenty-eight. The new parsonage is nearing completion. The basement of the church has been remodeled and now forms a splendid Bible school room. The school is growing rapidly. In spite of the dark outlook, a meeting was to begin November 3, Brother Tilburn doing the preaching and Edward McKinney having charge of the music.

The Central Christian Church, of Warren, O., has already accomplished several of its Centennial purposes adopted early in the pastorate of J. E. Lynn. He has established another church, another Bible school, and raised certain mission funds for the maintainance of living-link missionaries. Its motto for this year is, to ... men and it states its purpose as follows: First, to win 100 men for Christ. Second, to raise 100 men in Bible school. Third, to see the men at every public meeting. Brother Lynn is preaching a series of sermons addressed primarily to men on "Personal Problems of Thinking Men." Opportunity is given at these services for men to hand in subjects they would like to have discussed in the series. The ... of Self-mastery," "Miracles," and "Suffering" are some of the topics announced. The Bible school has a contest for honors among its members and Herbert Moninger is to be present on December 8, when it is hoped the attendance will be 500.

—The First Christian Church, Springfield, Ill., on October 6 had its seventy-fourth anniversary and annual roll-call rally. The real anniversary date is in April, for it was in that month, in the year 1833, when "the twelve" met together to break bread at the home of Mrs. Garner Gooden, where now stands the C. & A. station, and there formed the first organization in that vicinity known simply as the Christian church. F. W. Burnham is the present pastor of the church, and in his church bulletin notes expresses an appreciation of the harmonious spirit of fellowship evidenced by the coming of two sister congregations to the anniversary meeting. "The maintaining and strengthening of these cordial relations", he says, between our growing churches in this city is a part of our duty, demonstrating, as it does, the practicability of our plea for unity on the New Testament basis. This church has organized a large teacher-training class for its Bible school and expects to begin a gospel campaign with the Netz sisters assisting, about January 12.

—And now comes the president of Christian University, Dr. Carl Johann, telling how much he has enjoyed the report of the convention at Norfolk, which he did not have the privilege of attending on account of his duties to the University. He adds the warning: "I am afraid, if you continue to make such a complete report of future conventions, you will be instrumental in materially decreasing the attendance, as the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST report will almost fill the bill!" We are obliged for this compliment, but as long as we are unable to print the tear-drop of holy joy, the heart throb, the warm handclasp, the music, the enthusiasm, the voice of speakers tremulous with emotion and the eye flashing from the soul the thoughts which the lips are seeking to utter, there is no danger that our reports of the conventions will cut down the attendance. On the contrary, we anticipate that a very much larger number, because of these reports, will want to go to see and hear and feel and experience for themselves.

J. Boyd Jones, of Marion, Ind., has had fifteen years of joyful service in the ministry. "It seems," he writes, "only yesterday since I tried to preach my first sermon in the old school house close by the old home." His first years were spent with country folk, and he looks back to those days with great joy. "They gave me the best the land afforded and made me feel I had honored them by being their guest. They paid me well for my services, far more than I deserved. They praised me for the good I did and threw a mantle of love over my many faults. They all seemed to love me and I loved them in return." Brother Jones then spent four years in college at Lexington, Ky., and has rich recollections of the hospitality of that city. In Kentucky he found his wife. As he looks back on all these years, the only regret, he says, is that he did not begin sooner. If he had a thousand lives he would joyfully give them all to the ministry. We are glad to know that Brother Jones is succeeding well at Marion, as he has in his other fields.

John V. Gardner, recently one of the elders of the Hamilton Avenue Church of St. Louis, Mo., removed to Boston a few months ago, and since going there has given much thought and attention to the needs of our cause in that city. Since the resignation of Brother Ward as the pastor of our congregation there, Brother Gardner has been in conference with D. L. Martin, pastor of the church known as "Christian Connection" in that city, with a view of securing the unity and co-operation of these churches. In a communicaion just at hand, Brother Gardner writes as follows: "Brother Martin is very enthusiastic over the idea of union, is filled with zeal for our cause and believes in every principle of our plea. We have engaged him as our regular pastor and he has commenced his work and the entire congregation is greatly pleased and encouraged. He has preached for us several times in the past two months and has now commenced his work regularly, and we hope within a year he will bring about fully the union of the two congregations here and perhaps begin a work which may have a national scope." We believe this to be a wise move, if it meets with the approval of the congregations interested, and we see no reason why it should not be widely followed in other parts of the country between peoples seeking to accomplish the same end by very much the same methods.

Children's Day for Home Missions.

Sunday, November 24, will be generally observed in the Sunday-schools as Children's Day for home missions. This is an opportunity presented to the Sunday-school for participation in the great work of preaching the Gospel in America. Last year our schools contributed something over $10,000 to home missions and this year it is hoped that not less than $25,000 will be received from this source. Many schools will celebrate the day in the use of the exercises sent out by the American Missionary Society, and those who do not will send a special offering taken on that day. Last year Kentucky led the states in the number of schools observing the day and in the amount of offering. Quite a little competition has developed among the states and it would not surprise us if Ohio or Missouri stepped to the front to challenge Kentucky for the first place this year. At all events every wide awake school should take the offering. No greater work is pressing upon the hearts of our people than that of home missions.

If it is impossible for you to observe the day on November 24, any day convenient between now and the first of January will do.

RICH KERNELS

From the Last Annual Report of the Foreign Society.

Gains.—The receipts amount to $395,534, a gain of $36,807, or 13 per cent. This is the largest gain in the history of the society, except the year 1905, when it was $44,604.

Churches.—Number contributing 3,415, a gain of 237. They gave $123,468, a gain of $14,450, or 13 per cent, the largest gain from the churches, as churches, in the history of the society. The churches averaged $36.13, and 1,060 reached their apportionment. We hope to enlist 5,000 contributing churches this year. They are asked to give $150,000 as churches.

Sunday-schools.—Last year 3,785 schools observed Children's day, a gain of 147, and their offerings aggregated $77,158, a gain of $10,349, or 15 per cent. This is the largest gain from the schools in the whole history of the society. The schools averaged $20.38 each, and 1,628 reached their apportionment. We hope to receive $100,000 from the children this year.

SCOVILLE IN HIS GREATEST MEETING

I left St. Louis on Nov. 4 to represent the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST in the great meeting at Lincoln, Nebraska. There were 1,436 added to the Lord in thirty days. How were so many converts made in so short a time? Let me tell of it just as I saw it the last week of the meeting. When I arrived in Lincoln I saw that the meeting was advertized in almost every way—with banners, window cards, pictures of Scoville and his eight helpers; also posters giving the number added to date, and announcement cards thrown everywhere. Arc lights were also used and at the auditorium read "Scoville To-night." Inside the building, which seats 2,500, were cards, posters, and hangers with large letters all around the main audience room, and maps, charts, etc., setting forth some of the best sayings and teachings of the Christian Church. Above and across the stage curtain the arc light letters read, "He died for me"; and at the side, over the baptistry, were the words, "Buried with Him". Beneath this was a white curtain on which was printed in large letters an outline of scriptural texts on baptism. The posters around the gallery read, "Where the scriptures speak we speak", "We will unite with any one, anywhere, on the Bible" "The Church of Christ, not sects, is our motto", "Get right with God", and so on. If any one thinks that Charles Reign Scoville does not preach and teach the scriptural truth in every possible way and with all the powers at his command, he has been wrongly informed. I have heard Wilbur Chapman, Campbell Morgan and a score of great evangelists, but I never heard one teach so much Bible and in so many different ways, every night for two hours, as Scoville. In his sermons, his prayers, his teaching at the baptismal pool, in his plea to saint and sinner, his advertising, his personal work, he gets before his great audiences every night those things which are most certainly believed among us, and he makes his audience help him do it by quoting verses of scripture in part and asking the audience to finish the verse. He sends all Christians out through the audience to do personal work while he pleads from the platform. His chorus of "American beauties" works! the preacher works; his helpers work. Scoville is a general in the Lord's battlefield, in marshalling all forces. He has been wise in the selection of his helpers—his wife, Ullom and wife, Smith and wife, and others, who impress people at once as being spiritually minded as well as experts in their line of work. Van Camp, one of the directors of music, is a great draw, his boyish ways as well as his sweet tenor voice, which is one of the best that anybody ever heard, making him popular with young and old.

The auditorium was packed every night early and the services began by chorus singing led by Smith or Van Camp. Then baptisms, scripture readings and prayers. At 7:30 Scoville enters and walks up to the platform, Bible in hand. All eyes are riveted upon him, necks craned and ears intent; and why? Is he so handsome? Has he such a lovable disposition? Has he an attractive voice? Is it his great oratory? No, none of these things. For hundreds of preachers have had all these qualities and never preached to more than 500 people. Why, then, do the multitudes come by the thousands, hear, believe, obey and go on their way rejoicing in his meetings? True, he has a good intellect and a strong personality all his own but this Charles Reign Scoville, in my judgment the greatest evangelist among us to-day, is as humble as a child, and shows no sign of bigotry. He has a message and the courage to deliver it without fear or favor with all the power at his command. Men seem to completely lose sight of the man and get the message, which is as follows: God speaks to you through his Son and you must hear his word, you must obey it, you must live it. When? Now, this day, this hour, this moment. Scoville says very little about the sweet by and by. He does not work on people's feelings but tells his hearers over and over again that he does not care what they think or how they feel or what church they belong to, God's commandments must be obeyed. He preaches a positive gospel, thousands accept it and are in no way converted to Scoville any more than to love and admiration as for any other evangelist or preacher. They came, on an average, fifty a night and such work is bound to be lasting in Lincoln and a great help to our work evangelists and church people there from all over the state and some from other states. On Sunday the great audiences reminded one of our national gatherings. It was a great closing service, one hundred and fifty added during the day and evening.

I fully believe that there are hundreds of throughout the state. There were preachers, preachers in the Christian churches who could do the same thing that Scoville is doing by using the same methods, preaching the same gospel, and illustrating it with all the helps and powers of heart, and mind and soul as he does under favorable conditions. He preaches the same old gospel that has been thundered out for ages.

Who helped him to do it here? Eight assistants, five resident preachers, Chancellor Aylesworth and the Ex-Governor of Nebraska; hundreds of Christians, a big chorus of singers. He used maps, charts, songs illustrated by stereopticon views. He used Methodists, Presbyterians, Baptists and others who did personal work. All seemed to enjoy the service.

Whose victory is it?

The Lord's through Charles Reign Scoville, assisted by all of the above named people. Generally we object to going out in the audience to do personal work and yet it seemed to me that three-fourths of these converts were made in that way. It is only a question of method. Let all dead churches get busy, go and do likewise, for faith without work is dead. The only objection or criticism I have to offer is the idea of church [illegible]ence. I do not think we have any more right or scriptural authority to grant preferences as to church membership than the Methodists have in regard to the mode of baptism.

On Monday night the great building was packed with people and a reception was given to the evangelists and new converts. Short addresses were made after which Scoville and his helpers were loaded down with valuable presents. The invitation was given once more and thirty-five more were added to the saved. The services Sunday and the reception on Monday night surpassed anything I ever saw in the way of scenes of refreshing and rejoicing in the presence of the Lord. The Ex-Governor, college professors, preachers, lawyers, doctors, business men of every type, Japanese, colored people and white—all worked and wept and rejoiced together in the great Pentecostal feasts. J. L. Smith.

"NEW ORLEANS, 1908"

I had hoped that the convention would not go to New Orleans. It was my opinion that a better convention would be held elsewhere. I was disappointed in the convention deciding to go to the "Crescent City." But to the "Crescent City" we go! Every strong-hearted man and woman among us should join to make it one of the greatest conventions in our history.

I have visited New Orleans since the convention in Norfolk. I see not a few reasons why we may, by going about it at once, and working throughout the year, have one of the best and one of the largest gatherings in the history of our organized work.

To begin with, the temperature is delightful at the convention season, October. We expect to meet in New Orleans, October 9-15, 1908. The temperature stood at just about 70 during my stay in New Orleans, the last week in October. It seemed neither warm nor cool. It was so pleasant that you thought nothing about the weather. I am assured that this temperature prevails in October. Let us decide in advance, then, that unless it should be raining, we are to have ideal weather for our great gathering.

In the next place, the passenger agents of the trunk and trans-continental lines running into New Orleans assure us that they will give us as good a rate as any other city on the American continent could offer. They said, "You may count on a rate of one-fare plus from 25 cents to a dollar round-trip, and it is possible that a rate of one cent per mile might be offered." The former rate is as good as we have ever received, excepting to St. Louis during the Louisiana Purchase Exposition. With these favorable railroad rates offered all parts of the country we ought to be able to gather up and take to New Orleans a mighty throng.

In the next place, the hotels are proposing not simply to be just, but to be generous. I have their written guarantee of rates which are from 25 cents to 35 per cent lower than the rates offered us by the large hotels in Norfolk, Va. The St. Charles Hotel is the greatest hotel in the South. It offers rates averaging 30 per cent lower than those which prevailed at "The Monticello," Norfolk, Va. Other hotels, among them brand new hotels, offer similar inducements. Instead of the hotels robbing us, as they are charged with doing at the time of the great winter festivals in that city, they have offered special inducements to bring us there. Remember that these promises are not oral, but written and signed by the proprietors and managers of the greatest hotels in the city.

Next, consider the place of meeting, "The Atheneum," situated on St. Charles Avenue. This building belongs to the Young Men's Hebrew Association of New Orleans, and has just been completed and furnished at a cost of more than $250,000. It simply outclasses any of the buildings in which our conventions have ever met. It is easy of access. The auditorium will seat about four thousand persons. Its acoustic properties are nearly perfect. An easy, conversational tone can be heard throughout the great hall. It is new and scrupulously clean, so that the ladies may wear their newest and most delicate fabrics without danger of them being soiled. The two sides of the building are wholly given to windows, so that the daytime light is perfect. It is equally well lighted at night by electricity. The windows along the sides turn on rods, and become doors which open upon a stone balcony on a level with the floor of the auditorium. It would, therefore, be the best ventilated building I have ever seen. All these windows transformed instantly into doors are means of exit in case of necessity, and iron stairways run from the stone balcony down to the ground, which is about fifteen feet below. The lobbies are large and ample. They are well lighted. There are luxuriantly furnished rooms, both for ladies and gentlemen. There are check rooms for baggage and for wraps, and more and better toilet facilities than in any building we ever have used. The stage will accommodate a chorus of about 500 voices. There are eight or ten dressing rooms on the stage for toilet and for rest, each of which is large enough for small committee meetings. The banquet hall, immediately below the auditorium, seating about a thousand persons, probably will be used as headquarters for the various societies.

The big hotels are from four to eight squares distant. Street car lines from all parts of the city run to and near the building. Across the street is the finest Methodist Church in the city, which if needed, probably can be used for our board meetings, C. W. B. M. meetings, and overflows. Everybody will be delighted with "The Atheneum" in every particular. It is a magnificent building.

The Progressive Union in New Orleans, which is a Commercial Club, guarantees that our brethren will have the necessary money for entertaining the convention. Two thousand five hundred dollars has already been raised when I was there. Another $2,500 will be forthcoming as needed. This association will furnish men and women to assist Brother Taylor and his congregation in handling this convention. The Ministers' Association in New Orleans will do likewise. The prospects are that the convention will be as well handled as any in our history. All things in New Orleans are favorable for a great convention.

I write as I do, early in the year, in order that our whole brotherhood may know that ample and delightful provision is being made for our reception, our entertainment and for the convention itself. I do this in the hope that great numbers of our people, who never have attended our convention, in addition to the mighty host which from year to year has been going, will all decide, owing to the low railroad rates, the low rates at the great hotels, the perfect temperature, the best building ever offered us, in addition to the warm-hearted southern hospitality, like the tribes which of yore went up to Jerusalem, to go to the "Crescent City" for the last convention preceding our Centennial, determined to make it the best and greatest of all the conventions held thus far.

I speak with the utmost confidence and candor, since I have visited the city, when I say that I feel certain that not one person in the great throng will be disappointed. Let us have a mighty outpouring to this great southern city in October, 1908.

Wm. J. Wright,
Corresponding Secretary.

The Congress of Disciples.

Now that the Norfolk Convention has passed into history the attention of our brotherhood should be directed to the National Congress which convenes in Bloomington next April.

The Committee is not quite ready to give the program publication. Suffice it to be said, however, that the coming congress will present an array of unusual platform talent. The minister, the college student, the Bible School worker, the active layman and, indeed, all who are alive to the needs of the Church will find it to their interest and profit to attend. Keep watch for the published program, and decide now to be present.

Edgar D. Jones,
First Church, Bloomington, Ill.

Sinclair College, St. Thomas, Ont.

"Our only Canadian College" opened for the thirteenth year on Oct. 1 with a gratifying attendance. The majority of the students are young men and nearly all are studying with the ministry in view. Committees are working on the education problem and conducting a symposium through "The Messenger."

The day set apart for the educational offering in Canada is Lord's Day, Dec. 1. Many letters have been sent to individual members of the churches; special letters with sermon material will be sent to the preachers; large posters calling the attention of all members to that date and free supplies of special envelopes, will be forwarded to every church and, finally, several of our very best pastors have been enlisted to hold educational rallies. Besides this, much prayer is being offered that God may pour out to us all a special blessing this year. The Canadian West is opening with golden opportunities and Ontario, the early home of our plea, has nothing to offer. Let all the brethren pray that the cause of Christian Education may be greatly awakened this year.

F. E. Lumley, Principal.

SIXTH UNITY CONVENTION

The sixth general convention among the Dano-Norwegians of America (and the third of this year) was held six miles north of Alta, Ia., with the independently standing church of "Christians only," who had given us a kind invitation to hold this convention in their midst.

For the sake of room the convention was held in the church building of the Methodist Episcopal congregation nearby, which building was kindly and freely loaned us without charge. Nearby was a Danish Baptist congregation, which gave up all their meetings during that week and Lord's day, and attended the convention. The same was done by a Swedish free mission church and its pastor, in the town nearby, and the American Methodists attended all the meetings in the evenings and especially on the Lord's day. We thus had the joy and pleasure of having a genuine unity meeting during those days. And truly brotherly love was prevalent among these various factions during these days.

But, of course, what we are after is, and what the object of our work is, that not only for a few days shall the followers of the Lord worship together their common Master and King, but that it shall become a regular habit and a steady practice. But we have to begin by getting people together if only for a few days to consider together the Word of God, as to genuine New Testament Christianity, and to pray together, and to become acquainted with one another to learn to love and esteem one another, etc.

I had the privilege to present the subject of New Testament Christianity and the plea of Christian unity to these large audiences. Several of the meetings were conducted in the English language, partly, and some even wholly, such as the Lord's day evening, when there was a very large audience present of young and old, of at least five or six different churches and congregations.

As aforesaid, this was the sixth convention of its kind since your humble brother had the privilege of beginning this work, three years ago. We held two very large and profitable ones in January and June, 1905. Then some of the sectic papers circulated among this people began to oppose and deny us space to call upon the people in these matters, and to present the New Testament plea to them. So during 1906, the following year, the work was going on very slowly, as we had no channel or press medium through which to speak to the people in these matters, and we were only able to hold one such convention during that year, and that one with great difficulty. But last year God answered our prayer, and we had the joy to start the publication of our bi-weekly paper, "Bibel-Vennen," which has been published regularly every alternate week since then.

Through this medium the interest was renewed, the visible result being that within nine months of this year, we have had earnest invitations for, and held three such general unity conventions among our free and independently standing Christians of America, in three different states, Minnesota, Wisconsin and Iowa. And we have the fourth one in view, for November, in North Dakota.

I am sure that all brethren are glad to know that by the grace of God we are getting along nicely in this work. Of course it has its adversaries and opposition, but no Christian worker can very well bother his mind too much about that.

After publishing the paper for nine months, we only have a comparatively small deficit. Many of our own people have done a good deal for the paper, but as yet, there are too few of such to be able to carry the burden alone, hence, the little shortage.

Ossian, Ia. C. S. Osterhus.

MISSOURI CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR UNION

The twentieth annual convention of this union held its sessions at Springfield. It was regarded as one of the best in recent years. The attendance was large, the sessions enthusiastic and profitable. The Christian Endeavor spirit is not waning, when one young man goes from Canton and several from Hannibal to Springfield for a state convention. The registration, with the one dollar for badge and program, reached about four hundred. The prominence of the Christian Church young people on program, committees and everywhere, was most gratifying. This is as it should be. We must practice before we can preach Union. Our young people are readily blended in service. They are not easily prejudiced. "One is your Master and all ye are brethren," is the Master's way with them.

Christian Endeavor is one of the Lord's handmaidens, working mightily, yet sweetly, for Christian Union. We must be at the front in this work and there is nothing but ourselves to hinder. The writer was President last year and our beloved F. F. Walters, of Springfield, is made Vice President for this year, the writer becoming a member of the advisory board. There is no prejudice against us. Guy M. Withers and wife and Mrs. Martha S. Trimble, of Kansas City; Mrs. Hodgden, of St. Louis; Prof. C. M. Sharpe, of Columbia, and F. F. Walters were among the principal speakers of this convention, besides the President having two leading addresses. All these are members of the Christian Church. I am stressing these facts because I want our people to know them.

One session of the Convention is never to be forgotten. Mrs. Cameron Strother had delivered a most earnest address on Missions and emphasized the demand for more workers. "Who will go?" and "What are you going to do about it?" were repeated many times. Brother Moffett, of South Street Church, had led in a most helpful prayer. Then under the invitation for any one who would like to go to foreign fields, if the Lord would open the way to come forward and stand with Mrs. Strothers, fifteen young people placed their services on the Altar. That was a tearful, thankful, prayerful time. We had reached the heights. It was not easy to descend, but praying together we came down, ready for service. Behold the workings of Christian Endeavor. Be no longer skeptical of its mission. It stands for union in the home-lands and for the more speedy conversion of the heathen abroad.

The Springfield Convention will be far reaching in its influence and merits a large place in the history of several of the churches.

S. W. CRUTCHER.

Elsewhere will be found the simple and beautiful words of James N. Crutcher at the coffin side of his father, the beloved minister of the Gospel, S. W. Crutcher. The words are worthy of the man who spoke them and of the life that was their inspiration. But some men need no words over their coffin dust. Eloquently all their lives long have they spoken. Of these thrice blessed souls was our Brother Crutcher.

We have had men more eminent in pulpit talent, men with greater reputation as preachers and yet few, indeed, who have done more lasting good. How regal he was in friendship! Few men ever loved their friends as S. W. Crutcher loved and few have been more tenderly loved in return. In Missouri, Kentucky, Arkansas, Texas and other states blessed by his ministry there are thousands who feel that they have lost a friend. I set it down as soberest estimate that he was the most illustrious man in friendship I have ever known.

What a tender, winsome preacher, too! Simple he was in speech and in his ofttimes homely similes there was a wealth of true philosophy. He was never dull—a heaven-born humor made that impossible—and he was often steadyingly wise beyond the average wisdom of those who preach. And then how superbly militant! Childlike and yet a fighter. No more uncompromising enemy of the saloon ever breathed the breath of life and there are many of us who think that Kentucky's present day salvation from that unspeakable curse is due largely to the sentiment our fallen brother created in his warrior days of old. Never until he put by the armor did he cease to preach and to vote against this common enemy. But the best word cannot be spoken at all, for it is as the proud and honored father of a large and devoted family, and as a husband one must speak to interpret him rightly, and this is sacred ground. "We loved each other every day the more as we grew older," were the beautiful words his wife whispered into my ear just before we laid his body beneath the trees. Such a husband! Such a father! In beautiful Mt. Washington we left the sacred clay. Just the simplest services, a hymn, "How firm a foundation," a prayer, sweet flowers, tears, love-lit faces, sorrowing, yet hoping hearts. We mourned his going, and yet there was not one in that group by the filling grave that did not feel that he, husband, friend, brother, had gone to his Father.

George Hamilton Combs.

Brother Crutcher requested his son, J. N. Crutcher, to make the address at his funeral, and the text was Revelation 14:13. He said:

In a family burying ground in Central Kentucky rests the dust of a young mother who died many years ago. On the marble shaft, overgrown with ivy, you will find the words of my text and the name, Tabitha Williams Crutcher. She died when her twin boys were but ten days old, leaving them to the tender care of their grandmother. William Letcher Crutcher and Samuel Williams Crutcher were raised in a home where the teachings of Jesus were paramount. Their father was a Kentucky farmer who taught them lessons of piety and industry. In August, 1858, when in their twentieth year, Samuel and William were baptized by Elder W. B. Stivers and became members of the Christian Church. Samuel prepared himself for the Gospel ministry by attendance at Bethany College, West Virginia, and Kentucky University, and preached his first sermon on January 26, 1862, at Perryville, Ky. He was later ordained to the ministry by Robert Graham, Dr. R. Richardson, Prof. R. Milligan and Dr. I. L. Pinkerton. He has preached faithfully and efficiently for forty five years, serving congregations in Kentucky, Missouri and Texas, and for two years served the congregation in Pine Buff. Seven men have been baptized by him who are now preaching the old story of Jesus and the Cross—George Hamilton Combs, Kansas City; C. Q. Wright, United States Navy Chaplain; Royal L. Handley, Chicago; James M. Bailey, Missouri; Frank G. Tyrrell, Los Angeles; W. E. Ellis, Kentucky, and James N. Crutcher. He baptized, ordained and married F. G. Tyrrell and J. N. Crutcher. On October 13, 1864, he was married to Virginia Louise, eldest daughter of Dr. L. L. Pinkerton, physician and pioneer preacher of the Christian Church. Father and mother have raised nine of their eleven children, two sons dying in infancy. Two daughters, Linnie, who is now the wife of W. J. McIntosh, of Chickasha, Oklahoma, and Mary, wife of John H. Keith, of Forney, Texas, treasure the memory of a devoted father, and seven sons, Howard, physician, Roswell, N. M.; William, physician, Pine Bluff; Philip, druggist, Pine Bluff; Lewis, physician, Kansas City; James N., pastor at Higginsville, Mo.; Harry, druggist, Pasadena, Cal., and Laurence, railway clerk, Pine Bluff, arise up to comfort their mother in the days to come.

Samuel Williams Crutcher believed that the preaching of the Gospel was the greatest task assigned to man and to be a laborer with God in the redemption of man was the highest honor that could come to men. He cared nothing for oratory in the generally accepted use of that word, but believed that the sublime truths of the Gospel, stated in the terms of ordinary thought, were calculated to bring the highest good to erring humanity. He was possessed of a wholesome optimism, and met the discouragements of life with the belief that "God lives and all is well." He had little interest in the various vagaries and foibles that distract preachers sometimes. He was firmly grounded in the truth and believed that things that divide humanity into warring factions were after all but incidental, even though they were often tragic. That the world was growing better he had no doubt, and he had the knowledge, too, that he had contributed in measure to the betterment of conditions. He believed that the world was not so much in need of great theologians as it was of men who understood the sorrows of the plain people and sought to help them in their distresses. He was in no sense ambitious to be considered a great preacher, but counted it a high honor to be told that his sermons had been helpful. He cared little for theological discussion, but gave his attention rather to the study of moral questions. He never held a religious debate, and polemics were distasteful to him. He sought to be friend those who needed friendship, and no home was too humble and no life too lowly for him to give his attention to them in a helpful way. He considered the saloon as the greatest enemy of human happiness and in earlier years fought the traffic with all his might. He was happy in his last days to realize that communities and even whole states are banishing this frightful curse.

Our comfort in this hour is in that faith our father has preached for so many years. He died in peace, without fear as to the future and as quietly as an infant upon its mother's breast. During his long illness never a complaint was heard. He was grateful for every kindness manifested by his friends of Pine Bluff. He rests from his labors, and through others his works will follow throughout the years. He is to-day with those loved long since and lost awhile. "I will not say, I cannot say he is dead. He's just away."

STATISTICAL REPORT By C. A. HOFFMANN

In the years of 1891 and 1892 the United States spent many thousands of dollars to gather the religious statistics of this country. During the year of 1907 similar work has been begun. Our government is well paid for such a work. It is needed by public officials by way of comparison. Is the moral sentiment of the country, so far as the books show, gaining? Does the country wish a more rigid enforcement of laws which affect the moral fiber of men, such as a day of rest, local option, prohibition, divorce and others? A wise legislator would naturally take advantage of any change of sentiment in enacting laws of this character, but his vote would certainly be affected by the fact that there has been a gain or loss in the numbers of communicants in the various religious bodies.

These religious statistics are also needed for general information, especially so by the religious denominations themselves. They raise various and important questions. Consider the one fact, that the four largest religious bodies in America have made a gain of 45 per cent since the census of 1890, while the Disciples of Christ gained one hundred. Is it because these denominations are divided up into a number of smaller bodies, or is it because the latter are more united? Is it because the former are burdened with human creeds, and the latter take no other but the divine creed? Is it because the former are mystical and unsatisfactory in presenting the gospel to sinners and the latter more rational in preaching the Word and more apostolic in their evangelistic methods? These and many other thoughts must come up in the minds of the great leaders of the churches and have no little effect in modifying, correcting and adapting their work and preaching to present needs and conditions from which great good must of necessity come.

In gathering our own statistics, I have been compelled, largely, to depend on our state secretaries. When the government tried to gather the statistics for this year direct from the churches they soon found it to be a failure. A messenger from the Department of Commerce and Labor, Washington, D. C., visited your secretary and importuned him to take the work off their hands. This, we assure you, is no small undertaking. If we were compelled to send one letter to each church it would take over $1,000. But a large number of churches pay no heed to either a letter from a government official or a member chosen by this body. We are, therefore, compelled to use every ingenuity to secure statistics from some churches.

These difficulties grow out of three things: First—some of our state secretaries do not keep accurate lists of churches and postoffices. Second—the carelessness and indifference of pastors and church clerks. Third—the growth of a demand for uniformity in matters of opinion in certain quarters. The Bible never changes, but conditions to which its truths are to be applied are constantly changing. Some of our people do not realize this fact; they are without the education that comes through county and district massmeetings of the churches for the training of ministers, church officers and members so essential for the proper understanding of general duties, relationships and changed conditions. For this reason, if a former church clerk did not make a report, in some quarters, neither will the new one. To make a report to a statistical secretary at once becomes an innovation. There are two or three thousand of these country churches and a few in towns and cities that can never be reached through a national convention, nor even through state conventions, but only through the annual massmeeting where a dozen churches come together to discuss the various phases of church work and relationships. Whatever weaknesses may appear in the reports of our national conventions they are mainly due to the fact that you do not take our conventions in miniature to the very doors of our churches. This is absolutely necessary to maintain the growth, vitality and unity of the churches of Christ.

In our work in gathering statistics for the Department of Commerce and Labor we now have reports of some seven thousand congregations. This leaves over four thousand yet to hear from. We hope to complete this statistical work by February 1, and by that time have a report from every church in the brotherhood.

The general report stood for present year on September 1 as follows:

Year.	1906.	1907
Churches	11,198	11,301
Communicants	1,269,591	1,283,416
Bible schools	8,952	9,056
Enrolled in Bible schools	870,622	890,717
Ministers	6,570	6,619

On the face, this shows a gain of only 13,825, while the actual gain is over 28,000. The reason for this is the impossibility of keeping churches in line and new state secretaries to have them reported. Some state secretaries draw the line on churches which will not co-operate with them in mission work, especially those churches which declare openly that they are not in sympathy with them on account of missionary organization. Other secretaries will count churches for several years after they have ceased to meet, and then when the new secretary is elected, he will drop out scores of churches in a single year. This is on the same principle that church boards at times revise their list of members every few years and drop scores of members who have moved away, died or become inactive.

Our missionary receipts show an entirely different story. There has been over $400,000 raised and expended in the foreign mission field by the two societies working there, and over $600,000 in the home field by the state societies, the Christian Woman's Board of Missions and the American Christian Missionary Societies combined. This is a glorious advance in missionary offerings. About 65 per cent of our churches are now making offerings through some agency of the congregation for missions. In some of these churches the Sunday-school only contributes. In others it is only an auxiliary to the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. In still others it is an independent mission somewhere, or possibly a local organization. It is gratifying to know that the missionary offerings have increased, to a remarkable degree, in the last twenty years. Here is our report:

Missionary Receipts—
Foreign Christian Missionary Society	$ 305,565
Christian Woman's Board of Missions	281,638
American Christian Missionary Society	123,597
Board of Church Extension	56,525
State and District Missions	256,833
Miscellaneous Missions	30,000
Total	$ 579,750
Education and Benevolence—
Buildings and endowments of schools	$450,000
National Benevolent Association	96,980
Ministerial Relief	22,750
Kentucky Widows' and Orphans' Home	10,000
Total	$579,730
Local Church Work—
Ministerial support	$4,460,000
Incidental church expenses	1,100,000
Church buildings	760,000
Church and Bible school literature	340,000
Total	$6,660,000
Grand total	$8,273,858

This table shows the amounts of the missionary offerings for the year to be $1,034,128, or 83 cents per member. This is a very creditable showing for a people who have but few large gifts to swell their totals and considering the fact that many thousands of our people are scattered in the farming districts of the great west and many of their churches are without regular pastoral care. It should also be remembered that the value of our church property has increased from $12,206,038 to $23,271,649 since 1892, or nearly doubled. Our people have been building houses of worship and, as these figures show, while our membership has doubled our church property has met with a like increase. Our motto two years ago was: "A million for missions by the year 1909." But here we have more than a million now and two years' time to continue this rapid growth.

It may be that some of you are disappointed because the net gains in membership are no larger and point to our great meetings and the thousands that are brought to Christ in them. In answer to this, I only need to point to the fact that one-fourth of our churches are without preaching and an additional fourth have preaching only once a month and both classes are without pastoral care. The losses here are enormous.

But taking our cause as a whole, we have had a great year. The work of the centennial organization is waking up our people and we may look forward with the assurance and hope that all will be well and the great cause which this missionary convention represents will triumph and aid our blessed Master in establishing on earth "peace and good will toward men."

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Good Meeting at Clay Center, Kans.

Our little band of seventy-five here bravely undertook the task of calling one of our best evangelistic teams to put our plea before the people here, realizing that it was a hard task. No great meeting had ever been held by us, in this sectarian town, with sixteen churches struggling for a place.

Cooksey and Miller, who held our meeting, commanded the attention and respect of the whole community. The people came, heard and responded to the invitation, giving us a strong working force planning for larger things the coming year; among others a new $15,000 house in the near future.

H. R. Murphy.

The only thing that prevented a larger ingathering was our small house, in which we could not accommodate the people at any time that wanted to hear. Fifty-three were added of our wealthiest and best citizens—47 by confession and obedience.

By unanimous vote of the official board and church Cooksey and Miller are invited back next year with a tent to seat a thousand people. No church need fear to call them.

H. R. Murphy, Pastor.

To Be a Mother of Churches.

In the budget of your recent issue it is stated that Edgemont expects to erect a tabernacle. The tabernacle is already erected and I wish to tell your readers how it happened. After closing my meeting at Hot Springs, S. D., in May I cast around for some point which might be made able to co-operate with the church just organized at the Springs. I went to Edgemont where an organization (of five members) had been effected in Dec., 1905; four of them were still there "breaking bread from house to house." I found several other members and planned for a meeting which we held in September. The church now numbers 31. They had no property and but little money, yet great faith and unflagging energy. We bought the best location in town and built a tabernacle of the Lawrence Wright type, covered it with roofing and the sides with tar paper so it may be used for a few years. The little band have paid only a part of the cost; the balance is being met by the month. They have raised $400, including the expenses of the meeting, and in addition have pledged to support a minister one-half time in co-operation with Hot Springs.

The temper of the people is shown by the experience of Mrs. Louis Kelley, of Emporia, Kan., who recently visited them as she was making a tour of the churches of S. D. in the interest of the C. W. B. M. She took 15 subscriptions to the Tidings and organized one of the strongest auxiliaries of the State. The church is alive to every good work.

The city is a strategic point; we have groups of brethren in every direction, and as the country develops rapidly this church will find itself the proud mother of other churches.

Cook, Neb. Joel Brown.

Ohio.

J. P. Allison, of the Dunham ave. church, Cleveland, is in a meeting with the church at Elmore, beginning November 10.—E. P. Wise is assisting C. C. Cowgill and the New Cumberland, W. Va., church in a meeting that began November 4.—John Mullen, recently resigned at McConnelsville, has accepted a call from the First church at Findlay, recently vacated by C. H. Bass.—Clyde Darsie has offered his resignation at Bowling Green. During his ministry at that place a new house of worship worth about 27,000 dollars has been erected and the numbers increased. We surely hope Bro. Darsie will stay in Ohio. We want all good preachers, especially Darsies.—The meeting of the Eastern Ohio Ministerial Association at Hiram was very poorly attended outside of Hiram. But the meetings were very profitable to all who did attend. A wedding kept the writer from hearing the papers except those of Prof. Wakefield and E. P. Wise. They were worth going far to hear. The papers of Prof. Snoddy and Prof. Peckham were very highly commended by those who heard them. The future of the Association was left with a committee consisting of Lloyd Darsie, Prof. Snoddy and C. A. Freer with the suggestion that if possible its annual meeting be merged with the annual outing meeting of the Cleveland Preacher's Association.——A very significant meeting was held in Cleveland on Monday, November 4, between the Baptist Preachers' Association and "our fellows." It was an ideal meeting in spirit. Dr. Stilwell, pastor of the First Baptist church of Cleveland, read a paper on what Baptists stand for. With an eye for all good things for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST this paper was procured for publication in our journal and it will surely be read with delight and profit by the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST family. Ninety-five per cent of it was as clear a statement of what we are trying to teach as any of us could make. John E. Pounds spoke for us on the union of Baptists and Disciples of Christ. Never did he do any task more satisfactorily to his brethren. The result was that a union meeting will be held by the preachers of the two bodies every three months and we shall hope to report some practical things growing out of this conference within a few months. If all Disciples were like those that attended that meeting, and all Baptists were like those present that day, it would be very easy to unite the two bodies. But alas, 'tis not so. This is no time for little, narrow, contracted men. The hair-splitter is about out of a job. The little, spiteful, contentious spirit is out of date. Who dares to prophesy as to what is ahead? The next quarter century will see things done in the Master's kindom that we have not yet dreamed of. Indeed, the kingdom of Christ is coming to the earth.——The church at Shelby where C. C. Wilson ministers, is in a series of meetings. Miss Una Dell Berry, of Indiana, has charge of the music, and T. Alfred Fleming is preaching. November third was a rainy day and Ohio Missions will suffer because of it. Let every church take an offering for this great work.—C. A. Freer.

Kansas Notes.—Second District.

The following churches in this district have not sent the annual report to the state office for the year closing June 30, 1907: Colony, Central Union, Crandall, De Soto, Gridley, Glenwood, Louisburg, North Lawrence, Lawrence (colored), La Cygne, Lyndon, Norwood, Parker, Princeton, Selma, Topeka 1st, Williamsburg and Wall street. If these churches will fill out the blank sent them by A. Rosalea Pendleton, of Topeka, the State Secretary, and return to her by Nov. 20, they will be reported in the Year Book for 1907. ——The church at Paola held its protracted meeting in September. J. M. Lowe was the evangelist and Lucile May Park was leader of song. Both are efficient, and devoted to their work. There were 27 additions—17 by baptism. The church was greatly benefited by the meeting.—— We held our annual meeting here Nov. 6. It was a delightful hour of business and social intercourse rendered doubly so by the report that the church was entirely free from debt, the first time in several years. The number added to the membership during the year was 48, making a net gain of 12. The total amount of money raised by the church and all the departments for all purposes was $2,445.67, of which $167.16 was for missions. I have entered upon my second year as pastor.——Every church in this district should raise a generous offering for Kansas missions this month. W. S. Lowe.

Splendid meetings are in progress at Norwood, 1st church Covington and Mt. Healthy—Arthur Sebastian is starting in well with the work at Bethel, where J. H. Lockwood labored for nearly a half century.——G. W. Thompson held a good meeting recently at Felicity, O., where 27 were added.——J. W. Hagin also had a very successful meeting at Carrolton, Ky.——C. M. Fillmore's successor at Carthage has not yet been chosen, but there is a probability that Homer E. Sala, of Sebring, will be the man.——S. B. White has organized a Men's Bible class at Bellevue, Ky., which has become already one of the most hopeful features of the work there.—— Recent visitors in our preachers' meetings were Royal J. who is spending some time here preaching and lecturing; and Claris Yuell, of Rising Sun, Ind. ——I have resigned as pastor of the church at Lockland and will close a ministry here of more than six and one-half years. I will take charge of the Fourth church, Akron, O., Jan. 1st, 1908. This church is in a field where there are 5000 people, and is the only church. When I came to Lockland more than six years ago the church was a struggling mission supported by the State Board. The field being an exceedingly hard one no phenomenal growth has been made, but in spite of all obstacles it has become a permanent work and thoroughly organized. The congregation now owns the best lot in the town upon which a new church will be built as soon as sufficient funds may be raised.

At Olympia, Wash.

Since October 3 the church in this city has been laboring with Evangelists S. W. Jackson and wife and Edward McKinney in a protracted meeting, with 38 additions to date. The meeting will close Nov. 3. Brother McKinney is a very competent singing evangelist. Sister Jackson is that and also, like her husband, a preacher of the Gospel. While Brother Jackson has been faithful to our plea he has made a favorable impression upon other religious bodies. He will occupy the pulpit of the Episcopalians next Sunday morning while Sister Jackson will address the ladies of that church to-morrow.

Good Results at Nickerson, Kas.

In the big tent meeting held for four weeks by the Christian Church at Nickerson, Kas., led by W. L. Harris, of Lyons, there were 77 additions. Thirty-nine were "buried" with their Lord in baptism. Of the total number only four were under 18 years of age; the average was 45 years, and on up to 88 years. Two-thirds of the converts were married persons. This is a hard field, there being denominational opposition to the Christian Church. Brother Harris presented our plea so that many obeyed the call. Several young men promised to take up study for the ministry. Sunday night the converts stood up in a line that reached over one-half way around the tent, and the audience of over 1,000 people passed around and, taking them by the hand, bade them God speed. A basket dinner was held that day. The music by Brother and Sister Harris and Sister Wilson was greatly appreciated by all, as was the singing by a large chorus. All regretted to see the evangelists go and many wanted to continue another week. Money was raised to finish seating the house with opera chairs and plans are now being made to enlarge the building. Brother Gates has resigned to return to the evangelistic field and we are in correspondence with a good man to take the work in this college town. Brother Harris' heart is in the work and every one that attended the meeting liked him, regardless of church or creed.

Bethany College.

President J. W. McGarvey, of the Bible College, Lexington, Kentucky, one of Bethany's most distinguished alumni, has visited us, delivering his lecture on "Jesus and Criticism" in the Chapel Hall. This was greatly enjoyed by the student body who as usual gave Bro. McGarvey a royal welcome. During the earlier part of the week Brother McGarvey was in attendance and lectured at the conference of the Bible League held in Pittsburg.——President Cramblet dedicated the new church of Christ at Claysville, Pa., last Lord's day and next Sunday will officiate at the dedicatory services over the new temple of worship at McMechen, W. Va. ——Prof. W. B. Taylor, pastor of the Bethany church, has given a report of the board to the effect that the proposed erection of a memorial church at the cost of $20,000, as a centennial aim, has been postponed two years in order that the efforts of the congregation in helping to endow the college may not be hindered. W. T. Moore, who has taken up the work of raising the $500,000 by 1909 for the improvement of the college, is getting the brotherhood in line and prospects point to his success. O. T. Lytle.

Ministerial Exchange.

Churches unable to engage professional evangelists can learn of a strong team that may be secured at reasonable rates, by addressing "The College," Dexter, Mo. Only a few engagements will be accepted.

Evangelists Cantrell and Nelms, who have been holding meetings for the last few months in Central Illinois, wish to go either South or West for a few meetings. Address C. G. Cantrell, 421 W. Monroe street, Springfield, Ill.

S. J. Vance, Delta, Colo., has time for two meetings in 1908. He desires to make early dates that the churches may have ample time to prepare for good meetings. He raises the salary for himself and singer by lectures and offerings, the churches providing only entertainment and traveling expenses.

Churches desiring L. B. VanDeusen for meetings in 1908 may address him at Durant, I. T.

The church at Jadwin, Mo., wants a minister for one-fourth time. W. T. Walker writes that there is room for a good work in that county for the right man.

Congregations needing a minister for full time, or for half-time, may address J. F. King, Parkersburg, Ill. Only those churches whose members are working in harmony need reply.

Dependable Books

—To-day in the Land of To-morrow. By Jasper T. Moses. The author assumes the role of seer and tells of the Mexico that is to be—one of earth's mightiest nations. His earnest plea is for the evangelization of this growing power, that it may be won away from the papacy and made truly Christian. 55 cents.

—Reason and Revelation. By Robert Milligan, formerly President of Lexington Bible College. This not only lays a durable foundation for the faith of the young men preparing for the ministry, but is equally valuable in confirming and re-establishing a faith inclined to waver amid the stress and storm of life. $2.

—The Evangelistic Note. By W. J. Dawson. The opening essay on "The Evangelistic Note" is an interesting recountal of the revolutionizing Christian experience undergone by the author, leading him to resign his London pastorate and begin the evangelistic work he has now undertaken in America. He is unconventional, direct and authoritative. $1.25.

—The Antidote to Christian Science. By James M. Gray, Dean of Moody Bible Institute. This is not a virulent attack on Christian Science—there have been too many of them. In a forbearing spirit the author tries to show where Christian Science fails as a religion. We have sold many of these and they are highly commended by our patrons. 75 cents.

—The Iowa Pulpit of the Church of Christ. These twenty-two sermons were collected and edited by J. H. Painter. There is manifested a renewed interest in the old landmarks, and this class of sermons is having a large sale. G. T. Carpenter, D. R. Dungan, J. H. Painter, G. L. Brokaw, H. U. Dale, D. R. Lucas, Charles Blanchard, J. Mad. Williams and Allen Hickey are among the contributors. $1.

—The Lamp of Sacrifice. By W. Robertson Nicoll. These are sermons preached on special occasions by the widely-known editor of "The Expositor's Bible." There are twenty-one of them. The spirit and power of sacrifice is seen running through them all. "Gethsemane the Rose Garden of God," "The Message for Midnight," "The Lamb's War with the Beast," "Aspects of the Mystical Union" are among the subjects. $1.50.

We recommend each of these to our patrons.

The third psalm is the Scripture portion for the consecration meeting. No more beautiful selection could be made. Let us read it over a few times in preparation for a fine meeting. Each one will find some suggestive word for a testimony or for an acknowledgment of the goodness of our God.

You are reading the American Standard Revised Version. You read this version because you wish to have the text which brings the original writing nearest to you. The words, "the Lord," so common in the Common Version, are here rendered "Jehovah." The wonderful name of Jehovah occurs five times in the psalm. In every verse except one there is a reference to him and in that verse, the eighth, there is a reference to his works. So we have a psalm filled with the presence of Jehovah.

It is a psalm of thanksgiving for his gracious and saving works. Five times we find the word "work" or works. Every verse has a reference to the works of Jehovah, some of them very specific, as in verses 5, 6, 7, 9. So here we have a psalm filled with the works of Jehovah.

The writer had been meditating upon these works of Jehovah and was so impressed by them that he overflows with praise. The praise is not kept in his heart close and quiet but he wishes to voice it in "the council of the upright, and in the congregation." He turned the assembly into a praise meeting.

Consequently this psalm is just what you want for a good Christian Endeavor consecration meeting. And you will notice that the writer's praise becomes consecration in the last verse in which he writes "a good understanding have all they that do his commandments."

Get into the spirit of the writer. He was thinking of Jehovah. Who is Jehovah? Some thoughtful and devout writers suggest that Jehovah of the Old Covenant is Jesus of the New Covenant. This is only a surmise, but it is a reverent and reasonable one. At any rate you may think much and often of God.

Your thought of God should impel you to praise as it did the writer. The thought of God rouses enthusiasm. You are contemplating his works as did the Psalmist, and the opportunity of fellowship in the works of God is your consecration.

The psalm offers you material for a word of praise in the coming consecration meeting. You can say, "the works of Jehovah are great." You can say, if you feel it so, "his work is honor and majesty." Some people are ashamed of the work of our God.

You can say "Jehovah is gracious and merciful." You can tell also how he "gives food unto them that fear him." You also know how he is "ever mindful of his covenant." You can thank him for the "heritage of the nations" he has given us in this good land of ours. You can praise him for "truth and justice and uprightness" and for his great "redemption."

And when you pray you will acknowledge "his holy and reverent name." Your consecration begins in your fear of him, an evidence of your good sense. Only fools refuse to acknowledge God and keep his commandments.

Thus the thought of God and of his works leads to consecration. And such consecration, the doing of his commandments, not lip service, establishes his praise forever.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

By Charles S. Medbery.

The Meaning and Moral Uses of Thanksgiving Day.

Topic Nov. 27th, 1 Chron. 16:1-36; Acts 27:33-36.

This psalm that David delivered into the hands of Asaph and his brethren at the bringing up of the ark to the city of David, strikes a note of royal thanksgiving and praise. It is found also in the 105th psalm, in part. There is a high note of exultation in its utterances. It is reminiscent of the "wondrous works" which God had wrought in the deliverance of Israel from Egypt and the wilderness wanderings. It recalls the covenant made with Abraham, his oath unto Isaac and the confirmation of the same to Jacob for a law, and to Israel for an everlasting covenant. It is a magnificent pean of praise and triumphal thanksgiving and rejoicing.

Where, indeed, would you go to find anything surpassing this:

Sing unto the Lord, all the earth;
Show forth from day to day his salvation;
Declare his glory among the heathen;
His marvelous works among all nations.

Glory and honor are in his presence;
Strength and gladness are in his place.
Give unto the Lord, ye kindreds of the people,
Give unto the Lord glory and strength.
Give unto the Lord the glory due unto his name;
Bring an offering and come before him:
Worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness.
Fear him, all the earth;
The world shall be stable
That it be not moved.
Let the heavens be glad and let the earth rejoice:
And let men say among the nations—
"The Lord reigneth."

It is strikingly significant that out of this solemn yet joyous thanksgiving came the impulse and inspiration to build the house of the Lord in Jerusalem. It was the beginning of the marvelous prosperity that marked the closing years of David's reign, including his final subduing of the Philistines, the conquest of Moab and the establishment of his dominion by the river Euphrates, and the defeat of the Syrians, so that the Syrians became David's servants and brought gifts. "Thus the Lord preserved David whithersoever he went."

Drunk with prosperity, we have forgotten God. So we need to be reminded again and again of our dependence upon him. In the midst of the unstable condition of our commercial affairs, it is worth our while to recall the assurances of Israel's prophet-king. Only as we trust in him and obey his laws will we find the world stable, that it be not moved. The moral value of financial reverses is that we are impelled toward the things that abide and are eternal. We have to get back to first things, now and then, else we might forget God altogether. The meaning and moral uses of Thanksgiving Day are just in this reminder of the source of all our blessings and in the emphasis of the solemn fact that there is nothing really stable and certain in this world save as we commit our ways unto him. So let us pray on this

The Death of Samson.—Judges 16:21-31.

A wild and stormy life was that of Samson. Read the whole story in chapters 13-16. Nearly every nation has in its early history or in its pre-historic traditions some such hero of gigantic strength. And often, as here, physical strength is joined with moral weakness. But the character, rough and imperfect though it is, is relieved by a dash of generosity and a rude zeal for the service of his people.

The strength of Samson is conceived and represented as having a distinct religious significance. He was not strong because he was better than other men, but his strength was a gift from Jehovah and was connected with the Nazarite vow which his mother took and which he kept. The Nazarite was supposed to be a person of special and extraordinary purity of life. His purity was, to be sure, largely ceremonial. He was to refrain from eating unclean things and drinking wine, and was to let his hair grow long. He was, in general, to live a life of wild asceticism which separated him, in measure, from his fellows. So Samson was never a man of the multitude, but was always a man apart.

This separateness was perhaps a gain, from the standpoint of the then current notion of maintaining virtue by withdrawal from the world, but it was a hindrance to Samson's work as a leader of Israel. He appears as a border chieftain, living on the frontier toward the Philistines and harrying them often by his own individual exploits. But the doing of individual exploits is not necessarily warfare. Born to command, Samson did not command others and in critical moments could not even command himself. He was a champion more than a leader of Israel.

Samson's strength was from the Lord. His weakness was from his own folly. His experience in border warfare must have taught him the danger of an alliance with the Philistines. His friends must have warned him, if they dared. But the lust of the eye was stronger than his discretion. His very strength had swept opposition from his path, tempted him to disregard restraint, and given him the habit of getting what he wanted regardless of consequences. The consequence in his case was his betrayal, downfall, and blindness.

The death of Samson was more glorious than his life. His blindness and bondage were pathetic without being heroic, for they had come upon him not in the performance of duty but in the gratification of his own selfish and foolish desires. But at last in blindness and weakness he learned the lesson of sacrifice. Perhaps it was in part mere thirst for revenge which made him willing to give up his own life that he might bring a great disaster upon his enemies. But let us suppose rather that during that period of his blindness he had taken time to think over the fruitlessness of his life and the smallness of his service to his people, and resolved that he would, at cost of his own life, close his career by a deed which, according to the rude morals of that age, would seem a great blessing to Israel.

But, taking Samson's career as a whole, the most striking thing is the disparity between his great powers and his small achievements. He is neither saint nor hero, but a ten-talent man who made poor use of his capital. God's plan was foiled by man's unwillingness to be used in the appointed way. Milton puts these words into the mouth of Samson:

"Let me not rashly call in doubt
Divine prediction. What if all foretold
Had been fulfilled but through mine own default?
Whom have I to complain of but myself?

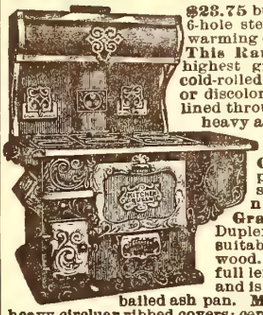
The Bible School at Work

Conducted by J. H. HARDIN,
State Bible School Superintendent of Missouri, 311 Century Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

A STATE SUPERINTENDENT FOR ILLINOIS.—When Marion Stevenson resigned to enter upon editorial work with the Christian Publishing Company, the Illinois Bible School work was left without a leader. But now that Clarence L. De Pew, of Jacksonville, has been chosen State Superintendent, the work is rallying from the temporary lull in its activities, and new enthusiasm is showing itself. The new superintendent comes to the work with a rich experience as leader of one of the great schools of the State, that at Jacksonville, where steady and wonderful growth has followed his efforts. The writer has known Brother De Pew for a number of years, and has great pleasure in extending to him the hand of welcome and congratulation on his entering so wide and inviting a field. In a letter just received from Brother De Pew he says: "As I am just taking up the work I will greatly appreciate any suggestions you have to offer, and would especially like to know what plan you have for mailing information to your schools, and how often you do this, how you raise your funds and arrange your field trips. In fact I will appreciate any information your time will permit you to give, and will be glad at any time to favor you in any way I can." I have written him in reply, of course, and hold myself ready to be of any service our experience in Missouri may enable me to perform.

COLORADO IN LINE.—In the same mail with the above comes a letter from the newly appointed Superintendent for Colorado, E. M. Cosner, from whose letter I quote: "I have been recently elected to the office of Superintendent of Bible Schools for Colorado, and my experience in Sunday-school work has been of a local nature, having been a business man for twenty years. I am anxious to get all the information I can on this line. I take the liberty of asking you if you will be kind enough to give me a general outline of your duties, so I can get some helpful ideas and advice."



So here are two business men called into the leadership of Bible school work within a few weeks. It is the Savior's method. Leave the nets and the fish, and become fishers of men. Leave the receipt of custom and receive disciples for the Lord.

If Missourians have to be shown many other things, it is but fair that in some things they should show others, and so we are glad to be of any help we can to these brethren in this great Bible School department; but remember, brethren, I shall draw upon you for many things in the way of plans and methods, for I am only a learner of the ways to do this work.

I was compelled to close the course of lectures in the college at Camden Point by circumstances over which I had no control; but they will be resumed in due time.

People's Forum

Baptists and Disciples.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

In your issue of October 10th, in the People's Forum, brother Claris Yeuell, under the heading, "Baptists-Disciples," says, "Baptists, with their close communion, Disciples, with their close baptism, emphasize the close corporation conception of Christian (?) fellowship. Baptists becoming Disciples, Disciples becoming Baptists, have to submit to re-baptism. Baptists are re-baptized 'for the remission of their sins.' Disciples are re-baptized into the Baptist church. While this is not universal, it is general in the South."

Now, I have lived and labored here necessarily, much of my time in the evangelistic field, daily among and before the people, and for the first time I have heard it said that southern Disciples practise "close baptism!"

Again, the custom of "re-baptizing Baptists for the remissions of their sins," when they desire fellowship among us is not "general in the South," but it is the rarest exception. There is only one infinitesimally small element that teaches and practices the "re-baptism" theory and it is about decayed. Of course, if any one coming into our fellowship desires to be baptized to obey God and demands it at our hands we baptize him.

Once more, it is the very rarest exception that "Disciples are re-baptized into the Baptist church," in the South, and this for two reasons, first, Disciples down here are quite content to be known simply as Christians or Disciples of Christ; and, secondly, Baptists have seen our good fruit until if the rare exception comes that a Disciple unites with the Baptists the one baptism already submitted to is in many cases even among the Baptists, "in the South," counted quite sufficient.

Having spent nearly a quarter of a century in the active ministry, mostly in the South, in every state, and all over every state of the South, except Arkansas, I give it as my experience and observation that a very much better feeling is growing at a rapid rate between Baptists and Disciples and I am hoping to see the day when we shall be one mighty army in Christ.

Now, my good brother Yeuell, it is hardly fair for you to come down to "Sand Mountain," where seeing a Disciple is like seeing an angel from heaven, and where some Baptists scarcely know the difference between George Washington and Adam and speak of your observation as "general in the South." I have been over that territory and confess, with shame, to its ignorance. It ought to be evangelized, enlightened, saved,. I hope the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will give us more issues on the "Country Church," and that we can get the papers into the hands of our people. But, the Lord knows the South is ignorant and sectarian enough if truly represented, without the necessity of hyperbolic descriptions.

After Thoughts on Norfolk Convention.

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

Is is possible that custom is so strong that we can hardly break the one established of the General Convention meeting in October? This year the matter of time was not brought up at all. As it stands now we shall hardly be able to change the time before 1909, but even for that year we are liable to a cold snap in the midst of the convention. This is objection one.

Second, among the most important men to be at the convention are the teachers, and talented young men in our High Schools and Colleges. More than ten thousand of our brethren are teachers, many of whom are not only willing but anxious to go, but cannot attend in October.

Third, the preachers who take vacations at all have just returned to their congregations and are busy re-organizing for fall and winter services. If the Convention met the last of August and first of September a large number of these could go and would go, but will not leave their work in October.

Fourth, the business men are in the midst of their very busy season, wherein one month or five weeks earlier they would have had comparative leisure.

Thus the college men, the public school teachers, the very many preachers, and the business men are largely deprived of attending, unless the Convention happens to be very near them where they can run in for a day or two.

Another class well worth considering are the college students, who are almost all cut off from the opportunity of attending these general Conventions. It seems to me the brethren who are leading in this matter have not studied the question from the other side.

If it is replied that enough people attend as it is, and the Convention cannot be made a great mass-meeting, then let the self-electing boards and committees go on and do the whole work. But if the fellowship and encouragement and inspiration of the Convention are good for some of us who take less part, it would certainly be of equal blessing to those now deprived of it. And if the Convention becomes too large for the halls let us divide ourselves into two sections and meet one in the East and one in the West, and let all who desire have the full encouragement and inspiration that a great Convention can give.

Another improvement will come when those who use half an hour or an hour to read over what we can read just as well at home make their reports as the Foreign Secretaries do, in five or ten minutes; and let the Committees be careful to select speakers from the ends of the earth, who touch deep fountains of consecration, the highest points of intellect and the greatest grasp of the questions before us. Let us hear such men in fifteen minutes or an hour talks. Speeches like that of Brother Moore from Birmingham and Combs from Kansas City mean much. Those elementary principles which Combs so tersely and sententiously expressed are lines of energy and chains of purpose to many who may not be so strong, or who may be faltering on mighty issues that connect the visible and the invisible. Such speeches keep the way of life open and the connection with God clear, and enforce the sense of responsibility.

Dr. Dye from Africa ought to have had half an hour or an hour. When he stated that he believed the blessing of that mission was that it was founded on Sacrifice, that from the beginning and from the heart they must give up their idols, their many wives, their drink, their tobacco, their everything that was unclean or hurtful to body or mind, and give themselves wholly to Christ and to saving mankind, he spoke the fundamental principle of Christianity, one which the Church is constantly forgetting. Such men ought to have the privilege of speaking to the people out of their deepest convictions longer than ten minutes. They are in fellowship with the Almighty and see clearly. Let them declare the living truths freely.

The Lord give us to see clearly the meaning of Jesus' life, and his message to the world and our own relations to these.

Rest Where You Are.

When spurred by tasks unceasing or undone,
You would seek rest afar,
And cannot, though repose be rightly won,
Rest where you are.

Neglect the needless; sanctify the rest;
Move without stress or jar;
With quiet of a spirit self-possessed,
Rest where you are.

Not in event, restriction, or release,
Not in scenes near or far,
But in ourselves are restlessness or peace,
Rest where you are.

Where lives the soul, lives God; His day,
His World,
No phantom mists need mar:
His starry nights are tents of peace unfurled:
Rest where you are.

Chapter XXIII.—The Restoration Begun.

"Were there no night
We could not read the stars—
The Heavens would turn into a blinding glare.
Freedom is best seen through the prison bars
And rough seas make the heaven passing fair."

It is as we return unto the Lord that revival will come; for if we had not wandered from Him, His life would be among us in power.

Andrew Murray.

Mr. Pratt stood for a moment and looked, first at the body of representatives from Middleton and then at the representatives from the denominations that had gathered in the council, his keen eyes moistening as he said: "Brethren, what God hath joined together let no man put asunder. For years I have gone up and down this country, lamenting the divisions and dissensions in the household of God, by which Zion has languished and the world is not redeemed for Christ; and now mine eyes behold the beginning of the restoration for which prophet, priest and sage have waited and hoped without consolation, until now. Rejoice, ye saints of God, to see this day!

I call you to witness if I have not served faithfully these years, among the churches and as you know they are powerless to reach the fallen and the lost to any extent. They are often the most inefficient, unbusiness-like organizations in all the communities. As a rule they are without order or system, guessing at their accounts and making aimless, haphazard efforts to raise their revenues by first this method and then by that; many of which are questionable and dishonest; and in the end allowing their pastors to go away unpaid and unrequited for their efforts: I have known of their being sent off with aching and disappointed hearts, because of the small results, which the churches were to blame for themselves. Their most earnest efforts were depreciated and their spiritual wisdom having been set at naught by worldly minded counselors, for the advice of the ungodly and the unbelieving of the community. These organizations have to my knowledge and to the sorrow of all within this presence, stood in the way of efficient and consecrated men, not entering in themselves to reap the harvest and forbidding those who would, and who were entering. But I do not come to censure nor say hard and unwarranted things. The blame lies with the system, which in the first place divides the communities into bitter little sects, with not enough efficient business men to run the organization as the Master's business requires it to be run. The same system of divisions divides the spiritual class in the same way and there is dearth there also because a few are set here and a few are set there and a few in another part of the town: all working contrary and in opposition to the other and not enough in any one division to create the proper respect for God's cause, or to attract the people of the world to imitate their example and faith. But they join themselves—and many of these professed followers of our Lord are found with them—in the worldly organizations that tend away from God and to the destruction of the church more and more. Thus the masses are not reached for Christ, nor is the worship of God carried on in a manner that glorifies Him.

O, brethren, you have the opportunity of this generation and of forty generations within your grasp. Put away your denominational divisons and flow together, as the Middleton people have, and see the same efficient organization and business-like administration, in things temporal and spiritual, over this beautiful land which awaits your possession for righteousness, and the name of our God and His anointed Son, "shall be a praise throughout the earth." Thus saying, he began to pray and the very place seemed to be shaken with the power of the Holy Spirit, and the delegates began to speak in tongues of eloquent praise for the new way they had heard set forth and to desire that it might prevail throughout the earth.

The eminent speaker, who proposed that the Middleton people be sent for, now arose and proposed that they recommend the Middleton system to be adopted so far as possible, in all missionary work and plans of the churches in future. The authority to be turned over to the Assembly of the Christian Congregation, to appoint efficient Boards and workers and to adjust the work as fast as they could attend to it: that all the denominations there represented, should act in concert to bring all Christian effort within the system, so far as possible, leaving each at liberty to exercise its own discretion and take its own time in the adjustment. This was adopted without a dissenting voice, for even the opposition had melted away and become a part of the great unanimous body, seeking to honor the Middleton people and to install their system.

That evening Brother Pratt was asked to take the meeting at the opera house, and it was spread about the city that the originator of the Middleton system was to speak and the house was literally packed. And such a sermon as there delivered had never been heard in that city before. Hundreds arose at the opportunity for consecration, and penitential tears flowed, for men and women were led to a repentance of Pentecostal type and Pentecostal power was present, to save.

The people were unwilling to allow the meeting to close, and the spirit-filled man was detained to speak many days and nights in a large pavilion which had been constructed to accommodate a carnival which had just closed. Vast assemblages came together and all the pastors of the city led their people to the meeting, since they had been at the Council and had concurred in the proposal.

The business men became intensely interested and surrendered themselves to the influence of the Spirit and were renewed in righteousness. The saloons and gambling houses closed up and their keepers either came to the meeting or left town, for it was "hell" to them, they said, to do otherwise. The leading business men, having been touched by the same spirit, came together at the board of trade and consulted one another as to the feasibility of adopting the Middleton system in their city, as to the property rights, etc. The mayor, city treasurer and other business men of Middleton were sent for to give them advice upon the proposition. The assessment rolls were gone over carefully and the outlying territory for five miles taken into consideration as garden supply and homes for people with limited means; and it was estimated that one billion dollars was the actual value of this territory and the property on it. Several wealthy men offered to give outright in property and in cash, if the Middleton system could be inaugurated, five hundred million dollars. Enough more were found who were willing to place their property into the community on a basis of three per cent interest. This was sufficient to swing the project. Next a petition was sent to the Legislature, to obtain the right to vote this change, and it was granted, since it was the Governor's home and he used his influence to bring it about speedily. At the election it was found that there was little or no opposition and the matter was carried. The churches all went into the system before Brother Pratt closed the meetings, which swept the town and the surrounding country, and the new order of things was fully established within twelve months of the time it was started.

Fully fifty million dollars, in franchises and rents, was the first year's income, and that at a far less cost to the residents in general, than formerly, and a multitude of people flocked to that city from other cities, both with manufacturing and other establishments. Thus the splendid example was started and in another twelve months twenty other cities were under the same system, and the good work progressed on both sides of the globe.

Wealthy Christian men called a congress of the leading capitalists of the United States, to consider the advisability of putting the system into practice over the entire country, and of using the accruing funds to push the work of missions along the same line. It was found that the moneyed congress alone controlled enough wealth to project the matter and yet leave each man a good working capital.

They agreed to put their resources into a co-operative fund and buy out the entire country, as far as the laws of the land would permit them to do so, and inaugurate the Middleton system in every city, hamlet and town as well as throughout the farming districts that were within the proper and approachable limits of these incorporations, that they might co-operate with them.

Accordingly agents were sent into all the great cities to investigate conditions and possibilities along this line and to report at the next congress, which would be held in six months from that time.

These agents brought in a unanimous report at the time fixed, that it was not money so much as it was disposition on the part of the people, that was required. It was also cited that men like Pratt and Brown, and their co-operators in this country, and Gordon with his assistants on the other side of the globe, were the moving forces to draw the people together and cause them to turn from their idol worship and practices of covetousness and division, by the power of the Spirit which possessed them. And only thus, as the churches could be influenced to take the initiative of community interests, by themselves giving up their divisions and coming together to form the Christian Congregations and Assemblies of Christian business men to take charge of the communities thus formed, could the people be induced to take such steps.

It was also cited that this very work was going on as fast as such men could be sent forth with proper gospel methods,—not to exploit for themselves, nor to gain honor, glory or position, after the manner of the world and ecclesiastical systems; but to seek the glory of God and the good of their fellow men as the Master did. And they closed this notable report by saying: "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest that more laborers be sent forth, for the harvest is truly great, but the laborers, such as are needed for this unifying work, are few,—too few indeed, for many seek their own and not the things of Christ."

The congress and this report had its influence for hastening the good work by drawing forth the true key to the situation, and it gave publicity to the great Middleton Plan that was being promulgated so successfully to bless the world in righteousness wherever it came. It also drew the great moneyed men together and gave them a common cause and mutual interests in Christ's kingdom such as they had never come to see alike before. They thus prepared the way for a concerted effort to hasten the restoration that had long been hoped for. They sought the deep spiritual things which these messengers were proclaiming, and their great influence was thus added to the tide that had set in for peace and good will to man upon the earth. They saw in this mighty movement, which had set in upon the Pacific coast, a wave which was destined to sweep both ways about the globe, and which would transform the earth into a paradise, which God destined it to be for man's use and not abuse, and they were determined to become his pliant instruments in promoting it.

As city after city, and community after community were thus transformed, the money of the rich and the labor of the poor were alike ready to be poured upon the altar of this splendid service to fellow man, both at home and abroad, until it began to be said long before men began to write A.D. 2000, that righteousness was beginning to cover the earth as the waters cover the sea.

THE END.

Our Special Brand of Ignorance.

An ornithologist invited an ichthyologist to walk in the woods with him, and the ornithologist said: "I suppose you know that the crow——"

"I know nothing about birds."

"But surely you have heard that the cuckoo——"

"I don't know a hawk from a handsaw, I am sorry to say."

"Yes, but you surely have heard so common a thing as the fact that the swallow never——"

"My friend, I know less than nothing about birds."

They finished their walk, and the ornithologist went home and said to his wife:

"The man with whom I walked to-day in the woods is woefully ignorant. How can a man go through life with so little knowledge of the things about him?"

The next day the ichthyologist invited the ornithologist to walk along the sea-cliffs with him.

So they walked together, and on the cliffs a doltish fellow was standing.

"Good morning," they said to him, but he only stared at them, open-mouthed.

"A fool!" cried both.

And the ichthyologist said to the ornithologist: "Of course you know that the blue fish of these waters——"

"I know nothing about fish."

"But surely you have heard that the swordfish——"

"I would not know a cod from a kid, I am sorry to say."

"Yes, but you surely have heard so common a thing as the fact that a porpoise never——"

"My friend, I know less than nothing about fish."

At this point the ichthyologist was so impressed by his friend's ignorance of common things that he did not mind his steps and fell off the cliff into the sea, and not knowing how to swim he called to his friend for help.

"Alas, I do not know how to swim," said the ornithologist.

"More of the ignorance," said the ichthyologist as he went down for the second time.

But the dolt had been watching, open-eyed, and he plunged into the sea and swimming out to the ichthyologist he saved him.

Each of us has his special brand of ignorance.—Saturday Evening Post.

Charcoal Kills Bad Breath.

Bad Odor of Indigestion, Smoking, Drinking or Eating Can Be Instantly Stopped.

Sample Package Mailed Free.

Other people notice your bad breath where you would not notice it at all. It is nauseating to other people to stand before them and while you are talking, give them a whiff or two of your bad breath. It usually comes from food fermenting on your stomach. Sometimes you have it in the morning—that awful sour, bilious, bad breath. You can stop it at once by swallowing one or two Stuart Charcoal Lozenges, the most powerful gas and odor absorbers ever prepared.

Sometimes your meals will reveal themselves in your breath to those who talk with you. "You've had onions," or "You've been eating cabbage," and all of a sudden you belch in the face of your friend. Charcoal is a wonderful absorber of odors, as every one knows. That is why Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges are so quick to stop all gases and odors of odorous foods, or gas from indigestion.

Don't use breath perfumes. They never conceal the odor, and never absorb the gas that causes the odor. Besides, the very fact of using them reveals the reason for their use. Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges in the first place stop for good all sour brash and belching of gas, and make your breath pure, fresh and sweet, just after you've eaten. Then no one will turn his face away from you when you breathe or talk; your breath will be pure and fresh, and besides your food will taste so much better to you at your next meal. Just try it.

Charcoal does other wonderful things, too. It carries away from your stomach and intestines, all the impurities there massed together and which cause the bad breath. Charcoal is a purifier as well as an absorber.

Charcoal is now by far the best, most easy and mild laxative known. A whole boxful will do no harm, in fact, the more you take the better. Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges are made of pure willow charcoal and mixed with just a faint flavor of honey to make them palatable for you, but not too sweet. You just chew them like candy. They are absolutely harmless.

Get a new, pure, sweet breath, freshen your stomach for your next meal and keep the intestines in good working order. These two things are the secret of good health and long life. You can get all the charcoal necessary to do these wonderful but simple things by getting Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges. We want you to test these little wonder workers yourself before you buy them. So send us your full name and address for a free sample of Stuart's Charcoal Lozenges. Then after you have tried the sample, and been convinced, go to your druggist and get a 25c box of them. You'll feel better all over, more comfortable and "cleaner" inside.

Send us your name and address to-day and we will at once send you by mail a sample package, free. Address F. A. Stuart Co., 200 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

ON THE ADVANTAGE OF DOING WITHOUT.

By James Buckham.

I shall begin this discourse with a domestic homily. My wife and I count it a happy day when we learned in household affairs the advantage of doing without. It began with a very small virtue of necessity — the doing without a screen door for the front hall in summer. There was an infinite number of small demands upon our slender stock of spending money that year, and when I brought out the old screen door that had done service for four years, and found it literally dropping to pieces, my wife said, "It's past mending—but never mind. Let's try going without this summer and see how it will work."

So we did; and the results were so surprisingly gratifying that we have never since that day had, nor in the least degree desired to have, a screen for the front door in summer. Indeed, we found the advantages of doing without a front door screen so marked that we agreed that it was worth far more than a new screen would have cost to have discovered the gain of letting it go to rot in the cellar.

In the first place, the house was thirty per cent cooler than it had been in any previous summer we could remember. With the front door closed and the hot sun and air barred out all day long, there was a refreshing coolness in the hall and darkened front rooms that seemed too delightful to be actual.

Then, too, the dust no longer came in, diffusing itself in those dim, drifting subtle clouds that seemed so slight and impalpable in the old days, but left such a gritty deposit on everything in the house, including the food—for it would go through cracks and keyholes more deftly than the daintiest fairy. Furthermore, the rugs in the hall were not faded and begrimed as in previous summers; the hats and wraps on the rack did not have to be brushed every day. There was no temptation thrown in the way of the wily, spying sneak-thief, who might chance to find the screen door unlocked. The peddler could perceive no encouraging signs of occupancy, or be emboldened by noting the absence of the masculine hat and stick. And thus—well, we thanked our lucky stars that, after eight years of housekeeping, we had discovered the immense advantage of not having a front screen door. All that we missed by its absence was the brief and deceptive gratification of a hot breeze blowing through the house, and bringing in a lot of dust and germs and an outside temperature that was higher than the temperature of the house itself.

Thus were we introduced, in a domestic way, to the advantages of doing without.

And after that came the ice famine of the summer following the winter when Jack Frost, for some inexplicable reason, saw fit to abdicate. It was then that we chased indifferent and poorly supplied icemen, begging, often in vain, for the privilege of paying gold-chunk prices for nuggets of thin snow-ice that would collapse and melt in a night. At last in desperation we abandoned our refrigerator, set a big galvanized iron pan of water in the coolest corner of the cellar, bought an earthen crock to stand in it, used that as a cooler, and enjoyed peace and comfort and a most exquisite sense of independence. We bought milk, meat and vegetables fresh every morning, for immediate use. We boiled our drinking water and set it in glass jars on the cellar bottom, always finding it cool enough in a few hours for agreeable and wholesome drinking. Our morning milk kept sweet all day. Our butter was always of just the right consistency to spread nicely on a slice of bread. And never in one single particular did we regret, nor have we since regretted, learning the advantage of doing without the autocratic iceman. Of course, there might be conditions—sickness, for instance—when we should have to recall him, and humbly submit to his abuses and extortions; but under ordinary circumstances, with our cool cellar and faithful tradesmen, I trust we are satisfactorily done with him.

Space fails me to tell further how in our household economy we have learned the advantage of doing without lard, and using instead beef drippings, ten thousand times more wholesome and palatable in imparted flavor, besides being cheaper; how we have discovered what an invaluable privilege it is to dispense with rich cakes and pastries; what an emancipating education it has been to us to find out the sins of the chafing dish, and retire it where it can do no more harm.

And now, to advance a little in the moral status of things, I would that all the world knew what I think my wife and I have established beyond peradventure — that it is infinitely more healthful and delightful, physically, mentally and spiritually, to read good books in the evening, and go early to bed and sleep sweetly, than it is to go to the theater, get to bed at one o'clock, and toss and talk till the gray of the morning.

Again, we have learned that it is a fine and Christianizing and most helpful thing in life for a man and a woman to learn the advantage of going without the habitual and uneasy practice of shopping for shopping's sake, whereby much of the precious substance and resource of human living goes into a bottomless pit, for the sole gratification of a restless devil called Acquisitiveness, who has no use for a ten-thousandth part of all he devours.

Nine-tenths, also, of what ordinary mortals do for appearance' sake, our experience teaches us might with amazing profit be left undone; for what we do in that way is a matter of pretension, through which everybody sees, and none clearer than the one whom we wish especially to impress. We are only laughed at for a great deal that costs us dear; and if we could but learn the dignified advantage of doing without it, what added resource would we have for solid satisfactions, and how much finer and nobler life would look in the long retrospect.—Interior.

November.

November brings the snowflakes
So beautiful and fair.
It brings the whistling winds
The cold and frosty air.

November brings the dark clouds
That go scurrying through the sky;
It brings the leaves of crinkled brown
That on the brown earth lie.

November brings the evenings
So long for work and play.
It brings to us a happy time
The glad Thanksgiving Day.

A Dream.

A little boy was dreaming.
Upon his mamma's lap.
He saw the suns fell out of all the skies
And the stars fell into his cap.
So when his dream was over.
What did that little boy do?
He went and looked inside his cap
And found it was not true.

The Piper Patch.

By Annie Hamilton Donnell.

Rick Leavitt hoed his way down the third row. At the halfway place he unbent his strong shoulders and took a "breathing spell." He was big and brown and brawny; and the July gladness was in him.

"We're coming on," he nodded across to the fantastic figure in the middle of the patch. The figure nodded back. Then Rick laughed.

"You old beauty, you!" he called; I wish you didn't remind me so much of Rick Leavitt. Catch me using his old clothes next time!"

In a sudden whiff of breeze the figure in the middle of the corn patch shook as if with mirth. A crow lighted on one of his arms and peered inquisitively and unafraid into his face. "Caw! Caw!" scoffed the bird, and it sounded to Rick as if he said, "Oh, pshaw!"

That corn patch was going to send him to Merton Academy next term. It was his corn patch, little green blades, weeds, scarecrow and all. He had plowed and planted its acre and a half himself, and by the middle of next week he would have hoed it. Wait and see!

Down the third row, up the fourth. Another breathing space at the halfway mark, again. This time Rick's eyes wandered to the Piper Patch—oh, the Piper Patch! He laughed at it as he looked, but there was scorn in his voice. Call that a corn patch! Unkempt, straggling little hills, and weeds, weeds, weeds!

"There'll not be an ear of corn on it, most likely. If nobody hoes it, there'll not. Catch Andy Piper hoeing it!"

Catch any of the Pipers doing anything! Rick's gaze went on up-meadow to the little brown blotch of a house just in sight. When the Pipers painted their house or hoed their corn, it would be the year nineteen hundred and never!

Up the fourth row, down the fifth. It took time: the rows were long. It grew hotter and hotter with the approach of noon. Rick mopped his brown face vigorously. He rested a little longer at the mid-row station. Then it was he made his discovery in the Piper Patch.

"Well, I should say!" he exclaimed, suddenly. Of all things—where had that scarecrow over there appeared from? It hadn't been there the last time he looked.

In the corner of the untidy little patch it stood. It swayed a little, but there was no breeze now. Hold on—it was moving! It had sat down!

"I should say!" exclaimed Rick in a mazement. The scarecrow turned at the sound of his voice and nodded at him solemnly.

"Hello!" it called out.

Mysie Piper, what on earth are you doing over there?" was his rejoinder.

"Me? I'm scarecrowin'. I had to come myself, 'count of there not bein' any other old clo'es. We wear all o' ours, at our house."

But I don't see what you need of a scarecrow in that patch of weeds"—he checked himself hastily. Even a Piper might have feelings.

"To keep the crows off," answered the little scarecrow gravely. She had risen and come to the dividing fence between the two lots. "That's what you have yours for, isn't it? Oh, my, isn't he beautiful! I'm going to stay here right along, scarecrowin'. I'm bound the crows shan't get my corn."

"Your corn?"

"Yes, its mine. Andy only planted it an' I paid him for that. I gave him all my sugar for a month. Andy'll do things for sugar."

Rick's gaze drifted from the shabby little scarecrow to the habby little patch. The connection between the two puzzled him. What could the little scarecrow do with the corn—if there should be any?

"Going to sell it?" he asked. The child's face grew eager and wistful.

"You'd better believe I am!" she laughed, "if"—the same doubt that had pervaded Rick's mind haunted hers dimly,"if—you think there'll be some, don't you?"

"Some, I guess," he said.

"Well, I'm goin' to sell it, that's what. I'm goin' to buy—Oh, I'm 'fraid you'll go and tell! It's a secret. If I thought you wouldn't——"

"I'll not," Rick laughed

"Cross your heart?"

"Cross my heart."

"An' hope to never?"

"Hope to never."

"Then I'm goin' to buy Grandfather Piper some meeting clothes with my corn money. Grandfather Piper's been waiting to go to meeting 'most forever. He's given it up now, but I haven't. He says he's going to wait and go to the Lord's meeting, in the Land o' Promise, but I say"—the little scarecrow laughed softly, as if to herself—"I say grandfather's going to the meeting here! I'm going to buy him some store clothes to go in. I've always thought I'd love to go along with him, but I guess there will not be corn enough. It's a kind of mussy looking patch, isn't it? I guess Andy thought there wouldn't be sugar enough to amount to much—oh, my, there's a crow! Oh, he's digging it up!" And away scurried the little figure to its "scarecrowin'."

Rick Leavitt went back to his hoeing. Querr, new thoughts kept time to the regular strokes of his hoe—new Piper thoughts.

Suddenly Rick stopped hoeing. He had not been able to see that last hill very well.

"She's been waiting too, but there'll not be corn enough—I guess she's right!" he laughed unsteadily. There wouldn't be any unless the patch was hoed over. There wasn't any doubt about that.

Rick glanced over at the Piper patch hello, what had become of the little scare

"She's laid down on her job," the boy muttered, and the seriousness in his voice atoned for the slang. The little Piper scarecrow was asleep!

The sun, directly overhead now, shone down unmercifully into the little upturned face.

"She'll have the sunstroke," Rick thought uneasily. Then without further delay he strode across to the dividing fence, leaping the corn rows in his path. He leaped the fence, too and strode on to the little sleeping scarecrow. He took off his wide-rimmed straw hat and tilted it gently over the child's face.

Then Rick looked round him. He did not remember to have been in the Piper Patch before, and close, it looked even worse than from a softening distance. But the little scarecrow was here, and the sight of her, asleep under the big straw hat, softened the boy's disgust. The little scarecrow was not to blame.

An instant more, Rick stood looking at the revel of weeds that shut him in. Then he righted his hoe and attacked them.

"I'm all over here—might as well," he muttered, as if in self-defense. And bareheaded in the noon sunshine he hoed all round the little Piper scarecrow, till she lay asleep in a small oasis in the desert of weeds.

Rick had allowed himself a week to finish up his acre and a half, but it took longer than that on account of his secret

A. O. Leonard INVENTOR LEONARD'S ANTISEPTIC EAR DRUM

I was deaf for thirty-five years

My Ear Drum (which I patented July 3rd, 1900) and my method have restored my hearing. Since I put it on the market last February, it has restored the hearing of hundreds of others, many of whom had given up all hope of ever hearing again. It has also relieved many from distressing head noises. I have just gotten out a new Ear Drum that is a great improvement over my original Drum. The magaphone principle and the flat-sounding membrane make my drum the most successful device on the market. It is "Unseen Comfort." My new method and antiseptic Ear Drum are endorsed by leading physicians. The price is very low. Why not have your hearing restored? Let me write you about it. I will give you facts only and will not exaggerate.

trips to the Piper Patch. He took advantage of the absence of the little scarecrow for those. Gradually, the shabby little patch took on trimness and order. The day Rick hoed the last hill in it, Andy Piper came strolling down the fields. He stood and watched Rick for a while, without being perceived. A long, low whistle was what announced his presence. Rick wheeled about.

"Well," he said grimly, "how do you like the looks of it? Is it hoed to suit you?"

Andy Piper's good-natured, indolent face flushed crimson.

"See here," Rick said suddenly, "this is first rate corn land. Why don't you enlarge your patch, Andy—I mean the little scarecrow's—I mean Mysie's patch?"

He tripped badly, and in spite of themselves, both boys laughed. The ice was broken. Andy surveyed the adjacent uncultivated land dubiously.

"It would be an awful lot o'work," he muttered.

"Work!" Rick Leavitt laughed derisively. "Supposing it is a lot! Work doesn't hurt anybody. I tell you it's good for a chap! Look at me, will you? See that muscle! Now show me yours." He bared his arm proudly, but Andy drew back, refusing to expose his.

"I—I haven't any muscle," he muttered shamefacedly.

"Well, you go ahead and plow up some more o' this land, plant it in corn and see if you don't get some!" Rick laughed. "Honest, I mean it, Andy. There's time enough—some of the crop will be a little later, that's all. Carry out your rows as long as mine, and widen your piece out over there on the other side. All that land is lying there wasted now. Say, you go ahead, Andy, and I'll help."

"Honest?"

"Honest."

"I haven't any plow."

"I have."

"Nor harrer."

"I have. You do the handwork and I'll do the machine. Look here, I want to tell you something, Andy," and moved by some impulse Rick told the little scarecrow's story. Andy listened.

"Poor gran-daddy!" Rick heard him mutter, and then, "Poor little kid!"

"I'll do it!" Andy cried aloud. "See if I don't make this old patch get the little girl some too."

The plan succeeded. For days the boys worked side by side—Andy as hard as Rick.

It was a good corn year. Nature aided the two boys. In due time the crops were cut and hauled to the mill. The Piper crop was almost as large as the Leavitt crop.

The last Sunday before Rick was to go to Merton to the Academy, he arrived at church a little early. In his abstraction he had not noticed that the people were straggling in and settling into their places in the pews. When he looked up, he gave a little start, for Grandfather Piper and the little scarecrow—no, no, not that now! Grandfather Piper and little, trim whole Mysie were going up the aisle. The old, old figure stooped painfully along, but the young one trudged beside it, grave and straight.

That was not all. Behind the old man and child walked Andy—Andy! Rick's eyes widened in wonder. He scarcely knew the boy.

"It's the 'Piper Patch,'" Rick thought.

Smiling.

When the weather suits you not,
Try smiling.
When your coffee isn't hot,
Try smiling.
When your neighbors don't do right,
Or your relatives all fight,
Sure it's hard, but then you might
Try smiling.
Doesn't change the things, of course,
Just smiling.
But it can not make them worse—
Just smiling.
And it seems to help your case,
Brightens up a gloomy place;
Then it sort o' rests your face—
Just smiling.

Evils of Scowling.

Don't scowl. Scowling spoils even the prettiest of faces. Before you know it, your face will resemble a small railroad map. There will be a grand trunk line from your scolding locks to the bridge of your nose, intersected by parallel lines running east and west, with curves arching your eyebrows.

And then think how much older you will look. Scowling is a habit which steals upon one almost unawares.

We frown when the light is too strong, and when it is too weak. We tie our brows into a knot when we are thinking, and we knit them even more tightly when we are not thinking.

There is no denying there are plenty of things to scowl about. The baby in the cradle wrinkles up its little nose when something fails to suit. The little toddler who likes sugar on his bread tells his troubles in the same way.

"Cross," we say about the children, and "worried to death," about the grown people; and as for ourselves, we "simply can't help it."

But one must! Its reflex influences make others unhappy. It cheapens our religion. Scowling is silent scolding. It shows that the soul needs sweetening.

For humanity's sake straighten out these creases before they become deeply engraved on the countenance.—St. Louis Republic.

Love's Spelling Book.

Harry found an old English spelling book about the house which his grandmother had once used in school, and which had a very curious way of spelling many words. He was laughing over some of the funny spelling when his mother called him to her.

"How many ways of spelling love have you found, Harry?" she asked.

"Only one," he replied. "It is just the same in this book as it is in my spelling book at school."

"Why," said his mother, "I know of more than one way. I think there must be at least a dozen ways—possibly a hundred or more."

Harry opened his eyes wide in surprise.

"Just now," said his mother, "you gave a part of your dinner that the poor Jackson boy might have a good meal. You did not send a word in the basket, because you did not want your right hand to know what your left hand did; but nevertheless there was one word in the basket spelled out in very large letters. Can you guess what it was?"

"Was it love?" asked Harry.

"Yes," answered his mother. "And last week when you put your dime into the missionary bank, you did not say anything, but as it rattled down among the other coins, I heard it speak very distinctly a word which you did not catch. Do you know what it was?"

"I must have been love," again answered Harry.

"Yes," said his mother, "that was another way of spelling love. And a little while ago, as I was watching you play your games out in the yard, I saw you step out to make room for James Marshall. What was that?"

"Why," explained Harry, "that was because he thought it was his turn, although I was sure it was mine, and so were all the rest of the boys; but I gave up to him just because I wanted him to have a good time."

"And you spelled the word in another way when you did that," said his mother.

"Well, I declare," said Harry, "it is such a wonderful word that it ought to have a spelling book all to itself."

"It has," answered his mother. "Our whole lives were intended to be primers of love, in which we should be constantly spelling out the word by kind, thoughtful actions, so as to make the world a beautiful, happy place in which to live."

Good Advice.

Work while you work,
Play while you play;
That is the way
To be happy and gay.

All that you do,
Do with your might;
Things done by halves
Are never done right.

One thing at a time,
And that done well,
Is the best of all rules,
As many can tell.

The Fox and the Chick.

Once there was a hen who lived in a coop. She had ten wee chicks; five were white and five were black. Though the old hen had to stay shut up in the coop, the chicks could run far and wide. When they ran too far off the old hen would call, "Cluck, cluck, cluck!" Then they would all run back to her warm, soft wings, and hide where no one could see them.

Not far from this coop a pet fox was chained to his nice, warm house. He had to be made fast to his house, for he was fond of young chicks, and that you know was a bad trick. The old hen said to her chicks each day, "Cluck, cluck, cluck, stay far away from that sly fox, for he would just love to eat you."

The world run out the full length of his chain, and try to grab one of the chicks, but they were too smart for him; they kept back too far for his chain to reach.

But one day he thought of a sharp trick, for a fox, you must know, is a smart beast.

He left his nice food just where the maid had put it near his house, then he scraped up a lot of sticks and leaves in a heap just back of the food. The next thing he did was to crawl into his house and lie down. The pile of leaves and sticks hid his sharp nose and keen eyes, but he could see through it, and so would know if a chick should come near. By and by one came.

"The fox has gone to sleep," he thought, "and I can eat all I want of his nice food."

Oh, what a fine time for him, and he ate, and ate, the food was so good.

Then, pounce! went the fox, and the poor chick was in his paws.

But the maid had seen him; she ran out and took the chick from him; it ran home with a "Yip! yip!"

Then what do you think that bad fox did? He piled up the stuff once more and crawled back into his house. But the maid came out and swept the leaves and sticks far off where the fox could not reach them, so he did not get a nice fat chick to eat. Aren't you glad of that?

This is a true tale, for I know that fox well, and I saw his smart trick with my own two eyes.—Clara J. Denton, in Michigan Christian Advocate.

THE GRACE OF THANKFULNESS

ALEXANDER McKENZIE

The spirit of thanksgiving is a high grace. Every one knows the need of it, and would not be thought to live without it. It crowns a useful life with beauty and extends the influence of all which a man does. It is a charm in a useful career, a glory resting upon strength, a witness to sincerity. It would seem to be easy of attainment, so necessary and appropriate is it. It is easier for some than for others, and the difference has very little to do with the conditions in which men are placed. We find thankfulness where the benefits are limited, and miss it where they are beyond measure. It is rather in the disposition than the estate that the variation consists. Several causes combine to hinder thankfulness. Thus, we are not aware of the good which is given to us and do not appreciate the favors we receive. We feel the want of those which are denied more than the possession of those which are ours. The uncertainty with which blessings are held lessens their value in our thought. We have so much to do in making, earning, deserving them that this seems the principal reason for their coming and we do not feel called upon to recognize the good will without which our exertions would be fruitless.

Think for a moment upon some things which constantly call for thankfulness, and call upon every man. There is our life itself, our life in its real character. It is our portion of the life which is from the beginning and is the life of all that lives. It is far more than being, existence—it is divine and permanent. The description given at the opening of human history in the Book of Genesis is pure fact, however realistic the form may be. The Eternal breathes of his own life into the creature of dust, and man becomes a living soul. The Creator might have done otherwise and less. He has in love given his best, given of Himself, to one who can think, reason, will; can enjoy and make glad; can love and be loved. We are so familiar with ourselves that we fail to perceive how great we are, and to let our divine powers have the use which will employ and enlarge them. If we were able we should pause every morning as the new day breaks and sing a psalm to celebrate ourselves, our being; the greatness and gladness of life.

The great God deals with us all the day upon this scale. There is grandeur in his governance. He gives us the seasons in their order and we have bread. The planets which stand in their courses and the heavens which bend over us disclose his presence and his glory and power, while he also declares their meaning. He stands around us in constancy of strength, "as the mountains are round about Jerusalem." "The Eternal is our refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms." He orders our life in reason, and speaks to our conscience, and remembers the liberty he has bestowed. When he reaches men to this day it is by his exceeding love. The shepherd becomes the good shepherd and gives his life for his sheep. His promises are exceeding great and precious and he gives to us immortality in advance, as a pledge of our divinity. With all this magnificent care and love are the countless blessings, which often we do not rightly value till they are taken from us. "The lips say 'God be pitiful!' which never said 'God be praised.'" I do not attempt to reckon up the things which make it pleasant for us to live. Whatever we do to procure them, they are still a gift. The very ability to earn them is a gift, so that we are pointed steadily beyond ourselves. The worth of the good we have is enhanced by the method of its coming. We are under bonds to think of him who is the Giver of every good and perfect gift. Thus is life enriched. It is uplifted. The spirit of thanksgiving is the spirit of manliness and no man should rest or be content until that spirit inspires his thought and rules his life.

"EACH ONE WIN ONE" in the C. W. B. M.

W. R. WARREN, Centennial Sec'y

If the auxiliary is a good thing in my church, one ought to be organized in the neighboring church. If the work being done by the co-operation of two thousand auxiliaries is great and good, it ought to be increased by enlisting two thousand more. I cannot establish two thousand, but I can help to start one. If it is good for me to belong to the auxiliary or circle, it will be good for my friend also. I cannot move many, but somewhere there is one whom I can influence. What is that old argument?

"I am not many, but I am one; I cannot do much, but I can do something; what I can do, I ought to do; and what I ought to do, by the grace of God, I will do!"

All unconsciously and innocently we have left without auxiliaries the churches that needed them most! "We thought they were too small and weak." Precisely! And how will they grow large and strong unless their members are trained? "All their money was needed to keep up the little church." Is it possible that they are spending none individually for vanity, excess or folly, not to say sin? Could not the fifteen cents per month be safely deducted from these and not from their offerings to the current expense fund of the little church? Mark how the poor in your own auxiliary are blessed in doing their duty!

All unconsciously and innocently you have left without membership in your own auxiliary your friend who needed it most. It dishonors yourself, your friendship and her better self that you think her too worldly. And how do you expect her to become less so? Will you compel God to perfect her by bitter affliction, when He would do it by sweet fellowship?

But maybe it is the auxiliary you have been dishonoring by accounting it too prosaic and uninteresting for your cultured friend? How can she employ her talents and accomplishments better than in improving it? And may not your failure be in not discerning the finer graces of the spirit that distinguish some of its humble members in the eyes of archangels? Again, the most cultivated are always both the least pretentious and the least exacting.

Count no woman ineligible. "Become all things to all women, that by all means you may win some." The aim is a spur for those who are doing nothing, not a restriction for those who are active.

How can it be our Centennial, if you have not the largest possible share in realizing the "Hundred Thousand Women in Auxiliaries and Circles; Two Hundred Thousand Dollars in new Stations?"

Current Events

The Government to the Rescue.

The government has again come to the relief of the financial situation. Secretary Cortelyou has announced the issue of Panama Canal bonds to the amount of fifty million dollars, and also certificates of indebtedness not to exceed one hundred millions. The bonds bear two per cent interest, run for thirty years and can be deposited in the treasury, like other government bonds, to secure issues of notes by national banks. It is expected that the banks will purchase these bonds and use them as security for the issue of bank-notes. The cash which the banks pay for the bonds will at once be put into circulation by being deposited in banks in various parts of the country, and the bank-notes which will be issued will also be available for circulation. Thus there will be an increase in the volume of currency. The opinion of most of the bankers is that this is a wise plan and that it will materially relieve the situation. Some, however, fear that the issue of bonds and notes can not be put through quickly enough to meet the need of the hour, and that relief will come only gradually through the operation of natural forces.

Certificates of Indebtedness.

The certificates of indebtedness meet with somewhat less general approval. This was a device authorized by law several years ago to enable the government to raise money on short notice to meet current expenses. That was at a time when the government's expenditures were in excess of its income and the working cash balance was becoming dangerously slender. The certificates ran only for one year and bore three per cent interest. At present the government does not need money for its own use. It has over $900,000,000 in its treasury, including deposits to secure circulation, and has available cash to the amount of $242,000,000. Most of the latter is on deposit in various national banks. To draw on these accounts would embarrass the banks and aggravate the whole financial situation. The issue of certificates of deposit is to secure money for current needs without withdrawing what is on deposit. The theory is that these certificates will be attractive investments for individuals who would otherwise hoard their money. They can hoard the certificates instead, knowing that they have the absolute safety of the government's guarantee and that they bear interest besides, as hoarded coin or greenbacks do not, and the government can put the money into circulation. The first indications are that they will be subscribed for in considerable quantities by bankers.

Other Measures.

Meanwhile, $33,000,000 in foreign gold has been imported to meet the demands since the banks generally suspended payment, and that much more will shortly arrive in accordance with contracts that have already been made. The increased deposits which the government promptly made with the banks and the funds which a group of prominent financiers threw into the market took the keenest edge off of the crisis and turned what would have been a disasterous panic into a mere stringency. These new measures of the Treasury Department will not only increase the supply of currency, but will also increase the supply of public confidence in the essential soundness of business conditions, which is even more important. It is interesting to observe that in this trying emergency, Mr. Cortelyou has discharged his duties as Secretary of the Treasury in a way which has commanded all but universal approval and which shows that his advancement, rapid as it has been, has not been too rapid. In his appointment to this position, which has generally been held by some veteran banker, the financiers shook their heads dubiously. They were prepared to admit that he possessed cleverness, fidelity, a large stock of general information, a comprehensive knowledge of office methods, and the sort of executive ability which is required in a competent chief-clerk, but they feared his lack of technical knowledge about banking and finance. So far, he has been sufficient for his office.

Natural Resources.

President Roosevelt has called an assembly of notables to meet in Washington, May 13-15, 1908, to discuss ways and means for preserving the country's natural resources. Those invited to participate in the meeting are: the governors of the states, three citizens of each state to be chosen by the governors, and the members of Congress. The theme is vast in its magnitude and in its importance. The world can have no more respect for a spendthrift nation, which prepares a to-morrow of want by the riotous wastefulness of to-day, than it has for an individual who pursues the same shortsighted policy. Most of the natural resources of the continent can be legitimately used without being used up. Timber is a crop. The proper harvesting of it does not diminish the supply. Agricultural land is a resource whose proper use does not diminish its value. Waterways lose no value by use. Mineral deposits, of course, exist in limited amount and can be exhausted, but whether the time of their failure is to be near or far off depends on how they are used. The problem is to learn how to make such use of all these resources as shall insure that the next generation of Americans shall not inherit from us a poorer land than we received from our fathers. In calling the governors and the members of Congress into council, the President seems to hint that the task is to be accomplished by the co-operation of federal and state governments.

By Wireless to Mars.

Unless the newspapers do him wrong, the great electrician, Nikola Tesla, is preparing to telegraph to Mars by employing electrical power generated by Niagara Falls to operate a tremendous wireless transmitter which he is constructing. There is nothing inherently impossible, or even improbable, in the belief that some day men will be able to send electrical waves through space as far as to the planet Mars. Neither is there any essential improbability in the assumption that that planet may be the home of sentient creatures, perhaps much farther advanced in culture and civilization than man, since their planet is older than ours. It is possible enough, though far from probable, that signals sent from either planet in the form of electrical waves, might chance to be received through suitable apparatus on the other and their source recognized. But the opening up of an intelligent telegraphic correspondence with Mars, even after all of these things had been accomplished, would be as impossible as ever. A man may go among foreigners and gradually pick up the language, because there is a common language of signs and gestures and paintings by which words may be interpreted. But two operators so remote from each other as to have nothing in common except the electrical waves out of which each had formed his own code, could not find a common language or interpret each other's signals. Nothing, perhaps, is scientifically impossible. But some things are mathematically impossible. It is impossible to solve an equation, however simple, in which all the quantities are unknown quantities. The same impossibility forever hinders the exchange of intelligible signals with Mars. It is unfortunate that so great an electrician as Tesla should continually come near doing so many wonderful things and just fail of accomplishing them. Some say that he is, scientifically, a greater electrician than Edison. Perhaps so, but he has done much less toward working out the great problems in which the world is interested.

The Supreme Court of New York has decided against Mr. Hearst in his election appeal case, by declaring unconstitutional the law passed by the last legislature providing for a recount of the ballots in the election in which McClellan defeated Hearst for mayor of New York. Governor Hughes favored the bill when it was before the legislature. Regardless of the desirability of having Hearst for mayor of New York, the idea of recounting the ballots in an election where the first counting was notoriously crooked, appealed to the governor's sense of fairness.

Reasons for Thanksgiving.

The cycle of the year has brought us to our national Thanksgiving day. It is well to pause in our onward rush for wealth or fame, and from honest toil, to give thanks to God for his manifold gifts to us. Nor is it difficult to think of many reasons why we should be thankful; they loom up before us in such multitude that we cannot enumerate them all.

Once more the earth has responded generously to the labor of the husbandman, and there is an abundance for man and beast. The fields in their season have ripened their crops; our barns are full, and the pastures are clothed with flocks; our mines have yielded their wealth, and everywhere honest labor has found remuneration. No devastating pestilence nor other destructive agency has visited our country.

The only shadow that rests upon the nation's prosperity is that which is cast by our own greed and selfishness. Whatever financial depression is now being felt in the channels of trade, is but the result of the violation of those laws of righteousness and of honest toil, which lie at the foundation of all enduring prosperity. There is no reason, therefore, why we should not regard the present monetary crisis as one of the things for which we should be thankful,—a blessing in disguise,—putting a check, as it does, upon extravagance and wild speculation, and calling attention to evils which need to be remedied in our industrial and commercial life. Many of God's choicest blessings come to us thus in the guise of adversity.

We may well be thankful that our nation, through its chief executive, has ben able to exert its influence in behalf of international peace, and to foster the spirit of fraternity among all the peoples of the earth. Let us thank God, too, that our national and state authorities are seeking a better enforcement of law in order to the protection of the people from oppression by those large combinations of capital which have not always regarded the rights of others nor the laws of the land, in their eagerness for gain.

There is reason for devout thanksgiving for the growth of the temperance sentiment, and for the many notable victories which are being won against the saloon and all the evils associated with it. The triumph of local option in so many counties and cities throughout the country, the admission of Oklahoma into the Union under prohibition, the recent enactment of statutory prohibition in Alabama and the multiplying agencies that are bearing witness against the evils of the liquor traffic, are reasons for devout thanksgiving to Almighty God, by whose favor and power we are hoping for the complete extermination of this evil from our land.

In the domain of religion there is much to be thankful for. The growing spirit of unity among the churches, the willingness to cooperate as far as possible, to fight the evils in our own land, and spread the gospel at home and abroad, and the rising tide of missionary enthusiasm, are signs that Jesus Christ is fulfilling his promise to be with his disciples and lead them on to final victory. The recent revival of interest in evangelism in all the Protestant churches, the Laymen's Missionary Movement, and the federation of the churches in order to hurl their united influence against threatening dangers, and for the speedier triumph of the gospel, are most gratifying signs of the times.

In our own religious movement, which has for its end the promotion of unity among the followers of Christ by a return to the simpler faith and practice of New Testament Christianity, there is much to be thankful for. Increasing interest in missionary activity, both in the home-land and in foreign fields, a deepening spiritual life, a revival of interest in and zeal for the ideals for which our fathers stood, and the evident purpose to perfect our organization for the realization of these ideals, are causes for sincere thanksgiving to Him whose kingdom on earth we are seeking to promote.

Nor should we fail to give thanks to our Heavenly Father for the blessings which have come to our homes and firesides, and which have enriched and ennobled our individual lives. For the loved ones we have yet with us, and for the hope we have in those we have loved and lost a little while, for all the sacred ties which bind us to one another and to God, let us have grateful hearts.

Points from the Minutes of the Norfolk Convention.

"The American Home Missionary," for November, has not only an attractive cover, but its contents are of interest to every member of our churches. It contains the minutes of the fifty-seventh annual convention of the American Christian Missionary Society, one of the most important conventions in its whole history. We call attention to a few points of special interest.

The co-operation of the Baptist churches and our own in western Canada, and their purpose to unite in establishing New Testament Christianity throughout that wide region, is a matter of great importance, and the recommendation of the Board that $10,000 be expended in that field during the present missionary year, was unanimously approved. Let us hope that the example set us in western Canada will stimulate churches of these bodies in other parts of the country to follow their Christian example.

The revised constitution, as it appears in the minutes, and as adopted, should receive the careful study of the brethren, so that no part of it may remain a dead letter. Here, for instance, is a by-law of the new constitution, the observance of which is of the first importance to the orderly transaction of the business of the convention: "All members of the American Christian Missionary Society attending its meetings must furnish credentials in order to exercise the right to vote." Of course all have a right to participate in the deliberations. Hereafter, then, one of the first things to do, when the convention is called to order, will be the appointment of a committee on credentials, who will report at once the number and names of (1) life directors; (2) life members; (3) annual members; (4) delegates from churches; (5) delegates from state missionary societies, Sunday-schools and other organizations entitled, under the constitution, to representation. It is important that this matter should be brought before our churches early in the missionary year, that they may be prepared to act intelligently in the matter of representation at our next convention. The constitution defines clearly, in article III, the conditions of membership in the society of the various kinds indicated. Churches should secure copies of the November issue of the Home Missionary and study this constitution.

An important provision of the new constitution is that the missionary societies of the various states, territories and provinces of America may articulate with and become auxiliary to the American Christian Missionary Society, on conditions which are specified, and the corresponding secretaries of these various societies shall be superintendents of missions in their respective territories for the American Christian Missionary Society. This will be an advance step toward the unification of our work, when all the details have been worked out satisfactorily to the various state societies and the general society.

The report of the Board rightly emphasizes Children's Day for Home Missions. It says: "In the modern Bible-school renaissance, so deeply and widely affecting the present and future interest of our organized missionary work, we have sought a place for the study of Home Misions and Home Missionary problems." In this connection we may refer to the recommendation of the Committee on Recommendations, as follows:

> In view of the widespread interest in Bible-school work and the revival in its behalf, which is freighted with such cheer and hope for the future of our cause, it is the sense of this committee that a national secretary of Bible-schools be employed by the American Christian Missionary Society, whose duties it will be to organize mission schools in needy fields, promote the highest and best things in Bible-school work, and, in a word, as no other can, stimulate this mightiest auxiliary and feeder of the church. And so we recommend, fully assured as we are, that his labors will very speedily quicken all our missionary giving, none more than our giving to the evangelization of America".

This recommendation was referred to the Acting Board and the Bible-school Association. It was thought best to have some of the details worked out by these boards before final action was taken. There is no question, we think, but that an additional secretary, acting under the direction of the Home Board, and giving special attention to the Bible-school work, as indicated, would be a most useful factor in the improvement of our Bible-school work, both in quantity and quality, and in stimulating greater interest among the Bible-schools in the work of Home Missions. Last year the Sunday-schools gave for Home Missions a little less than $11,000. There is no reason why this amount should not be steadily increased until it equals the amount given to Foreign Missions.

An interesting table is the list of contributions by states for the last missionary year. Kentucky leads the other states with a total contribution of $10,349.50. Ohio follows with $9,770.21. Then comes Illinois with $8,316.75, with Indiana on its heels with $8,044.06. Missouri comes fifth on the list, though first in numerical strength, with $7,799.98. Of course these are the amounts contributed directly to the treasury of the American Christian Missionary Society, and does not include the state funds. It will be seen that there is unlimited room for growth in our home missionary contributions.

We have already referred to the recommendation concerning the committee of twenty-five, on the Publication House, and the names of this committee are printed in the minutes, and will also be found elsewhere in this issue.

The report of the prayer-meeting committee contains the list of topics for the prayer-meetings for the entire year. It is an excellent list of topics and might well be adopted in all the churches.

There are many other matters of interest in these minutes, and a copy should be secured and studied by all who are interested in the work of Home Missions.

The continuation of the review of "The Heart of the Gospel," by Dr. J. M. Campbell, is postponed this week, on account of space given to Thanksgiving. The Editor of this paper read a review of this book before our own ministers' meeting at their weekly Monday meeting, and by request repeated it before the Presbyterian Ministerial Alliance on the following Monday morning. These articles will embrace the substance of that review and perhaps additional reflections on the subject of the Atonement—the core of the gospel message.

Notes and Comments.

"The Word and Way", of Kansas City, is apparently troubled in spirit because the Baptists and Disciples of Christ seem to be getting closer together. This is its explanation of the strange phenomenon:

"The Baptists and Disciples of Virginia and Maryland are getting, it would seem, very chummy. This condition of things has in some places two causes, and in other places one. In some parts of the country the Baptists have abandoned somewhat the old Baptist position and practice, and have wriggled over toward the Disciples. Meanwhile the Disciples have moved away from their original position in the Baptist direction. In this way the approach has been made. In other places the approach has been by the Disciples' change of position, wholly."

After all, what does it matter whether the Baptists have "wriggled over toward the Disciples" or whether "the Disciples have moved away from their original position in the Baptist direction"? The fact that they are nearer together is the thing about which our contemporary ought to rejoice, if it is in sympathy with Christ's prayer for the unity of his followers. Nothing would seem to be more natural and inevitable than that Christians, who acknowledge and seek to follow a common Leader and to do His work in His spirit, should get closer together.

One thing, however, is more important than unity between Baptists and Disciples, and that is that they should be honest and truthful in their statements concerning each other. Think of a statement like this, in a paper claiming to be Christian, with all the opportunities it has for knowing the truth from its closest religious neighbors! The extract is from "The Word and Way", of Kansas City, where such men as Haley, Richardson, Combs, et al., live and labor.

"By the stern demands of the doctrine of baptismal salvation the school of Alexander Campbell has denied the real, personal operation of the Holy Spirit. They have reduced a change of heart to a mere intellectual affair. They have ridiculed the new birth and belittled religious experience and emotion."

These statements need no refutation, as their untruthfulness can only amaze and grieve our readers.

Opening "The Examiner" (Baptist), of New York, we find an editorial reference to the discussion of the subject of union of Baptists, Free Baptists, and Disciples, in the Baptist Congress which recently met in Baltimore. The editor of "The Examiner" says:

"It is evident that our Free Baptist brethren are a little coy just now, and as for the Disciples, we have seen little inclination on their part to seek re-union, or agree to any basis on which such a re-union could be satisfactorily effected. But time, and friendly discussion, and a better understanding on all sides, may do much to remove difficulties which now seem more formidable than, perhaps, they really are. Under all the circumstances, an immediate re-union is hardly to be looked for; but, even should it take twenty or even fifty years to consummate it, if the thing ought to be done, the time devoted to the consideration of it will be well spent."

The tone of the editor's comments is more sympathetic than those of our Kansas City contemporary. We hardly see, however, why "The Examiner" has failed to notice a very strong inclination on the part of the Disciples of Christ to seek re-union with Baptists on the only basis upon which it is possible for them to unite, namely; the New Testament basis—that upon which they are uniting in several places. As to how long it will take for this union to be consummated, that will depend on how long party spirit is to prevail.

"The Gospel Messenger", the organ of "The Brethren", discussing "a basis for church federation" and replying to a statement that we ought to build on our agreements rather than on our differences, says:

"If we were to drop all our differences and try to build on our agreements, there would be precious little to build on."

Cheer up, neighbor! It isn't half so bad as that. There is faith in the one God, and in his Son Jesus Christ, who became incarnate and died "for us men and our salvation." There is the Bible as the record of God's revelation; there are the principles of faith and repentance, and obedience to Christ; there is the perpetuity of the two ordinances—baptism and the Lord's Supper; there is the necessity of the new birth and of a holy life; there is the doctrine of the forgiveness of sin, the resurrection from the dead and the life everlasting. Are not these great truths of vastly more importance th. the things about which we differ?

At the close of an article in "The Christian Standard, by J. B. Briney, commenting upon a paragraph in THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, he says:

"If THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is animated by the spirit of the Golden Rule, and is willing to be fair and candid in this matter, it will not hesitate to allow me, in my own language, to place before its readers my position. Will it do this?"

Has THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST ever denied Brother Briney the privilege of stating to its readers, in his own language, his objections to federation? Our columns were open to him to reply to the paragraph to which he takes exception, and he had no occasion to reply to us through another paper. For the last five or six years we have sought earnestly both through THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and by private personal appeals to the opponents of federation, to get them to state their objections to the federation that had been actually proposed, and which had received the support of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST; but so far in vain. The action of the Norfolk meeting makes it impossible longer to evade the real issue—either as to the basis proposed or as to our response to it. If Brother Briney wishes to speak to our readers on that issue, he has the floor.

Editor's Easy Chair.

One of the pictures which it is easy to revive in these November days, when the autumn blasts breathe a threnody over the departing year, is that of going nutting. The trees have lost their leaves, which lie thickly upon the ground and

"Rustle to the eddying gust
And to the rabbit's tread," and the hickory nuts and the walnuts are plainly silhouetted against the autumn sky. With each gust of the autumn wind, they fall upon the brown earth and the music of their falling—who of us cannot hear it yet across the chasm of many years? The thin-shelled hickory nuts, from the shellbark tree, usually hulled themselves in falling and others required only a little persuasion with the fingers to come out of their summer hiding places, and they were cast into the clean piles with their fellows, to be seasoned for winter use. The walnuts always had to be hulled by hand, as did also the hazel nuts, and this process stained the fingers of boys not unlike that which cigarettes give to the fingers of the boys of to-day who are so unfortunate as to have contracted that evil habit. These treasures of nuts from the unplanted orchards of the woods were stored away in the cellar or attic where they would dry, and from their hiding places they would be brought out during the long winter evenings for a bedtime feast. The whole scene rises very distinctly to our view again—the gray autumn sky, the wailing winds, the swaying branches of the trees, the falling nuts, the eager gathering of them into sacks, and the cracking of them on the hearthstone before the blazing fire, away back in the long ago.

Why is it that as the years pass by, and we lose our relish for many things which amused and interested us in childhood and youth, and even in young manhood and womanhood, the scenes and the phenomena of nature never cloy on our taste, but grow more dear to us as our youthtime recedes into the distant past? Who grows tired of the trees, whether clothed in their beauteous robes of summer, in their gorgeous apparel of the early autumn, or when their naked branches stand out against the autumn sky? Who ever wearies of seeing the growing grass, the falling leaves, the flying clouds or the changing tones of the seasons? The head may be silvered with age and the form bent under the weight of years, and yet one loves to saunter by the prattling brook, or wander among the hills and watch the flight of birds, listen to the woodland echoes, or stand in admiration before some ancient cliff whose gray stones have battled with the storms of centuries. In such strolls through the autumn woods, we have sometimes reached the summit of a hill where we could watch the winding stream in the valley below, and hear the music of its falling waters. Of all these things, we say, one does not grow weary, but they acquire increasing preciousness with our passing years. Even the bare mother Earth beneath our feet comes to have a place in our affections, for in its bosom at last, somewhere, somewhen, we shall lie down to rest—this mortal part of us—when life's brief journey is ended. Perhaps the answer to the question we have raised is that these objects of nature, coming from the creative hand of God who is the Father of our spirits, have a certain affinity for us and we for them. These things were made for man and are, therefore, adapted to his needs, ministering to his higher as well as to his lower nature.

By a sudden change of scene from city to country, since the foregoing was written, a night's ride on the wings of steam has brought us very near the spot from which the preceding picture was drawn. Nature changes her appearance in new countries undergoing development almost as much as the people who do the developing. Forests give place to farms, and towns spring up where once the foxes had their holes and the deer and wild turkey made their abode. Besides the actual changes, the relative change in appearance is scarcely less striking. The hills are not so high, the trees are not so tall, the springs gushing out of the hill-sides are not so copious, nor the distances between places half so great, as they seemed to be in our childhood and youth. The great houses that seemed to be lordly mansions to our boyish eyes, dwindle into very small, commonplace dwellings after the lapse of a score or more of years. All things are relative in this world. A man may be rich with an income of $1,000 a year, in some localities, and poor with an income of $50,000 or $100,000 in very different surroundings. A man possessed of a hundred million dollars would feel himself utterly impoverished, if not a candidate for the poorhouse, if his fortune were suddenly reduced to only ten million dollars! And yet there are those of us, including all the editorial fraternity, who feel sure that with ten million dollars we could succeed easily in keeping the wolf from the door! When the Easy Chair Editor earned his first bright silver dollar in a day's work in the harvest field, not remote from where these lines are penned, and carried it home at night, he felt richer than he ever expects to feel again in this world.

This morning at an early hour the train paused a few moments at the station in a town where this Editor once upon a time held a debate—think of it!—and that, too, with a Baptist minister! But that was a long while ago, as may be known by the proposition we discussed—"Are men born into this world totally and hereditarily depraved?" That sounds as if it might have been before the flood, with father Noah as moderator—but it wasn't! It was only a bout a third of a century ago. Now we should as soon think of discussing whether or not the moon is inhabited! But there was one good thing about that debate, and so far as we know it was a unique thing. At the middle of the second day of the discussion, the young St. Louis editor gave his Baptist brethren, whom he had known and loved from his boyhood, opportunity to close the debate, then and there, if they so desired—and they were unanimous in their decision to close it! And so the debate was turned into an evangelistic meeting, which in a few days resulted in thirty or forty additions. Since then we have given our spare time from the office to winning men for Christ, rather than in attempting to win men from the error of total hereditary depravity, which they no longer believe in the old sense of that dogma. The man who met us at the station this morning as we passed through, for a moment's interview, was a Baptist! Debates have now given place to union meetings, and fighting each other to federation in fighting the devil! Praise God!

One gets strong contrasts of scene and surroundings in close juxtaposition in this southwest region. One night we stood upon a hill, as the moon rode up the heavens from the east and shed her silver light upon range after range of hills and valleys, from which there came no sound of human life, and in which there was no visible sign of human habitation. It was all nature wild, weird, rugged, silent and sublime. Above were the star-lit heavens, below the untamed and untenanted hills and hollows of the earth, while stillness, solemn and profound, filled all the vast space between. The next morning, after an hour's ride through the country, we were in the midst of some of the greatest apple orchards to be found anywhere in the world. Missouri is "the land of the Big Red Apple," but the apple itself is not much in evidence this year, on account of the summer-like March and the winter-like April which followed it last spring. But these young orchards, showing thrift and vigorous growth, with their long lines of trees stretching across wide areas of cultivated land, indicate clearly enough that this section of imperial Missouri is to be one of the great apple-bearing regions of the world. Another specialty of this part of the state is the strawberry, which is grown here on a large scale. Some of the land about Marionville has yielded from between $200 and $300 per acre, this year, from strawberries, although the yield was not so large as usual. Even those unutilized forests to which we have referred will one day contribute their full share to the development of the untold resources of the state. The soil, though rocky on the surface, is capable of producing the finest of grasses and fruits, and with the abundance of timber and water, is destined to support a thrifty and happy people, and to be the abode of contentment and peace.

THE WORK OF THE WOMEN

C. W. B. M. Day and the East.

Why should the churches in general keep C. W. B. M. Day? Is not this society a small affair, its work carried on in a corner, by a small group of women, its number and income sufficient for its limited sphere of action? Why does not this women's society content itself with the number enlisted, instead of seeking the recognition and co-operation of the churches?

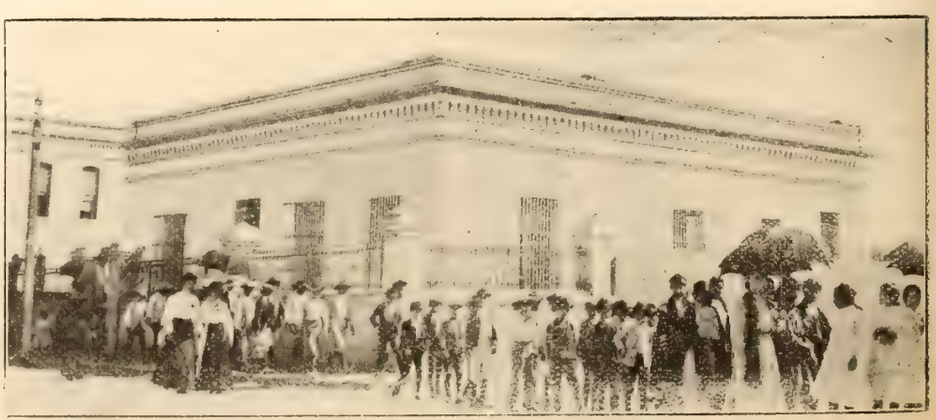
Because the Christian Woman's Board of Missions is not a small affair; because it is the national missionary organization of the women of the great body of the Disciples of Christ, its leaders having clearness of vision, courageous hearts and an outlook as wide as the world.

I have not the space to speak of the various departments of our great work in the home field, nor of what we have done and hope to do in Jamaica, in Mexico, in Porto Rico and in South America. It is mine to speak of the East.

Some School Girls at Deoghur Orphanage, India.

In China and India are nearly one-half the population of the globe congregated. Long since has the Christian Woman's Board of Missions seen the open door inviting into China. Long since have our women entertained the hope of entering and are now ready to enter this most needy and most important of all fields. The neediest of all is China because of her low moral status combined with her overwhelming preponderance in numbers. Most important is China because of these things and because of the present opportunity during the progress of the marvelous peaceful revolution which may end all too soon. Most important is China because she is to be one of the greatest of the world powers and the Chinese, the millions who will not be missed at home, will be scattered over all the earth.

Church at Mt. Carmel, Jamaica, Since the Earthquake.



Whether China's immeasurable power shall be for good or for evil, for the human race, depends upon whether she chooses to remain pagan or to become Christian. And her choice depends upon her opportunity, for with the opportunity she will choose Christ. To give her an opportunity means to send her thousands of missionaries. If all the foreign missionaries of every society and every land could be poured into China, her need would not be supplied. Like the lean kine which, after devouring the fat kine, remained unappeased, she would remain unsatisfied. So great is her need, so long has she been famished for the Bread of Life.

And the same is true of India. With all that has been done by all societies, the work of Christianizing India, with her three hundred millions, has scarce begun. A little strip on the border has been won, but the land remains to be conquered. Yet many societies are at work, each doing a little.

Our Christian Woman's Board of Missions has done more work in India than for any other foreign country. With thirty-one missionaries, seven assistant missionaries and a hundred and thirty-one native helpers, our women succeeded in carrying on more or less work in ten mission stations, and seventeen outstations, supporting four orphanages, twenty-four schools, twenty-three Sunday-schools, four hospitals and twenty dispensaries. But what about the millions that are not saved? We have made a noble beginning, but only a beginning. It is that we may reach many more that we ask you, our outside sisters and brethren, to help in this work. Our board could well use a million dollars a year and our people are well able to contribute this amount if only others will help and not leave the entire burden upon the fifty-two thousand members of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions.

In connection with the work in India we must not forget—let no Christian woman dare forget, until child marriage shall have been, with suti and the offering of human sacrifices, relegated to the past—the cry of the children, the wives, the child-mothers, the child-widows. Let us remember that while little children the girls of India have the burden of mature women thrust upon them. For Hindus are small and less strong than the girls in our land.

Let us remember and be thankful that, largely through the influence of the missionaries, the age of the second marriage has been raised from 10 to 12 years. Let us be thankful that the agitation goes on, favoring greater age in the girl brides. And let us be thankful that agitation has begun to do away with the first marriage contract,—which may take place when the girl is but a few months old and must take place by the time she is 9 years old,—which takes the girl from under the protection of father and places her under the protection of her husband. And being thankful, let us do everything in our power to increase the number of missionaries, that this work may go on.

The Christian Woman's Board of Missions has been wise and faithful in the use of funds entrusted to it, has proven worthy of your confidence in the past, and courageous in the projection of new work, and now asks your heartiest, fullest co-operation to the end that the world may be won for Christ.

Make It a Great Day.

Why make C. W. B. M. day a great day in all the churches? Because of the things for which the Christian Woman's Board of Missions stands and the work which it is accomplishing. There is no more far-reaching work among us, and no more remarkable chapter of our history than that which tells of the origin progress of this organization of consecrated and competent Christian women.

One reason for the success of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions is that its work covers such a wide scope. In foreign fields its forms of work are: Evangelistic, Pastoral, Sunday-school, Day-school, Orphanage, Training-school, Zenana, Village, Colportage and Medical, which includes hospital, dispensary and leper. Thus men and women, boys and girls, including even the babies, are cared for. In the United States the work is, likewise, broad and comprehensive. Here the forms of work are: Evangelistic, Pastoral, University, Bible School, Industrial and Organizing. These lines touch all departments of life, and provide for Biblical instruction and Christian activity all the way from "The Little Light Bearers" in the Junior Department to the students in the great universities. What a scope! What comprehensive, far-reaching work! And how wise, too; its wisdom having been justified by its results. Read a sketch of this organization from its beginning; read the thirty-third annual report, for the year ending September 30, 1907, and you will have a fresh demonstration of the wise and effective labors of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. As a representative of one of the states which has received great blessings from the work of this organization,

"I wish to emphasize especially the work in the United States. During the year just closed work was done in thirty-nine states and territories, aiding seventy-five churches, in which there were 3,025 conversions, supporting fifteen schools and Bible chairs, attended by 1,773 students. The work in this country embraced all sections of our great land, ministering to white and black, and the foreigners upon our shores; extended into the heart of great cities and out into the frontier. Colorado can bear grateful testimony to what this splendid organization has accomplished within her borders in the years since it became our helper from without. Thirty-five of our fifty churches have been aided, 18 of them organized, by the aid of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, and we have been enabled to enter some of our best territory.

Another reason for success lies in the things emphasized and the methods adopted. "To cultivate a missionary spirit, to encourage missionary effort in the church, to disseminate missionary intelligence, and secure systematic contributions for missionary purposes"—these are declared to be the objects of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. How vital are these things—a missionary spirit, missionary effort and missionary intelligence; and if they exist, systematic contributions for missionary purposes are sure to follow. But this system has not been mechanical or perfunctory, but simple, businesslike and, above all, the result of the vital spiritual teaching just mentioned.

Another element of success is in the emphasis laid upon prayer.

Because C. W. B. M. day stands for all these things, it should be made equally prominent and potent with any other day in the missionary calendar.

Desirability of Union Between Baptists and Disciples*

By F. D. Power

In any assembly of Baptist Churches of Christ I feel in a peculiar sense at home. My grand-parents in Old Virginia were Baptists—members of Old Grafton near Yorktown, a church constituted in 1809. Nineteen years later came the unfortunate "Dover Decrees," and the church felt its liberty invaded, and accepted the position of Alexander Campbell. Had it not been for John Kerr, who wrote those famous decrees, and the Dover Association that passed them at Four Mile Creek Church near Richmond in 1832, I doubtles would have been pastor to-day of a "Baptist" instead of a "Disciple" Church of Christ. It is fair to say, I think, there could not be found now, within the bounds of that Association, a single man who would defend these articles which declared "the cause of truth and righteousness" required a separation, and called upon those whom they deemed erring brethren to rise up and depart. On both sides there has been an increase of knowledge and of grace since that early time, and if North and South could shake hands across "the bloody chasm", and in a single generation stand shoulder to shoulder against a common foe, this little rift between us, beloved brethren in Christ, should be closed in a moment.

1. Union between Baptists and Disciples is desirable because of the desirability of union among all followers of our blessed Lord. We hear the Master on his knees offering the most remarkable prayer in all the world's history—that all who believe on Him may be one—one flock, united, of one Lord, faith and baptism as an additional and perpetual evidence to the world of his nature and authority. Four things he asks: The preservation of the true doctrine; the application of his sacrifice; the life, joy and glory of his Church; the concord of his people; and on the last, makes the triumph of his cause depend. "Plain and artless as is the language, it is so deep, rich and wide that no one can find its bottom and extent", said Luther, speaking of this prayer. Bossuet had it read to him sixty times in his last illness. John Knox called for it when dying. After the greatest sermon of the Christ his greatest prayer; Gethsemane is befre him, and Calvary. What the Church needs to-day—the whole Church—is this spirit. The authority of the Christ and the spirit of the Christ recognized, and, as the night the day, must follow the unity of the Church of Christ. Skepticism will never be broken, paganism conquered, ecclesiasticism reformed, false religion dissipated, indiffe ence dethroned, the whole world won for our King and its kingdoms become his Kingdom, till the whole Church is more thoroughly at one with each other. Benjamin Franklin, who, in signing the immortal Declaration, declared, "We must all hang together, or we shall all hang separately," was expressing what Tacitus long before said of the Germans: "Whilst fighting separately all are conquered together." The old Greek, when asked why Lacedaemon had no walls, answered: "The concord of its citizens is its strength!" By concentration of his forces, Bonaparte won his battles. "The more they were persecuted, the more closely they adhered to each other," said Gibbon of the early Christians. "The multitude of them that believed were of one heart and one soul."

2. Because Christian bodies in closest fundamental relations would reasonably be first to get together. The great branches of the Presbyterian Church, the various schools of Lutherans, the different denominations of Methodists in each case would naturally flow into one before all Protestant churches, for example, could be expected to consumma e a closer union. And how can we look for the larger and more complete unity if brethren so near to each other remain separated?

We of the great immersionist family—Baptists, Free Baptists and Disciples—are near to each other in doctrine and practice and hold vast interests in common. Indeed it is historically true that the Disciples were never in favor of separation. Alexander Campbell declared ten days before he passed from earth, speaking on this subject: "The Baptists and we ought never to have separated. We might have remained one and come to a perfect agreement. It ought to have been so." It was never his purpose to withdraw from the Baptist fold and his first publication is called "The Christian Baptist." If there were some radical differences then, they have been softened. Oen we are in accepting the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments as containing the inspired word of God and rule of faith and life for his people; in the rejection of human creeds as binding upon the conscience, and our appeal to the Bible alone, accepting Jesus of Nazareth as the Son of God and the all-sufficient Saviour of men, and his authority as supreme in the Church; in receiving the Holy Spirit as the Divine One sent to convict the world of sin, righteousness and judgment to come, to comfort the Christian and sanctify and abide with the Church; in recognition of baptism and the Lord's Supper as the two New Testament ordinances—the first as the burial with Christ in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit of a penitent believer, and the second as a memorial feast in celebration of the sufferings and death of the Lord Jesus; in the assertion of the liberty of the individual church of Christ to control its affairs and to proclaim a full and free salvation to all who believe on the Christ and obey Him as the Scriptures require; in making no distinction but that of office between clergy and laity; in the organization of societies for inter-communion and mutual co-operation without jurisdiction over the churches.

Of course there are Baptists and Baptists, as there are Disciples and Disciples. Extremes among Baptists are much more pronounced in matters of doctrine and practice and among Disciples as well, than is true of average Baptists and Disciples. Surely among brethren that stand so close together there should be co-operation, fraternity, unity. The walls are thin. The barriers that keep us apart are trifling. The hindrances to our perfect fellowship would vanish at once if all were willing to be led by the Spirit of God.

3. Because the differences that separate us are not serious and fundamental. When a Baptist unites with a congregation of Disciples he undergoes no change except in name, and when a Disciple becomes a member of a Baptist church of Christ, this is the only change that is expected. No moral or doc-

WHAT WAS IT
The Woman Feared?

What a comfort to find it is not "the awful thing" feared, but only chronic indigestion, which proper food can relieve.

A woman in Ohio says:

"I was troubled for years with indigestion and chronic constipation. At times I would have such a gnawing in my stomach that I actually feared I had a—I dislike to write or even think of what I feared.

"Seeing an account of Grape-Nuts, I decided to try it. After a short time was satisfied the trouble was not the awful thing I feared but was still bad enough. However I was relieved of a bad case of dyspepsia, by changing from improper food to Grape-Nuts.

"Since that time my bowels have been as regular as a clock. I had also noticed before I began to eat Grape-Nuts that I was becoming forgetful of where I put little things about the house, which was very annoying.

"But since the digestive organs have become strong from eating Grape-Nuts, my memory is good and my mind as clear as when I was young, and I am thankful." Name give by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little booklet, "The Road to Wellville," in packages. "There's a Reason."

trinal change takes place. Baptist churches do not hesitate to receive Disciples, nor Disciples, Baptists. Disciples grant letters to Baptist churches without hesitation, and while it is not as usual as it should be, I have received letters from Baptist churches.

Are there differences as to the character of those admitted to the Lord's Table? Let both bodies hold simply to the position that Christian baptism s pre-requisite to communion, and this obstacle seems to be removed. Are there disagreements touching the position of faith and repentance, as to which precedes the other and as to the relation of baptism to the remission of sins? Let both agree that faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, sincere and heartfelt repentance and full surrender to the authority of the Lord Jesus in this holy institution, are conditions of membership in the body of Christ and there may be mutual recognition and fellowship. Are there distinctions with respect to the name of the Lord's people? Let Baptists recognise Disciples as "Churches of Christ"—Disciples; and Disciples, Baptists as "Churches of Christ"—Baptist, and we have come, measurably, to common ground. A Baptist friend of mine says we read in the Bible of only twelve Baptists—those men found by Paul in Ephesus who were baptized "unto John's baptism," and he baptized them in the name of the Lord Jesus and they became Christians. Certain it is "Disciples were called Christians." In this world and the next, it is enough to be a Christian, a member of the body of Christ. When that which is perfect is come from turret to foundation stone, the work of sectarianism shall pass away, and the spotless bride of Christ wear not the name of the bridegroom's friend nor the bridegroom's servant, but only the name that is above every name. As Whitfield said: "I wish all names among the saints of God were swallowed up in that one name Christian. I long for professors to leave off placing religion in saying, 'I am a Churchman,' 'I am a Dissenter.' My language of such is 'Are you of Christ?' If so, I love you with all my heart."

Are there differences among us with regard to Calvinism, or any other system outside the Scriptures? Let all such things be subordinated to the faith that saves and full liberty be granted, consistent with loyalty to the great Head of the Church, and all will be well. Such movements as that in northwest Canada show that these objections are readily overcome.

4. Because we stand for the monumental institution, Christian baptism, in respect to action and subject, as we believe it taught by the Apostles and practiced by the early church. Baptists of all descriptions in this country, including thirteen denominations, all the way from regulars to "Old Two Seed in the Spirit," number little more than six millions. Baptists in all English-speaking countries number nine out of one hundred and twenty-seven millions. Baptists in all Christendom, including the Greek Church number but one hundred out of four hundred and seventy-seven million followers of Christ of every creed the world over. Baptists, Free Baptists and Disciples are one brotherhood, holding to the universal obligation of the immersion of the whole body and repudiating any substitute as authorized by the Greek word baptizo. They are one also in claiming this baptism to be the voluntary action of an intelligent, believing and penitent person, and in rejecting the baptism of infants as a practice of the early church. A common heritage is ours in Robert Hall, William Carey, Adoniram Judson, Charles Spurgeon and Roger Williams, in the struggle for soul-liberty in both England and America, and even in the succession of pure churches from the third century down to the present, if our brethren insist on this as an essential thing; but most of all we are one people in holding to the New Testament integrity of that institution commanded by our divine Master when He said, "Go, making disciples, baptizing them." Is there not still need of emphasis upon this position for which our fathers contended earnestly as a part of the faith once for all delivered unto the saints?

5. Because such union would greatly strengthen the work of our hands at home and abroad. Why in a community where there is a Church of Christ—Baptist and a Church of Christ—Disciple, which may agree upon co-operation under one pastor, should not such co-operation be encouraged, and result in a stronger body than either could establish alone? Why in a community where there are a number of Baptists and a number of Disciples who may agree to work together, and who appeal for aid to their respective mission boards, should not their union be advised, and the two groups united accomplish better service than could be possible, each working by itself? Why, in a larger way, in our great cities, should there not be greater mutual sympathy and helpfulness and co-operation among the brethren of these bodies, resulting in increased efficiency and worthier achievement in the great interests they hold in common? Why, in the foreign field, could not such co-operation be possible, greater influence wielded and larger results secured in dealing with the appalling needs of heathenism? Why would not a Pan-Baptist Conference be profitable to secure such closer fraternity and possible unity among us? Would not a united front on the part of those who plead for "One body and spirit, as we are called in one hope of our calling, one Lord, one faith, and one baptism," be potent and far-reaching in this twentieth century?

Disciples celebrate at Pittsburg in 1909 the centennial of Thomas Campbell's great "Declaration and Address," which sought "to restore unity, peace and purity to the whole Church of God." Why should not prayer be made by both Baptists and Disciples for some practical steps toward union which would crown that event with exceeding great joy? Brethren, we do not ask that the churches of Christ, known as Baptists, shall swallow up the Disciples nor that the churches of Christ known as Disciples shall swallow up the Baptists, but we do seek the unity of the churches of Christ, on apostolic foundations. In union is strength. Our Lord prayed for union; let the Church pray. Let party barriers be laid low. Let the word of God stand forth in its true position. Let the Master be Lord, Head of the body, Prophet and Priest, Center and Corner Stone, King of kings and Lord of lords. Let the hearts of the millions who love Him lift up to the throne of a prayer-answering God, one earnest and concentrated volume of petition for the triumph of the truth and salvation of the world. Combination of forces, concord, unity, agreement, all working together with God and with each other will under God bring the end for which Jesus prayed. Tennyson sang:

"I dipt into the future, far as human eye could see,
Saw the vision of the world, and all the wonder that would be:

MORE THAN EVER

Increased Capacity for Mental Labor Since Leaving Off Coffee.

Many former coffee drinkers who have mental work to perform, day after day, have found a better capacity and greater endurance by using Postum Food Coffee, instead of ordinary coffee. An Ills. woman writes:

"I had drank coffee for about twenty years and finally had what the doctor called "coffee heart." I was nervous and extremely despondent; had little mental or physical strength left, had kidney trouble and constipation.

"The first noticeable benefit derived from the change from coffee to Postum was the natural action of the kidneys and bowels. In two weeks my heart action was greatly improved and my nerves steady.

"Then I became less despondent, and the desire to be active again, showed proof of renewed physical and mental strength.

"I am steadily gaining in physical strength and brain power. I formerly did mental work and had to give it up on account of coffee, but since using Postum I am doing hard mental labor with less fatigue than ever before."

LITERATURE OF TO-DAY

THE LITTLE WATER FOLKS. By Clarence Hawkes; 12 mo., 157 pages. Price 75 cents. Thomas Y. Crowell and Company.

These stories of lake and river are dedicated to the boy who sees, and they will inspire the boy who does not see to study more successfully the wild things of nature. Even grown folk will be interested in these "little water folks." The illustrations, it may be added, do illustrate.

DOROTHY'S RABBIT STORIES. By Mary E. Calhoun. Pages 115. Price $1. Thomas Y. Crowell and Company.

They are capital stories. Mr. Rabbit has all kinds of experiences, some very funny and very serious. He is associated with Mr. Dog and Mrs. Cat and Captain Crow and Colonel Coon and General Bear and other gentlemen and ladies of the animal world. These are on the order of the Brer Rabbit tales, but dialect does not play much part in them. They will delight the young people. The pictures, by Edward Blaisdell, are full of humor.

PINAFORE PALACE. A book of rhymes for the nursery, edited by Kate Douglass and Nora Archibald Smith. Pages 249. Price $1.50. The McClure Company, New York.

If you can buy only one book for the young folks, this is the book to buy. It is unique, up-to-date, yet of your childhood.

"Where does Pinafore Palace stand?
Right in the middle of Lilliput land."

And through the magic wickets of this book you can traverse its halls of story and song, for here we have a collection of all the best nursery rhymes, nonsense verses, guessing games, lullabies and slumber songs for the very little folk. With this you can put them to sleep; with this you can keep them awake. It is put out by the publishers in excellent style, and the introduction to the mother is full of charm.

RED RUBBER. By E. D. Morel. Pages 213. Price $1.25. American Tract Society.

For some years past in the minds of some people who did not want to be convinced there was a strong doubt as to the atrocities said to be perpetrated in connection with the rubber trade on the Congo River. In our own mind there has never been any hesitancy in accepting the first reports of the conditions of that country. They were vouched for by reputable witnesses and everything we have learned since has tended to confirm the fact of the sufferings which have been placed upon the natives there by the white men in their greed for gold. This book, in a striking way presents the has been and is of the situation. It puts the blame upon the proper people and it is simply unanswerable. It is a book for the President, his cabinet and all our legislators to read. We do not suppose for one moment that King Leopold will care a penny what the author says, unless the governments of Great Britain and the United States give some recognition that they are opposed to the outrageous conduct of those who take their cue from him.

ANECDOTES AND ILLUSTRATIONS. By R. A. Torrey. Pages 185. Price 75 cents, net. Fleming H. Revell Company.

The value of an apt illustration is not to be overestimated. Many a time it is the chief part of a speech or sermon, for it fixes the thought in the mind of the hearer in a way that neither argument nor affirmation could. Dr Torrey uses illustrations to a very large extent in his sermons. The chief objection we have to his is that they are, for the most part, too long; yet for the purpose of the itinerating evangelist with large masses of people to deal with, perhaps the objection is not of such great weight. Otherwise we like this book. Many of the illustrations are among the preacher's own experiences and these are always the most effective.

PALESTINE THROUGH THE EYES OF A NATIVE. By Gamahliel Wad-el Ward. Pages, 201. Price $1.00, net. Fleming H. Revell Company.

There are many books on the Holy Land, but among them this has a place. The author has an intimate knowledge of the country, its racial instincts and inherited customs. This fact gives fresh and realistic force to his interpretations of the life of ancient Palestine. As a literary workman he may lack system, but he will help the Bible student.

BETWEEN THE TESTAMENTS. By David B. Gregg, D.D., LL.D. Pages 124. Price 75 cents, net. Funk and Wagnalls Company, New York.

The knowledge of what took place among the Jews during the four centuries between Nehemiah and John the Baptist is, of course, much worth while. The author gives us some of this inter-biblical history. Many students will want a more elaborate guide-book, but this one will be found both helpful and stimulating.

THE LIFE OF SIR GEORGE WILLIAMS. By J. E. Hodder Williams. Pages 357. Price $1.25, net. A. C. Armstrong and Son.

It was the pleasure of the reviewer to have known personally both the subject of the biography and his biographer. Sir George Williams is known the world round as the founder of the Young Men's Christian Association. It is hardly worth while to dispute the historicity of this claim for him though, as a matter of fact, something can be said against it. But there is no question that Mr. Williams, if he was not actually the first in the field with the idea, was one who carried it to successful fruition. His life is very well worth reading. He was a good man, simple in his devotion, which was as much manifested when he was the merchant prince, knighted by the Queen of England, as when he was a young man from the country, who because he was a healthy young fellow and persistent, was given a trial to work behind the counter in the business house of which he afterwards became the head. The book is thoroughly inspirational and its perusal will add much both in the way of incentive and knowledge of religious life, especially of London.

CHRIST'S SERVICE OF LOVE. By Hugh Black, M. A. Pages, 324. Price $1.25, net. Fleming H. Revell Company.

Were it for the introduction alone, we would welcome this book. Mr. Black is a Presbyterian and a professor. He has been one of the most popular young preachers in Scotland. He has a hearing, and it is refreshing to us to find him emphasizing the need of a deeper comprehension of the meaning of the Lord's Supper, and a more careful observance of it than obtains in perhaps the majority of the churches of the Presbyterian body. The book avoids, however, controversial questions. It is of the nature of meditations, but in the introduction the author argues for the full restoration of the Supper to the central place in the worship.

THE HEART OF THE WEST. By O. Henry. Pages 334. Price $1.50. The McClure Company, New York.

O. Henry we can find, though the heart of the West is not easily located. He is a master of his art and his picture is straight from the life, although we doubt whether there was a real basis for any story in this collection. There are nineteen of the red blood kind of stories within the covers of this book. They are as entertaining as they are much out of the ordinary. The writer has great gifts, and the reader who shares any of the spirit of the West will get from him great pleasure.

FRIENDS AND COUSINS. By Abbey Farwell Brown. Pages 122. Price $1.00. Houghton, Mifflin and Company, Boston.

This sequel to "Brothers and Sisters" tells of the doings of Kenneth and Rose during one summer. It will interest the young people.

THE IDYLLS OF THE AGES. By John F. Genung. Pages, 88. Price 75 cents. net. T. Y. Crowell and Company, New York.

The primary aim of this valuation of Tennyson's "Idylls of the Kings" is, as Professor Genung says, neither eulogy nor criticism, but what Walter Pater has taught us to call appreciation. That is, it is a disinterested endeavor to answer the question as to the value of a great poem which has been seasoned and mellowed by time. Professor Genung takes advantage of the fact that in 1902 the "Idylls" reached their majority and that after twenty-one years, in which period, from 1858 to 1885, they appeared haphazardly, they may now be estimated a single poem. He makes use of Browning as a standard by which to measure Tennyson, though dealing chiefly with the philosophy of the poets. The book is attractive and the study illuminating.

THE MOUNTAIN PEOPLE OF KENTUCKY. By William H. Haney. Pages, 190. Price $1.50, postpaid. Robert Clark Company, Cincinnati, O., or Christian Publishing Company.

Here is a simple, unvarnished presentation of the present conditions of a most interesting people and their attitude toward improvement. Mr. Haney is a Kentucky mountain man and this is the first account of this people, we believe, by one of themselves. Lying in the heart of the great Cumberland mountain region we find a people of primitive customs and peculiar characteristics. It is a land of saddle bags and has been a land of moonshine whisky. Our author is himself the son of a moonshiner, and was brought up near Jackson, Ky., the center of the feud district. This book will help us to a real understanding of the conditions that account for the retarded development of the mountaineers and those that make their future most hopeful.

This will appear as soon as we can find space for it.

President and Governor on Thanksgiving

"Much has been given us from on high and much will rightly be expected of us in return. Into our care the ten talents have been entrusted, and we are to be pardoned neither if we squander and waste them, nor yet if we hide them in a napkin; for they must be fruitful in our hands. Ever throughout the ages, at all times and among all peoples, prosperity has been fraught with danger, and it behooves us to beseech the Giver of all things that we may not fall into love of ease and luxury; that we may not lose our sense of moral responsiblity; that we may not forget our duty to God and to our neighbor.

"A great democracy like ours, a democracy based upon the principles of orderly liberty, can be perpetuated only if in the heart of the ordinary citizen there dwells a keen sense of righteousness and justice. We should earnestly pray that this spirit of righteousness and justice may grow ever greater in the hearts of all of us, and that our souls may be inclined evermore both toward the virtues that tell for gentleness and tenderness, for loving kindness and forbearance one with another, and toward those no less necessary virtues that make for manliness and rugged hardihood, for without these qualities neither nation nor individual can rise to the level of greatness.—President Roosevelt.

"Each of us, whether in public office or private station, has duties and responsibilities. It is just as essential for the private citizen to discharge the responsibilities resting upon him as it is for the faithful carrying out of political obligations in the public service. That character of the average individual on which free government rests is strong in proportion as it draws its inspiration from divine sources, which gives strength to meet courageously the duties of life and fulfill each obligation with fidelity.

"Not only have our people prospered in things material, but moral prosperity is everywhere apparent. The age of conscience is before us, not buried in the past, and it will come about when there is more of the golden rule and less of the rule of gold in our daily lives; when the doctrine of brotherhood and equal rights becomes the standard for governmental action and private conduct.

"In the dawn of this better day let us take care in charging wrongdoing lest, by charging where it does not exist, injustice be done, but once sure of the evil, let us be certain in its extermination.

"Let us encourage industry and attack not wealth, but the abuses of wealth. Let us fight not men, but the evil men do. Let us love not money, but manhood. Let us preserve inviolate the principle of popular self-government and recognize the largest liberty of the individual citizen, consistent with law and order; unite in enforcing the laws and counteracting any attempt to defy them.

"Let us realize that liberty to make laws does not mean license to break laws; that the liberty guaranteed us is liberty under the law, not liberty against the law. Let us not array class against class, but preserve the rights of all by causing each to respect the rights of the other. Let us appeal not to cunning, but to conscience, and remember that by making the public conscience clean the public life is made clean."—Governor Folk.

THANKSGIVING

By Mena Kemp Ogan

I thank Thee, Lord, for the glad year
Thy most abundant mercy willed—
But more I thank Thee for the hopes
That never were fulfilled.

In all that Thou hast given to me
Of earthly happiness or gain
I can discern, still gratefully,
The chastening of pain.

And I have prayed when others prayed
For gifts commensurate with theirs—
I thank Thee now with throbbing heart
For my unanswered prayers.

But most of all I thank Thee, Lord,
That the bright crown I hope to wear
Can only be my own through this,
This weighty cross I bear.

And so, as autumn's sunset light
Breaks through the murkiest clouds at last,
My best, my gladdest year dispels
The shadows of the past.

—W. J. Dodge reports a heroic band of Disciples at Claremore. For over a year they have kept up a good Bible school and not failed each Lord's day to observe the communion, though they have, for a year, had no regular preacher. They have one of the largest concrete buildings in that part of the country. There should be a good preacher located, and those interested may write R. A. Atkisson.

—Rufus A. Finnell is holding a meeting for the church at Sandoval, Ill., with Rome G. Jones. The latter is one of Brother Scoville's Anderson converts who took the work at Sandoval after some preparation at Harriman. He deserves much credit, having given up the life of a miner, upon his conversion, to prepare himself for the ministry. Brother Finnell has just had his salary raised by his church at El Paso.

—The West Street Christian Church of Tipton, Ind., was dedicated on November 17. A debt of $1,500 encumbered the property. F. M. Rains was on hand, and put the congregation in right relations with the opportunity, privilege and responsibility. The response was $16,476. In the afternoon there was a communion service at which the Baptist minister cordially participated. L. H. Stine is the pastor of the church.

—At Lynchburg, Va., there is a general revival in the First Church. A two-months campaign, for an enrollment of not less than 500 in the Bible school, is on and at the last service reported, 285 were present. Prof. W. D. Willoughby has organized a teacher training class. F. F. Bullard reports the October audiences good, and says that after the sweet Christian fellowship of the Norfolk convention he has returned to his work with new zeal.

—Several weeks ago we received a letter from J. P. Myers, pastor of the Christian church at Portsmouth, O., bringing us the sad intelligence not only of the death of his eldest son, John Horace, a bright little lad six years of age, but also of his mother. And so a beautiful bud of promise and an aged saint have been transplanted from the earthly garden to bloom in the Paradise of God. Our sincere sympathy is extended to Brother and Sister Myers.

—C. R. Neel reports a bright outlook for the congregation at Helena, Mont. He is glad to go back into the pastorate again, after two years of state evangelistic work in Minnesota. The Assistant Editor would very much enjoy accepting Brother Neel's warm invitation to take a trip with him through Yellowstone Park. Many a Sunday have we spent with Brother Neel in the big city of Chicago, and we know him to be pure gold.

—A ministerial association has been formed for Syracuse, N. Y., and vicinity, the purpose being to cultivate a closer fellowship and to stimulate study and discussion of subjects that are of vital interest to Information Wanted.

The Central Christian Church, Shreveport, La., has appointed a commission to investigate and report on the matter of building. The first problem to be solved is to find a plan providing ample room for church and Sunday-school purposes, and which can be erected on a lot of 50 by 120 feet. The church auditorium and Sunday-school assembly room, when thrown together, should have a seating capacity of 1,000. The Sunday-school portion of the building should have as many as ten class rooms. The building should also embrace a library, study, parlor, dining-room, kitchen and robing rooms; the entire building not to cost over $20,000.

Brethren who have solved this problem will confer a great favor by furnishing information to the committee.

Eighty Years Old and Wins Medal for Sunday-school Attendance.

The First Christian Church at Leavenworth, Kan., celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of the organization of the local congregation in an enthusiastic jubilee service last Sunday in October. T. P. Haley, of Kansas City, preached for us in a preparatory rally way the week preceding and the anniversary sermon on Lord's day morning. His ministrations were exceedingly helpful. During the week three made the good confession and two were added by letter. One hundred and ten dollars, in addition to the $100 already pledged, was quickly raised for the expenses of the January meeting. The church is now in fine shape for a revival and we are very hopeful. Wilhite and Adams are under contract to begin here first Lord's day in January. Twenty-two gold medals were awarded as many scholars for attending Sunday-school every session, except when ill, for one year. C. H. Deweese, over 80 years of age, won a medal. This is Prof. B. C. Deweese's father. We have an enthusiastic teacher-training class of twenty-five members. W. J. Dodge, minister.

A Comparison of Ten Years.

A comparison of the financial record of the Foreign Society for 1907 with that of 1897, or ten years ago, is an interesting study.

1. Ten years ago the society passed the $100,000 mark for the first time; this year it passed the $300,000 mark for the first time. Then the receipts reached $106,222; this year $305,534, a gain of nearly $200,000, or an average gain of about $20,000 per year, or over 187 per cent.

2. In 1897 the churches as churches gave $39,586; this year $123,468, a gain of $83,900 or 212 per cent. That year 2,586 churches gave to the work, this year 3,419, a gain of 933, or 36 per cent. That year the churches averaged $15.30 each, this year $36.13.

3. In 1897 the Sunday-schools gave $30,027; in 1907 $77,158, a gain of 156 per cent. That year 2,810 schools observed children's day, this year 3,785, a gain of 975 or 34 per cent. The gain in the number of contributing schools is only 42 more than the gain in the number of contributing churches. That year the school averaged $10.68, this year $20.38, or about double.

4. In 1887 the individual offerings amounted to $14,293; in 1907 $32,145, a gain of $17,852 or 124 per cent. That year the personal offerings averaged $15.06; this year $33.73.

5. In 1897 the Endeavor societies gave $3,358; in 1907 $12,789, a gain of $9,431 or 280 per cent. That year 528 contributed; this year 997, a gain of 469 or 88 per cent. That year the societies averaged $6.36; this year $12.84.

6. In 1897 the Foreign Society started the annuity plan, the first organization among our people to adopt this plan. The receipts to the annuity fund amounted to $6,800; this year the annuity receipts reached $36,250. The total amount received to this fund in ten years is $284,198.

7. Ten years ago the society had 87 missionaries and 76 native helpers, a total force of 564. This is an increase of 68 missionaries or 78 per cent.; 334 native helpers or 439 per cent, and an increase of 401 in the total force or 246 per cent.

The above figures are worthy of the careful and prayerful and sympathetic study of every friend of foreign missions. Has not God blessed the work beyond our poor faith? Under God we can do even better in the next ten years, if we will. To this end let us make the present year one of great growth. We ask the co-operation of the preachers, the church officers, the Sunday-school superintendents and the missionaries on the fields and all who love our Lord and glory in the extension of his kingdom.

Elder Alfred Flower.

Brief mention was made in a recent issue of the decease, on October 6, of our aged and beloved Brother Alfred Flower, in his 85th year. On account of his close association with the Editor of this paper, during the latter's residence in Boston, we feel that we must lay at least a brief tribute upon the grave of this lovable and beloved minister of Christ. He was one of the saints of God. In him Christianity had ripened some of its most blessed fruits. Intimately associated with him in church work, we found him to be wise in counsel, humble, unselfish, pure in heart and in life, seeking to do good wherever opportunity offered, and carrying with him everywhere into the homes of want and of sickness, or of the happy and prosperous, the sweet fragrance of his Christian life. He was patient under suffering and cheerful under burdens of personal sorrow that would have crushed one of less faith. His beloved wife, like himself, saintly in character, preceded him many years ago to the land beyond; also his son, George E. Flower, so widely known and loved as a minister of the gospel. Five of his children survive him, we believe, the best known of whom are B. O. Flower, editor of "The Arena," and Mrs. Elizabeth Flower Willis. Our sympathies are extended to the bereaved family. But for him, as for Paul, it is "far better to depart and to be with Christ." Sweeter than incense is the fragrance of such a saintly life.

The Alabama Convention.

The twenty-third annual convention of the Disciples of Christ in Alabama was with the church at Jasper, Ala., November 11-14. L. O. Herrold is the efficient minister there. Including the brethren of Jasper and vicinity there were about 150 delegates in attendance, several of whom attended one of our annual meetings for the first time.

Among those prominent in our state work who were present may be mentioned A. R. Moore, of Birmingham, president of the state executive committee; Dr. E. G. Anderson, of Anniston; E. W. Elliott, of Selina; D. P. Taylor, of Bessemer; A. A. Oden, of Hartselle, J. M. Crawford, of Jasper; H. G. Braxton, of Birmingham, and J. W. Henry, of Mobile—all members of the state executive committee. Besides these, Belt White, of Anniston; J. A. Branch, of Camp Hill; Mrs. A. P. McClellan, of Athens; P. H. Duncan, of Ensley; Mrs. T. L. Woodruff, of Birmingham; A. R. Miller, of West Point, Ga.; J. H. Hill, of Hartselle; C. A. Donaldson, of Woodlawn; R. V. Hope, of Birmingham; Milligan Earnest, of Roanoke; J. M. Joiner, of Wedowee; Dr. Ira C. Ballard, of Gadsden; Brother Dickinson, of Talladega, were present and took active parts in the work of the convention. Many others had words of faith, of cheer and encouragement.

S. P. Spiegel, our efficient state evangelist, led the song service and his report was loudly applauded. He was re-elected state evangelist without opposition.

Claude E. Hill, the only one in the state, and in the country for that matter, made the money raising speech, and $1,700 in round figures was raised for our state work another year, which, with the home board's appropriations in this field, will run our state funds for another year into the neighborhood of $3,500, nearly double the amount of any previous year.

Much work was mapped out for the coming year, the most important of which is the establishment of a congregation of Disciples of Christ in Montgomery, the state capital, who are in sympathy with vigorous co-operative mission work.

Definite steps were taken toward founding a Christian college in Alabama, and the board of trustees were elected with power to proceed with the work on a basis of $50,000 capital stock, and such bonus as may be secured from the most desirable location. This directorate is composed of some of the best business men in Alabama, and they will doubtless have things in shape and ready for business in a very short time. The presence and participation of J. A. Lord, of the "Christian Standard," was appreciated and thoroughly enjoyed by all. He made several practical talks on different phases of our work, but his address on Christian Union was his great deliverance.

Secretaries J. H. Mohorter, W. J. Wright, G. W. Muckley and Mrs. M. E. Harlan, were present and delivered great addresses upon their respective lines of work.

Our congregation is rather small in Jasper, but they are zealous people, and wide awake. They have a beautiful new church building, which will be dedicated next Lord's day by Brothers Moore and Herrold. They think they have the most consecrated Gideon in the state to lead them, in the person of Brother Herrold, and since the convention many of the Disciples throughout the state are ready to say, "Amen." The various ministers and church members of the hospitable little city threw open their hearts and homes to our visitors.

The spiritual devotion of the convention throughout was the finest I have ever witnessed and I have witnessed many in which it was of a very high order.

Desirability of Union Between Baptists and Disciples.

Saw the Heavens fill with commerce, argosies of magic sails,
Pilots of the purple twilight, drooping down with costly bales;
Heard the Heavens fill with shouting and there rained a ghastly dew
From the nations' airy navies, grappling in the central blue;
Far along the world-wide whisper of the south wind rushing warm,
Were the standards of the peoples plunging through the thunder storm,
Till the war drum throbbed no longer and the battle flags were furled,
In the parliament of man, the federation of the world."

This is Christian faith. The picture is not overdrawn. Every day its realization becomes more certain. Surely we, who look off with this vaster vision, should see the nearer possible glories that cluster at our feet.

Christian Union

Books written by J. H. Garrison have always been our best sellers because of their chaste diction, entertaining style, and solid learning. None of these books has received such tributes of admiration from discriminating students as Christian Union, only $1.00. It tells of tireless efforts to reunite the Church of Christ from the first apostacy.

NEWS FROM MANY FIELDS

Millersburg (O.) Meeting.

The purpose of the meeting was to create sentiment to secure for our plea a hearing in the center of this county, to open new doors of opportunity in a community already pretty well exploited. Ten months ago the Bible school was gleaned rather effectively, thirty-two additions being secured from that source largely in a short meeting with home forces. Since that time the work of the church has been along the lines of organization. The Bible school has been graded throughout, mission study and teacher-training have been put on a thorough-going basis and the church debt practically lifted. We had a perfect working machine confronted with a dearth of material upon which to operate. It was up to us to get our plea before new people, to carry the war into the enemy's country, to develop new material for exploitation, and it was for that task that we called Nichols and Conrad to come into a community of 1,200 people supporting seven active churches. Incidentally forty-two of the finest kind of additions were made to our church. These results were on conviction, not sentiment, and our church is to-day the most compact and close-knit company of believers to be found anywhere. The pastor faces abundance of work, full of possibilities where three weeks ago there was scarce an opening.

H. Eldon Mansfield, pastor.

Bakersfield Notes.

After making arrangements to re-enter the evangelistic field, the church would not listen to my leaving, so I am to remain for an indefinite time at Bakersfield. I am now in a meeting with the Dinuba church, and John C. Hay, so well and favorably known, is supplying the pulpit for me while I am away. It is the purpose to have some of our strong evangelists assist in a meeting in Bakersfield as soon as they can be secured. We are planning to hold the meeting in one of the opera houses as the church is too small.——J. J. Limerick, who came to Dinuba last May, is doing a good work. Before the meeting there had been 34 additions, and 15 the first week of the meeting. Sister Pew, the wife of our lamented brother, W. W. Pew, came over from Fowler yesterday and will assist in the meeting with her excellent singing.——It is the understanding that Victor Dorris will assist I. H. Teel in a meeting at Visalia, and E. W. Darst will begin a meeting at Hanford, where, until recently, Brother Vallandingham ministered to the church.——C. S. Needham, who has been the faithful minister at Sanger for five years, has tendered his resignation. He will remain with the church to assist in a meeting to be held by Brother Shropshire.——Brother Perkins has begun his work at Fresno under very favorable conditions. The daily papers speak in high praise of both preacher and congregation. We welcome Brother Perkins to his new field of labor, and to this great state.——Writing the last sentence reminds me that there is an ideal opportunity to purchase some of the best land in California at the very low price of $45 per acre, including an abundant supply of water for irrigation.——G. T. Meeker, who ministered so acceptably to the Hollister church for four years, recently resigned to take up anti-saloon leage work, but was taken very ill with pneumonia at the home of Brother Colvin in Santa Rosa. At last report he was improving. It is hoped he will soon be restored to health again. Cal. Ogburn.

Good Meeting at Joplin, Mo.

The Boen-Parnell meeting at the South Joplin Christian Church closed Tuesday night, November 20, with a total of 153 added to the church. The meeting lacked one day of continuing four weeks. Brethren Boen and Parnell are earnest Christian men. Brother Boen preaches God's message with earnest fidelity. In exhortation he is a Barnabus, a son of consolation. Brother Parnell is an exceptionally efficient chorus leader. Both are splendid personal workers. They leave the church stronger than when they came and many well wishes follow them to their Texas home. Geo. L. Peters.

Nebraska.

H. L. Denton is living near Morrill and will give some time to the ministry as occasion offers. We hope that he may be kept busy.——The church at Gering is still in its meeting. D. A. Youtsey is growing in the love of the brethren there.——The work at Scotts Bluff has closed down. The lack of a preacher and perhaps leadership has discouraged them. Another family has moved there and we hope that arrangements may be made to start the Bible school again.——At Alliance the brethren have rented an unused house for six months and hope to be able to buy it. A small congregation gathered on Tuesday evening to hear the secretary. An offering for the state work was made. The Bible school was reorganized with Brother Leavitt as superintendent. We hope that this work may be kept moving.——At Broken Bow the secretary made a short stop to get acquainted with the preacher, L. N. Early, and enjoy a brief visit with Brother and Sister Currie, who now live there. The new house just dedicated is a credit to the brotherhood and to the city. It hast cost, including the lot, over $6,000 and all has been provided for. Brother Early proved himself a master builder and his conduct of the business affairs commends itself to the business world. He ought to be kept busy building houses.——Evon Forell's meeting at Miller is counted a great success. J. W. Walker is the pastor there. P. S. Wickham will hold a meeting in Brother Walker's other point. Brother Forell is now at North Platte in a promising meeting. L. C. Swan is the pastor.——The Peru church raised all its apportionment. This is a mission field, too.——The Geneva church is in a revival meeting with J. F. Findley, of Fort Collins, Colo., as preacher, and J. G. Olmstead, of Bethany, as singer.——V. E. Shirley was called to Oklahoma on account of the death of a brother-in-law.——E. L. Kechley was called to Ulysses to preach the funeral of A. M. Day, one of the older members of the church at that place.——Samuel Gregg is now at work in the Nemaha meeting, having begun on November 7. O. A. Adams closer at Gibbon on November 10 with nine added. He would have begun at once at Mason City but for the death of his mother.——D. G. Wagner has gone to Ansley and may locate there. We are glad to have Brother Wagner with us again and we have no doubt but that he is glad to get back. He closed his work at Mount Morris, Ill., with four baptisms.——The great Scoville meeting at Lincoln has closed with 1,435 people who declared for the service of God. This meeting will have a larger notice than is possible in the limits of this letter. But this much should be said now: It has been a source of great blessing to the whole state of Nebraska. Hundreds heard him from over the state and already the news comes of its influence on the work in some places. It is still the subject of much conversation.——F. T. Ray, of Downs, Kan., has been tendered a call to the South Omaha work. Brother Ray comes well recommended as a worker and we hope that this may be the solution of the great problem in this field. It will be a mission of the state board and the expectation is that within the year we will have the new church completed, at least ready for use.——Brother Brokaw, a studen at Cotner, whose parents live near Seward, has volunteered to undertake the building up of a Bible school in that place. No work has been done there for some time, and the board has extended a helping hand with the intention of pushing the work forward.——The evangelistic committee was called to meet, but owing to Brother Shirley's being called to Oklahoma the meeting was not held. Some matters that were up for decision are therefore still unsettled.——Remember state missions this month.

W. A. Baldwin.

Pittsburg, Pa.

We have been conducting revivals held interchangeably by the pastor of one church helping the pastor of another church. The additions reported to our ministerial meeting was 70.——W. C. Crerie has taken charge of the work of the Fourth Church and is getting things well in hand.——F. M. Gordon, pastor of the Knoxville Church, seems to be having a constant revival; though he has not begun his special meeting he reports from one to three additions every week. That is the best kind of a revival.——Lawson Campbell, pastor of the Squirrel Hill Church, is helping C. L. Thurgood in revival services at the Central Church. E. A. Cole is helping Brother Knepper at Wilkensburg Church and their efforts are being crowned with marked success. They make an excellent team.— The united and social auxiliary meeting for November was held with the Beechview Church, of which Frank Longdon is pastor. It is to these meetings that much credit is due for the success attained in this district. The Beechview brethren have the plans drawn up for a beautiful new building on a lot on Broad street, which will give them advantages over their old location in many ways.——The old First Church, Allegheny, has taken on new life in the Bible school work and at their annual rally had 800 in attendance and $156 in offering.——At McKeesport the new church is climbing up. Their mission at the East End will soon be self-supporting. And the foreign work there is expecting to try social settlement work soon. Brother Cramblet has just reasons to be proud of his Bible school class at whose banquet there were 120 in attendance.——Brother Emanuel, pastor of the Homestead Church, reports 16 confessions since September. This is an excellent showing for his field. He is the right man in the right place.——The Bellevue Church regrets very much giving up A. W. Place, who goes to take charge of the college in Japan. We realize this will be a loss to Western Pennsylvania, but are satisfied the Foreign Society's board could have selected no one better for this work.——Erret Gates, of Chicago, Ill., delighted our Ministerial Association with his "What is the next step in the Union of Disciples and Baptists?" He was on his way to the Baptist convention at Baltimore. His message met the approval of the association and he received a unanimous vote to stimulate him in his commission.

Illinois County Reorganizes.

The churches of Hancock county, Illinois, met in Denver for the purpose of reorganizing the county work. The last attempt had ended in 1896. Although good work had been done, for some cause the movement had died. Through the efforts of the Denver congregation and their minister, B. H. Cleaver, of Christian University, this attempt was made at reorganization. An enthusiastic convention was the result, 39 delegate from the various churches being present. About $125 was raised for county work for the coming year. L. G. Huff, of La Harpe, was elected president and H. G. Waggoner, of Hamilton, was elected secretary of the next convention, which will be held in Carthage. There are 21 churches, which have 2,200 active members, in the county.

Appetizing Cereals.

The vast difference in cereal preparations is quickly apparent when one becomes acquainted with the superior quality of the "Crisscross" cereals—those noted health products of Farwell & Rhines, Watertown, N. Y.—called "Crisscross" from the lines across labels and trademarks.

Being made in the most careful and scientific manner from selected grains, these cereals, among them Cresco Grits and Cresco Flour, have won the hearty endorsement of physicians who recommend them in their practice.

Not only invalids and those whose digestion is impaired, but healthy, active people as well, value them for their strength-giving powers and genuine goodness. A booklet of cereal information and a sample will be sent to you on request, by the makers.

Children's Day Report.

Children's day for home missions was more generally observed this year than in any previous year. The churches at Louisville, Ky., held a union rally and H. A. Denton, centennial secretary, was the principal speaker. The campaign for children's day in Kentucky was under the generalship of Robert M. Hopkins, state Sunday-school evangelist, and through his leadership Kentucky has attained to premiership in this work.

Mr. George H. Springer, of 258 Washington street, Boston, Mass., is constantly in receipt of letters from leading clergymen and laymen commending very highly his individual communion services. Mr. Stephen Moore, a manufacturer, and one of the best-known and most highly respected laymen in New England, recently wrote Mr. Springer as follows: "The Immanuel Baptist Church of Newton has used your Individual Communion Service for about six years. I am sure there is no loss, but rather a gain in the beauty and spiritual significance of the ordinance when the mind is not distracted or repelled by the thought of impure conditions in the celebration. The mechanical arrangement is a marvel of convenience and cleanliness, and economy of weight seems to have been wonderfully attained by skillful designing and the use of the one metal that is so perfectly adapted for this use. No church should hesitate a moment in adopting it, for both spiritual and sanitary reasons. You are conferring a great blessing upon our churches by introducing the service, and none who know its merits will be long without it."

Ruth's Wise Choice.—Ruth 1:14-22.

Memory verses, 16, 17.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Thy people shall be my people and thy God my God.—Ruth 1:16.

The habit of reading entire books of the Bible through at a sitting is one that ought to be practised more than it is, and Ruth is one of the best books to begin with. It is much shorter than the average magazine story, and it is a simple and continuous narrative in which one can not pause without marring the perfection of its almost lyrical beauty. The lesson should be the book of Ruth.

Much has been said of recent years about the literary value of the Bible. Professor Phelps, of Yale, says he would favor the plan of substituting a thorough study of the Bible for all other college-preparatory work in English. The Bible has other values which are greater than its literary value, but the book of Ruth is one of the parts in which the literary value may well have much emphasis.

Note the simplicity of the style. The quietness of the pastoral scene in which the story has its setting is mirrored in the tranquility of the style. It is as peaceful as a Virgilian Eclogue, or one of Wordsworth's simplest lyrics.

Observe how each character in the story gets enough, and only enough, detailed description to put it and keep it in its proper place in the narrative. The three husbands form the shadowy background of calamity which is needed to give the element of pathos to the story of the three women. We know nothing of the men except that their very names signified various kinds and degrees of woe, and that they died in Moab.

They are not characters in the story but only part of the background against which the characters of the story stand. Orpah is shown a little more clearly. One could write a little character-sketch of Orpah on the basis of verses 10 and 14. Orpah was affectionate, dutiful, but too cool by temperament to run into any follies of self-sacrifice. She protested and wept and kissed, but stayed in Moab. But after all it is only a vague sketch that we have of Orpah. There is a fairly complete picture of Naomi, an old woman who through much misfortune has achieved a ripeness of wisdom and a richness of character that come in no other way. Boaz is an important but rather vague character. Like the hero of many another story, his importance in the story is due rather to his position than to his personality. So we have a clear drawing of his state as a land-owner and as Ruth's next of kin (goel, i. e., average or redeemer), and several interesting incidents are introduced to show these more clearly,—e. g., the gleaning in the fields, the feast at the threshing-floor, the scene at the city gate. He is like the groom at a wedding,—indispensable but inconspicuous. By keeping all of these other characters in various degrees of obscurity, the light is focussed on Ruth. Here is real art, literary chiaroscuro as forceful and effective as the light and shade of a Rembrandt. The figure of Ruth stands out from the canvas as vitally and vigorously as "The night watch" rushes out from the environing shadows.

The religious motive of the book was to encourage a breadth of sympathy which should include the nations surrounding Israel. It is the outgrowth of a spirit opposed to that narrow particularism which made the Jew despise all non-Jews. Ruth was a Moabitess. This story was written to show that Israel did not have a monopoly of all virtue; that beautiful characters were

The book of Ruth is a rare gem. Why not arrange to have the whole book read at the Christian Endeavor meeting? The time for such a reading would be long and the exercise would be more than worth while. The first chapter may be named the Clearing Chapter. The second, Gleaning. The third, Claiming. The fourth, Resting.

The book of Ruth is a charming and suggestive glimpse of the story of God's people during the troubled era of the Judges. The story of Ruth belongs to the stories of the book of Judges. In the period of the Judges the people are left without the leadership of Joshua to work out a unique problem. Are they able to walk by faith after the high ideals of the book of Deuteronomy? The book of Judges portrays their successes and failures in this effort. The book is a record of backsliding and repentance, and of Jehovah's patience and grace, like a father teaching a little child to walk. When we consider how difficult it is for us to live by faith, how easy to wander from the way of faith, the surprise is not the failure of the people but the measure of their success.

The story of Ruth is the annals of a little community of Israel resting under the shadow of Jehovah's protecting wings, a story of simple quiet faith.

The book teaches a lesson of humble submission to Jehovah in grief. There is much sorrow in the first chapter. There is a famine in the first verse, widowhood in the third and fifth verses, and by intimation in the eighth verse also. Orpah and Ruth are urged to return unto their mother's house. We may infer that to each of their mothers as to Naomi and to them widowhood had come. A famine and five widows in the first chapter.

The book teaches a lesson of human kindness. The devotion of Ruth to her husband and to her mother-in-law Naomi was so marked as to become a matter of common conversation when the two returned to Bethlehem. Because of the kindness which Ruth had shown to the dead and to her husband's mother Boaz was attracted to her and ordered his young men to show her unusual kindness.

The book teaches a lesson of unselfish love. Orpah returned home to her people. But Ruth cleaves to Naomi because of her love. No more beautiful passage is found in all literature than Ruth's reply to Naomi's suggestion that she return to her people as had Orpah.

The book teaches a lesson of the power of influence. Ruth was led to her choice by the example of her mother. The faithfulness of Naomi and of Ruth's husband to Jehovah their God, though they were in a strange country, influenced Ruth to wish to serve the same God. "Thy God shall be my God." What a lesson on faithfulness to one's convictions when away from home!

There is also in the book a lesson in the providence of God. God's good care provided for Naomi. Her husband was dead, her son was dead, but God gave her Ruth and friends, and a new home, and a champion of her rights in Boaz.

There is also a lesson of the recompense of faith. Ruth becomes one of the chosen line from whom our Lord was born. Thus her name is in the line of his ancestors.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

By Charles Blanchard.

Troubles a Means of Revelation.

Topic December 4.—2 Kings 6:8-23; Psalm 27:1-5.

This story of the young man and the prophet, Elisha, in the midst of the host of the Syrian horsemen, has a spiritual meaning for us, in the midst of our troubled lives. How often we come to our Dothan and find ourselves in the midst of doubts and perplexities and are ready to cry: "Alas, my Master, how shall we do?" Dear Lord, grant unto us the assurance that "they that be with us are more than they that be with them." Open thou our eyes, also, that we may see, as that young man saw: "And behold the mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha."

So often revelations of the Lord's presence and power come to us when we are sore troubled, discouraged and distressed, as the Lord stood by Paul in the midst of his enemies, in shipwreck, in prison. Thus the angel of the Lord stood by Peter and bade him rise up quickly, cast his cloak about him and follow him until they came to the street, and there the angel left him alone. (Acts 12:6-10). And, as with Peter, ofttimes we "wist not that it is true," so wonderful does the revelation of God's grace and mercy seem.

But we must not expect the Lord to do for us what we can do for ourselves. The angel of the Lord left Peter to find his own way to his "own company," after leading him on to the familiar street, where Peter came to himself. Thus the Lord leaves us to come to ourselves. He left the prodigal son to come to himself. God does not force his blessings upon us, even when we are deeply perplexed. He lets us struggle away in our own way, if we choose, till in our perplexity we turn unto him and find a welcome, with plenty and to spare in our Father's house. It is our privilege to come to him at all times and in all places. Revelations of his grace and goodness await us and find us, as springs of water in the desert greet the weary traveler across the waste of sands. The pathetic thing about it is that we often faint and famish when we might have springs of living water in our own heart, springing up into everlasting life—fullness of life forevermore.

It is a good thing to have the sweet old promises in our hearts, singing in the silences:

Trust in the Lord and do good;
So, shalt thou dwell in the land
And verily thou shalt be fed.
Delight thyself also in the Lord,
And he shall give thee the desire of thine heart.
Commit thy ways unto the Lord;
Trust also in him, and he shall bring it to pass.
And he shall bring forth, thy righteousness as the light,
And thy judgment as the noonday.
Rest in the Lord and wait patiently for him.

There is something suggestive and stilling in the promise: "In the time of trouble he shall hide me in his pavilion; in the secret of his tabernacle shall he hide me; he shall set me upon a rock." It is said there was a hiding place in the tabernacle or sanctuary for those who were accused, and for those who fled to the cities of refuge for safety. So God hides his own in his secret places.

The Home Department

A Thanksgiving.

BY LUCY LARCOM.

For the splendor of the sunsets,
Vast mirrored on the sea;
For the gold-fringed clouds, that curtain
Heaven's inner mystery:
For the molten bars of twilight
Where my thought leans, glad, yet awed;
For the glory of the sunsets,
I thank thee, O my God!

For the earth and all its beauty,
The sky and all its light;
For the dim and soothing shadows,
That rest the dazzled sight;
For unfading fields and prairies,
Where sense in vain has trod;
For the world's exhaustless beauty,
I thank thee, O my God!

For the hidden scroll, o'erwritten
With one dear name adored;
For the heavenly in the human,
The spirit in the word:
For the tokens of thy presence
Within, above, abroad;
For thine own gift of being,
I thank thee, O my God!

Thanksgiving at the Edsons

BY JAMES BARNES

Early in the summer Franklin Edson, the city missionary, had accepted a call to leave New York and take charge of a little church in Eastern Virginia.

His long work in the city had begun to tell on him, but what he hated most was to see his dear wife's face becoming thinner. She never could get out of the habit of working for other people, and taking their sorrows home with her at night.

The little Edsons were as bright as ever, but they had begun to have that kept-in look that most town children have; and it was so far from where they lived to the park and sunshine, they had been hemmed in by busy, narrow streets and tall crowded tenements, with stuffy, little back yards filled with rubbish and clotheslines.

So Mr. Edson had left the great work that will never end as long as people huddle together in great cities, and had gone down to take charge of the little white church at Lonely Pines.

Here they lived in a little house that stood a few hundred yards from the white church itself. From the rickety front gate they could see four and one-half other houses; for one had been burned, all but one wing, and the ruined walls had never been torn down. That is about all there was to see, except a long tobacco-shed at the end of a great wide field, and a negro cabin with a few tall sunflowers ruling it over a patch of garden. There was a good deal of sameness at Lonely Pines.

The little Edsons had never ceased to talk of the times they had had "at grandpa's," up in New England, and the people up there had never ceased to talk of the wondrous change that had come over old "Flint" Edson since Frank, his only son, had first brought the little Edsons to the farm for New Year's week. This change was as astonishing as if a withered apple had turned into a great big rose, and Grandma Edson had actually grown young again—she had found once more the pretty little laugh and the sparkle in her eyes that she had when she was a girl.

It was a year now since Flint Edson's heart had softened towards the world one night, as if an angel had smoothed it with a touch; one year since he had forgiven his only son Frank for becoming a missionary and marrying a city school-teacher, instead of coming back to the farm.

The little Edsons, who wondered why they had never seen "dear grandpa" before, had chirruped their way into the old man's affections, and had touched chords of tenderness and love that had long been hidden under the hard, strong-willed exterior. Late in the spring—just before they had moved South—the children had visited the old place again for a few short happy days. It was haying-time; bumble-bees were climbing in and out of honeysuckle., crows were cawing, and thrushes singing in the woods; the air was full of scents; and in all this world there is no such ride to be had as that on top of a soft, swaying load of hay.

When they had to go back to town, old Flint, who, as I once said, had earned that name because he had been so "hard," stood on the station platform waving a good-by with his hat, two big tears rolling down to his coarse grizzly beard.

They were all well and not at all unhappy at Lonely Pines. The air was fine, the sky was blue, and the wind used to sigh and whisper through the trees as it came up from the sea at night. But there were no mountains, no joyful brook that swept under the shadows of old gray bridges and danced out into the meadows, no long stone walls that climbed up the pasture hills, along the tops of which the sheep used to walk against the sky. There was no view down the alley to where the river spread out, narrowed again, and roared over the dam at the busy singing sawmill. There was nothing to do but the same things over and over again. Nothing to see but skimpy pines, and sand, and old fields, and polite people who were poor, and who drove to church from all directions in their worn-out carriages and their best clothes on Sundays. There were the colored people, of course, who were poorer and quite as polite, who sang and worked slowly in the sun all day long. Thus, it was no wonder that the little Edsons used to talk of the times "at grandpa's."

The fall had come upon Virginia, the wild geese could be heard honking up in the sky, and, joy of joys! the Edsons, one and all, were going to make the long trip up to New England to spend Thanksgiving day.

Tired from the excitement of a long journey in the cars, perhaps it would have been better had they rested on their way and spent the night in New York. But this is what they did not do. Mr. Edson had left the children and their mother to continue the rest of the trip in the sleeping-car that left on the night express, while he stayed in the city to attend to some important business, meaning to follow on the next day, and join them later on at Milford Centre for the Thanksgiving feast at Burr Oak farm.

Little did poor Mrs. Edson think, as she bade good-by to her husband at the Grand Central Station, that she was going to have an experience the memory of which would never leave her.

The little Edsons had never been in a sleeping-car before. They looked with wonder at the white-coated porter as he pulled down the ceiling into big shelves, and turned the shelves into neat little beds with red blankets and very small pillows; they almost forgot they were sleepy as they watched a fat old gentleman climb into an upper berth. Their own section was made up last, and Grace and little Lola and the dolls said their prayers and were soon tucked in the lower half, and their mother was smiling at them reassuringly over the edge of the upper one.

Harry, the eldest, who had spent most of his early evening talking to the brakeman in the back part of the car, slept with his mother.

The train roared angrily under bridges, and shot along through towns and forests out into the open moonlit country; it swung about curves and past sleeping villages, with the wheels always keeping up one tune—now faster, now slower, but always the same old tune. The whistle blew every now and then, and it seemed to say, "Hurrah! hurrah! we're all right!" And at last the little Edsons fell asleep.

Two or three times during the early part of the night, Mrs. Edson had looked down at the little girls as they lay there sharing one of the small pillows between them. At last, lulled by the song of the wheels, she, too, fell fast aslep, and did not wake up again for four long hours. When she did, it was very early morning; little Harry was wide-awake beside her. He had raised an edge of the window-shade and was looking out at the fast fleeting fences and telegraph-poles, and at the great red sun climbing up out of the clouds in the east.

"We'll soon be at grandpa's, mamma," he said.

It was almost time to begin to dress, and Mrs. Edson looked over the edge of the berth. Only one of the little figures and one doll was there. Mrs. Edson's heart almost stopped with horror. Just as she was, she slipped down into the aisle of the car, and just as they were, the other passengers slipped down, too, for her scream had aroused even the sleepy porter dozing on his campstool.

"Lola! Lola!" shouted the poor distracted woman. "Where is Gracie? Where is Gracie?'

The poor baby, awakened so suddenly, began to cry. "Gracie! Gracie!" she wept, repeating her mother's words.

Mrs. Edson felt as if she were dreaming—she must be dreaming some horrible, horrible dream. "Gone! gone!" she said, in a hoarse voice, pointing at the berth. "She isn't there—my little girl—she isn't there!"

A kind old lady, with her hair in curl-papers and a shawl thrown over her shoulders ,put her arm about Mrs. Edson's waist. "She must be in the car," she whispered. "Don't take on so—don't take on so, dearie." She forced her down, and sat beside her on the berth. Men were hurrying on their clothes and stamping into their boots, and the trainmen came rushing up.

Just then the train, which had been slowing gradually, stopped suddenly at a small station, and a man came running down the car. "For Mrs. Edson, Train 34," he said.

A young man opened the telegram with a quick motion of his fingers and read out loud:

"Miss Grace will meet you at Milford Station. Don't worry; she is all right.

"JOHN DOOLEY,
"Brakeman, Train 23."

"That's on the other road," said the conductor. "She's safe."

"She's safe," whispered the old lady. Then Mrs. Edson seemed to awake and understand.

Of course, all this that brought Mr. Dooley into the story requires some explanation, which can best be made by telling what some people saw and what some people did, or, in fact, exactly what happened.

Two night-watchmen standing on a station platform on this eventful night were talking quietly together when train "No. 34" came crashing by. When it had gone, one of them grasped the other by the arm.

"Did you see it?" he said, hoarsely.

The other did not answer for a moment: his eyes were following the fast-receding lights.

"Yes," he said at last, "I saw it plain. I wonder what's its meaning?" His face was full of horror.

What they had seen was this: A little white figure in the moonlight standing on the swaying platform between the last two cars; one of its arms was outstretched as if pointing, and the other was grasping something close to its breast. It was only a glimpse they had, but it was before them now as strongly as if it had been photographed and they could look at it again.

"I never saw one before, Bill," said the second speaker.

"Nor I, either," responded the other: "don't let's say anything about it."

But that evening Bill had said something about having seen a ghost, at which Mrs. Bill had sniffed suspiciously.

Just beyond the station where the two watchmen stood was Langford Junction, and here the train made what is known as a "flying switch"—that is, the last car of the train, which was a day or passenger coach, was detached from the rest while the train was in motion, and creeping along the track in the wake of the express, was switched off to the branch road which ran parallel to the main line for many miles, separated from it by a line of hills and a distance not over ten or twelve miles.

Brakeman John Dooley, who let loose the coupling between the cars and managed the end brake on the front platform, turned to go back into the car after it had safely run some distance on the branch road—in a few minutes more it would be coupled to the other train that was waiting to take it. As Mr. Dooley looked down the aisle he saw there were only one or two occupants, huddled up in the uncomfortable seats, and fast asleep. But what was that? Just to his right, on one of the worn red cushions lay a little figure with one bare little foot thrust out from beneath the soft white night-gown. Close to its breast it hugged a doll that was dressed also for a night's repose. To say that Mr. Dooley was astonished would not express it. How did she get there? Where did she come from? He leaned over and touched the little shape gently on the shoulder.

"Hello, young one!" he said. "What are you doing here?"

Gracie looked up. For a minute she was frightened, and her little mouth quivered as she looked at the strange surroundings.

"I don't know," she said, her face trembling. "I dess I belongs in the other car with mamma and Lola.

"Well, how did you get here, then?" inquired the brakeman, kindly. "And what's your mamma's name? And where are you going?"

"We're going to grandpa's at Milford," was the reply. "We're going to spend Thanksgiving, and my mamma's and papa's name is Edson. I went to bed last night in a funny little place dess like a bureau drawer, and I don't know"—here the little mouth began to quiver—"how I came here or where I is at all. I want mamma." Then the floodgates were broken, and the poor little girl could not keep back the choking sobs.

The brakeman was touched, and sat down beside her in the seat. He put one arm about her shoulders, and his great big voice sounded just as softly as a woman's. "Never mind, little one,'" he said; "we'll get you home all right." And again he asked her name.

"Edson?" he said to himself; "and you're going to Milford? You must be some relation to old Mr. Edson on the hill, aren't you, little one?" he asked at last.

"Yes—grandpa," sobbed the voice. "But I wants mamma."

Then it crossed the brakeman's mind how the poor mother would worry when she awoke and found the little one was gone. He took off his thick coat and threw it about Gracie's trembling shoulders, and darted out at the station, where they were making up the train.

"I can catch her at Colburn," he said to himself. "That's the next station before Milford, and they will get there just about daybreak, I reckon."

With that he ran in, explained the situation in a few words to the operator behind the ticking instruments, and the result was the reassuring telegram that told Mrs. Edson her darling was safe; but where or how it did not say.

Back to the car came John Dooley, and with him came two or three other kind men with mufflers around their throats and brass buttons down their blue coats. Gracie had gotten over being frightened by this time, and she answered all the questions from the crowd about her quite composedly.

"I dess I walked in my sleep here," she said.

The men looked at one another in astonishment; the idea of this frail little thing crossing that platform with the wind blowing half a gale, and opening the heavy door of the last car, as she must have done, they could not understand.

"Ever done it before, little miss?" one inquired.

"Once I waked up down the road almost at Uncle Peter's," she said; "the dogs waked me up; but I's not afraid of dogs."

"Well, I swum!" said one of the men. "I reckon she's not afraid of anything."

"I'll tell you what I can do," said John Dooley, addressing the group. "We get to West Milford before the other train gets to Milford Center, and I can hire a team and drive her over to old Flint's in time to catch them at the station. My wife will tog her up, I reckon. Ye aren't afraid to come with me, miss?" he said, turning to Grace again, and addressing her as if she were a grown young lady. "I'll take you to your grandpa's."

"I want mamma," said the wee voice again.

"You'll see her too," said the brakeman.

Then, for the first time, Gracie seemed to be conscious of her bare little feet that were sticking out into the aisle, and that her doll and herself were not dressed for traveling in day coaches. She crouched under the thick overcoat and hid the doll under the wide sleeve. One of the men brought her some candy, and in a few moments she forgot that it was strange, and even laughed when one of the men said something about lending her his rubber boots. She even went to sleep again, and awakened in the arms of Mr. Dooley, as he carried her up to the front door of a little house, where a kind, red-cheeked woman received her, and kissed her over and over again, while she tearfully listened to John's story of how she must have crossed that dreadful platform.

In a few minutes she was "togged up," and wondrously indeed, and was speeding across the hard frozen road behind two fast horses, with John clucking at them every now and then, and tucking her and the doll in the seat beside him. Very soon they crossed the old gray bridge, just as the sun showed himself above the hills, and the gray morning light grew wider and brighter as they drew up before the old red barns, turned the short corner at the lane, and arrived at grandpa's.

Great were the astonishment, the exclamations and tremendous joy!

"I reckon the best place for her is down at the station at the Center to meet her mother" said the old man. "I was just harnessing up to go and fetch them; the train will be along in half an hour."

And thus it happened that as poor Mrs. Edson, still pale and trembling, was helped down the steps to the platform, the first thing she saw was little Gracie, "togged out," as Mr. Dooley expressed it, in two or three flaring petticoats and several heavy shawls, and wrapped up besides that in a great fur robe, waving a very cold-looking doll over her head, and shouting just what the whistle had been blowing all night, and what Mr. Dooley's telegram had proclaimed:

"I's all right, mamma; I's all right!"

So it happened that Thanksgiving day at the Edson farm had a double meaning to all of those who sat about the long table and watched grandpa deftly carve the fat brown turkey. Outside, it had begun to snow, and as the children went to bed, through the frosty window they could see down the white valley and hear the river water thundering over the dam.

"There'll be coasting tomorrow," said Harry, "and grandpa's got a sled for me."

And little Gracie said that night, as her mother held her close in her arms: "I dess I won't walk in my sleep any more, mamma, dolly and I. We's tired of waking up and not knowing where we is."

And strange to say, Gracie never walked from that day to this, unless she knew exactly where she was going and was very wide-awake, indeed.

THEODORE THOMAS.

THEODORE THOMAS, the late Conductor of the celebrated Theodore Thomas Orchestra, wrote as follows concerning

Mason & Hamlin ORGANS

"The Mason & Hamlin Cabinet Organs are, in my judgment the best instruments of the class made either in this country or in Europe. They excel especially in richer, better qualities of tone. The recent improvements are of a great value. A wide acquaintance with musicians enables me to say that they generally regard the Mason & Hamlin as unequaled by any others."

(Signed) THEODORE THOMAS.

The Cabinet Organ was originated and perfected in the Mason & Hamlin Factory, and none of the instruments made in imitation of it have ever equaled it in quality, variety, and power.

IN HIS NAME

BY JOSIE BALLOU SHERMAN

"I want to make a big Thanksgiving dinner this year," said Mrs. Hamlin, "one that we will long remember, and one that our friends will keep as a bright spot in their memories."

"But, wife, we are invited to the elegant home of the Creightons. You certainly realize what that means to us in many ways—social distinction, a splendid dinner, stylish people and a lovely time."

"Yes, I know all that, too; but you know why we have been invited there. We have lived in this town for five years and it's only the last six months that Mrs. Creighton and her set have offered to make my acquaintance. You have made a 'hit', as they would say, have proved to be a successful practitioner, and will soon have a fine new residence that will enable us to reciprocate social favors. No, dear, while I appreciate the opportunity, I would much prefer to send our regrets and issue some invitations myself. There'll be enough left that I may invite to make a nice, congenial company."

"All right," said the doctor, "I am willing. We are a little crowded for room, but you don't need very much room to make things go. Do just as you like; invite whom you please; only let me know in time to change my office suit for my Sunday best."

With a parting kiss and a smile, the doctor left the house for an hour's work at his office.

Doctor and Mrs. Hamlin were comparative newcomers in the little city of Ogdon. They did not represent the old set—the set who were the "fust families", nor were they aliens, for they had lived in the place for five years,—long enough for the to see the downfall of several in the old set, due to fast living, profligacy and downright criminality.

In their early married life they had started at the foot of the ladder and had worked their way upward a step at a time, by strict economy and modest living, instead of beginning where their parents left off, or living beyond their means. They had bought the oldest house in Ogdon, a building surrounded by a nice plot of ground, and were occupying it until such time as they were able to build a new home. It was a roomy old brick structure, with open grates and deep windows.

Many friends had been made in the old town that were "true blue" and many pleasant hours had been spent in the old house by its new occupants. Time had demonstrated that the new doctor was a success, and many who had at first ignored the physician and his wife, now gladly welcomed them to their acquaintance and friendship. This was sweet; but for those dear ones who gave love and trust, who recognized in the newcomers kindred spirits, treating them as strangers in a strange land, far from the dear home ties, and opened their hearts and homes to them in sweet accord and true western style—for all those there was a warmer corner in the hearts of Dr. and Mrs. Hamlin than for all the rest.

It was two weeks before Thanksgiving. After the doctor left, Mrs. Hamlin sat before the blazing grate and thought out her plans. With her three children tucked away for the night, she had ample time to perfect them.

As she gazed into the glowing coals before her, a far-away look in her eyes, they suddenly grew soft and luminous as she murmured softly, "It shall be in His name."

So society, which is ever ready to worship success, was sent the regrets of Dr. and Mrs. Hamlin.

Dr. Hamlin thought he knew his wife but like many another man he found himself often mistaken. However, to please her fancy, everything good, wholesome and luxurious was provided for the Thanksgiving feast. The rooms of the old house were made to look like a chrysanthemum show. The table was resplendent in its best china and snowy cloth. Mrs. Hamlin was charmingly dressed in a new bright, but inexpensive gown, which she thought befitting the occasion.

The hour had arrived for the coming of the guests. The hostler had received his orders, on the sly, from Mrs. Hamlin, and had started forth, with the family carriage, to bring the guests to the feast. The doctor came into the room, dressed for the occasion, and looked with a critical eye around and seemed satisfied, until his eyes rested upon his wife. "Why are you not dressed in your filmy silk for this, our first fashionable dinner?", he asked. "Did you need a new gown?"

"No," said Mrs. Hamlin. "I had this bright, cheery-looking dress made, and liked it so well that I concluded to wear it. Don't you think it becoming?"

"Indeed it is; but it doesn't carry out the idea of your fashionable friends. 'When in Rome you must do as the Romans do.' I confess it suits me much better than their kind. I must go to the office for a half hour, but I'll be on hand to carve the turkey."

"Oh, how glad I am for once in my life, that he is gone!" said Mrs. Hamlin as the door closed behind the man, whom never a wife loved more dearly. A moment later a woman accompanied by a young, timid girl was ushered in by the door maid.

"Mrs. Sheldon, how good of you to come early. I know of no one who could assist me today so well as you. I certainly thank you."

"No thanks are necessary. I am only too glad to lend myself to such work."

Mrs. Sheldon was a preacher's widow, one of God's noblewomen—a woman whose life had been lived for the Master, and whose lot had been cast among the poor and lowly as well as with the rich and arrogant. Her heart's training had been along sympathetic lines and her mind's training qualified her to grasp the mental heights of the most learned. Her daughter was one of God's earthly creatures that, like a tender plant blighted by frost, had been impaired by the blight of disease, until the mind that remained was that of a child in a woman's body. She was bright and cheery in her way, with a trustful love which only angels know, and was the one great comfort of her mother's lonely life.

The carriage drove up and two people were assisted to the door, for the door maid, hostler and cook almost carried one of them. She was an old woman with white hair and a face which had a look of bitterness in it—a face that had not grown old gracefully, which was not softened by suffering, and which aroused pity. She was richly dressed, as was also her daughter, who was an imbecile. They were rich in this world's goods, but poor in their stock of love and friends and kindness. Dr. Hamlin had once said to his wife, "My dear, go visit Mrs. Tilson and her daughter, for while they are wealthy, they are poor in all that goes to make life bright and sunny," and she often went.

The next arrival was an old lady, who had a face as bright as the noonday sun. Her step was quick and firm, for one as old as she, and her hair was black at sixty-five. Her face had a sweet expression, as though something within was at work manufacturing sunshine. Her eyes—sad as it is to say it—were sightless. She had windows, but the shutters were drawn. It was a light that came from above that made this aged face so bright and attractive. For years this Christian woman had lived in darkness; but the light of the sun of righteousness yet illumined her life.

Mrs. Hamlin led the blind woman to a place by Mrs. Sheldon and said. "Mrs. Winton, here is one who will anticipate your every wish, and you will find in her kindred thoughts and feelings, Mrs. Sheldon, I place this guest in your care."

Many others came, some rich, and some poor, but all were of the "alone" class. There was a music teacher who kept bachelor's hall, and a young carpenter who was far away from home and friends. The last arrival was an old soldier, who came in an invalid's chair, attended by his daughter, a sweet and faithful slave for her adoring father.

Then the doctor came in, his face aglow in anticipation of coming festivities. As he looked, he thought some mistake had been made—then he knew all. A hearty welcome was given to each by a warm handshake. They knew that this man was their best friend and wise counsellor. The gladsome looks, the bright faces and the loving exclamation of blind Mrs. Tilson made the doctor's eyes moist with suppressed feeling. He looked for his wife, and when their eyes met, she was made the happiest woman in the world.

Dr. Hamlin, half carrying the cripple, led the way to the dining-room, followed by Mrs. Sheldon with the blind woman, the others following, Mrs. Hamlin herself wheeling the soldier's chair. Such a dinner was never served before. When all were filled and merriment reigned supreme the doctor proposed a toast to "The chief of entertainers—my wife". All agreed to this and the doctor himself responded in a manner becoming the time and place.

Then they returned to the parlor to hear the musician play the sweet songs of old. The tongue of the old soldier was loosened and tales of war and heroism delighted the listeners.

The time of parting came and one by one the guests were helped into the carriage by loving hands. The joy of the occasion was reflected in the face of the young hostess, who realized she had not only given pleasure to a few of the unfortunate of earth, but she knew she had the approval of her heavenly Father, who says something in his book about the "cup of cold water" given in his name.

Advance Society Letters.

BY J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS.

Two weeks ago there was a mistake in this page. I was made to say that one Advance Society rule was, to read five pages of history you were studying at school. The sentence should have been, "five pages every week of a history not studied at school." However, I have told you so often we don't count the history which you study at school, that I trust you saw the knothole in the sentence. (Ha! pretty good, eh? I think so.)

I have been sent a post card picturing the Palacio de Cobierno of Buenos Aires. It is a broad street, with handsome houses looking upon it, each of which, according to the card, has yellow awnings and a blue roof. The Advance Society is pleased to be noticed from South America.

"E. S. D." sends a picture of the public library of Grand Island, Neb; and M. L. Davis, an illustratio of the First Christian Church, Vinita, which used to be in the Indian Territory, but is now in the state of Oklahoma. The church is a brown building, rather high from the ground, though there are not nearly so many steps as that Kansas City church on Independence Boulevard has. However, those steps lead up to pretty high things, for I find that the Kansas City church gave $1,264.75 at the time of the special offering for California.

I am rather proud of Bentonville, just now, for of all the Arkansas churches, my town is one of the five which reached its full apportionment for home missions. The churches which did so are at Bentonville, Russellville, Stuttgart, Texarkana and Van Buren. Look at that list, and give it honorable respect! Oh, we have other things about Bentonville besides big red apples; there's a little religion here, too.

I told you recently that one of our Av. S. rules is to memorize a quotation each week from a good author; and, to show you that it doesn't consist in finding the easiest and shortest line in print, I copy this quotation from the eighth quarterly report of Sadie Evelyn Pugsley, Woodbine, Ia. (it is from Longfellow):

"As a fond mother when the day is o'er
Leads by the hand her little child to bed,
Half willing, half reluctant to be led,
And leaves his broken playthings on the floor
Still gazing at them thro' the open door,
Nor wholly reassured and comforted
By promises of others in their stead
Which, tho' more splendid may not please him more;
So nature deals with us, and taeks away
Our playthings one by one, and by the hand
Leads us to rest so gently that we go
Scarce knowing if we wish to go or stay,
Being too full of sleep to understand
How far th' unknown transcends the what we know."

Ruby Lacy Taylor, Pierce City, Mo.: "I have kept all the rules of the Av S. this quarter except once, as we were coming down from Rushville, Indiana; I was on the train all day, and I forgot to read my Scripture."

I have published in our department, letters from those who said that they had really disliked poetry and history until they had kept the Av. S. rules for two or three quarters, and that now they like both. Such evidences of the good done by the Av. S. always make me feel proud. Recently I received a letter from a girl stating that she had kept the Av. S. rules for several years, and was pleased with the effect of systematic work upon her habits; that she had decided to take up the Chautauqua course, to carry on a more definite course of study. The Av. S. is not an end in view, but a means to an end; if it leads any one to take up Chautauqua, or any kind of university work, we shall be proud, indeed, of having furnished the stepping-stone. I am a Chautauqua graduate, and I wish all my readers were, or would become graduates.

I have decided not to try to get up a Christmas tree for our missionary this year. A Christmas ree like the one we had last December, calls for a good deal of urging, and suggesting, and hinting for money, and, following upon the heels, or perhaps I should say, the freshly dried dishes) of the orphan's ice cream social, it gives an impression of one continual yearly cry for pennies. So if anybody wants to do anything in the way of brightening our missionary's Christmas by sending something to help her do more good in China, that is with them.

In this connection, the following little note from Edith Slightam, of Spokane, Wash., sounds jolly: "I enclose herewith P. O M. O. for $5 as a Christmas present for our little missionary Drusie. With regards to the Av. S. and Felix."

In the meantime, Shelbyville, Mo., remembers orphan Charlie: "My husband and I would like to add our mite to Charlie's Educational Fund; 25 cents; wish they were dollars instead of cents! God bless the orphan and the Av. S. Never mind who from!"

Glasgow, Mo., is alive, too: "One dollar for Charlie and Drusie."

"The Advance" is the name of the C. W. B. M. state paper of Missouri. Did they borrow the name from us. If so, they are welcome. If not, we beg to remind them that we came first, and they are still welcome.

The dollar which the Av. S. send the School of Evangelists, Kimberlin Heights, Tenn., will buy the material to furnish the students with bread for one meal. That meal as I find from the printed list sent me by President Johnson, is, or I should say, was supper, November 16. That school is very deserving, since it rests largely upon faith and works. The Av. S. has tried to help the school from time to time, for several years. It seems to me that the school ought, in a measure, to reciprocate our interest. I wonder if any of its pupils knows that there is such a thing in existence as the Av. S.? I wonder if any of the young men who ate supper on November 16, knew who furnished the bread? I trust so; and since there are so many of them, does it seem unreasonable to hope that at least one of them will write us a line of thanks?

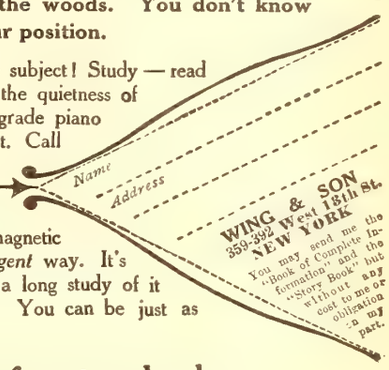
We do not do good for the thanks we may receive, or for the praise we hope to hear. But it makes us feel our efforts are rather more worth while, when we know that the one we seek to benefit, is conscious of our good intentions.

It has occasionally flitted through my mind that the various departments of religious business are not as sympathetic with each other as they should be. The idea that the Sunday-school work, or Endeavor work, or home, or foreign missions, or the C. W. B. M. or our benevolences, could have antagonistic purposes is preposterous, and such a contention (of course, there is no contention, but I am supposing a case) might show good business, perhaps, but mighty poor religion.

The Av. S. is a literary society for young and old. Still, we think it is doing good, since it encourages not only good reading, but missions and orphan work. And yet, strange as it may appear, very, very few of the men who are always sending me printed suggestions as to how I might invest a little to help our cause, have ever suggested by tone or word, that they knew there was an Advance Society. It is not best to be so swallowed up in one's own work, that he is blind to the fact that the man living in the next yard, is working for the very thing he is working for.

As for me, I am delighted when our Av. S. friends show interest in other good things. I give this from a personal letter from a lady writing in Kentucky on her eighty-sixth birthday; a lady who has helped with the Av. S. missionary and orphan from the first; I do not give her name, as she had no thought of this being printed:

"I feel that THE CHRSTIAN-EVANGELIST has made me a better Christian than I was before I began to read it. I am very fond of the Editor, and I wish I could take his hand in mine, and tell him how much he has done for me." Does that make me jealous of Dr. Garrison? Why, children, there isn't the least speck of jealousy on this place, unless it's in Felix. Sometimes he acts as if he might be jealous, but he's a cat.



Drusie Malott, North China: "Thank you for another kind message, and accompanying $5." (Since this was written, September 19, I've sent Drusie two ten-dollar drafts.) "Cordial greetings to orphan Charlie. I wonder if his name is among those whose addresses I have?" (This illustrated the point I was hammering at; our missionary is naturally interested in our orphan. Now, if Charlie has the right stuff in him, he'll write to Drusie and send his address.) "Also cordial greetings to esteemed friends whose RX THE REMEDY:—Educate yourself on the subject! Study—read—Read more—Study more. Then listen in the quietness of your own parlor to the tone of the highest grade piano you can get, but without agreeing to purchase it. Call in all those musical friends who you know are not under past obligations to any piano dealers or friends of dealers. Resolve you will study attentively piano tone and will be deaf, while studying, to the magnetic talk and persuasiveness of salesmen. This is the intelligent way. It's the way you planned your new home. You made a long study of it calmly, thoroughly, and you became quite an expert. You can be just as expert about pianos.

We are willing to send you free two books:

One officially entitled "The Book of Complete Information about Pianos."

YOU NEED THIS BOOK of 156 Pages handsomely bound, if you ever intend to buy a piano, no matter what make.

It tells how to test a piano and how to tell good from bad; what causes pianos to get out of order. It makes the selection of a piano easy. If read carefully it will make you an expert judge of piano-tone, of action, workmanship and of durability.

It tells everything that any one can possibly want to know about pianos; gives a description of every part of the piano, how put together and all the processes of manufacture. Gives description of the new invention for aiding learners to play called THE NOTEACCORD (endorsed by Paderewski and other great pianists). It explains Agents and Dealers' Methods and Devices.

It tells about the very first piano; the qualities of labor, the felt, ivories and woods used in every high-grade piano and compares high qualities with the cheaper kind (used in inferior pianos). Describes what constitutes a musical-piano-tone, and in fact is a complete encyclopedia.

You need and should have THIS EDUCATIONAL BOOK to thoroughly inform you whenever CONFUSED ABOUT PIANOS.

Its scores of illustrations (all devoted to piano construction) are not only interesting but are instructive; to children as well as to adults.

You will certainly learn a great deal about pianos that you could not hear of or read ANYWHERE ELSE, for it is absolutely the only book of its kind ever published. Nevertheless we send it free.

The other book is also copyrighted but is a short story named "JOHN HONEYWELL'S REASONS." The story of an average American family which was ALL CONFUSED about Pianos—it is interesting, readable and prettily illustrated—gives a little hint of a love affair which the piano helped along, as many pianos have done.

These two books cost quite a sum to produce, print, bind, illustrate and mail. Upwards of 400,000 have been issued and without a single exception have been highly commended.

SO FAR not one word about ourselves. We are and have been the manufacturers of THE FAMOUS WING PIANO for the past 39 years!

We have supplied over 40,000 American Homes with WING PIANOS.

We refer to Banks, Governors of many States and Judges; to Merchants, Conservatories of Music, Singers and Professors of Music. We have been students of vibration and of musical tone and strength of materials during all these 39 years. The first patent issued to our Mr. Wing, Senior, for improvement on pianos was in 1876 and other improvements have been invented since at the average rate of more than one yearly. These facts prove our skill and long experience, but would not be mentioned if we did not wish to show you that we know the piano subject as few others have had the opportunity; for 39 years is a long—long time for a business house to "live and learn" and constantly prosper.

kind words, as printed in the Av. S. page, have brought cheer to dark South Chih-li. All goes well with me, by His grace. I am brim full now of 'big meeting,' and I want to write you about it. On the first day, the wife of our beloved Chang, took a public stand for Jesus, and her sins were forgiven. We do praise God, for now she is a real helpmate for her faithful, zealous husband who is now on fire for souls. I do wish you could see these two. I never saw any one more filled with the joy of the Lord than teacher Chang; and his wife is such a strong, intelligent, fine-looking woman. They have two precious little boys, the image of their father. I have just been fanning the smaller one, as he slept on the floor by my chair. The Chinese can sleep anywhere. They often lie on the ground with nothing under them—just the one suit that they wear, day and night. . . Well, my heart was just overflowing—you see I have wandered a little—when they sang "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name"; overflowing with praise to God for the way he has blessed some. But I was full of pain when I saw the face of one of our former teachers, who drifted away to become a victim of the terrible opium grip. For some time he has been keeping an opium den, but he had to close it several weeks ago, thanks to a petition signed by many missionaries, which led the Emperor to issue an edict against the opium traffic. Well this wandering soul was presented and another who has been having a hard fight against opium and self. They have many fine qualities if they could only free themselves from this evil. We have two elders to ordain; our beloved teacher, Chang, and Brother Li, our Kuang Ping hoien gate keeper and choir master."

Sorry I can't give more of this letter just now. I don't know what a hoien gate gate keeper is, but I fancy I'm pretty well up on choirs

Thanksgiving greetings to everybody.

Elizabeth Cochrane's Thanksgiving

BY SERINA CLARKE.

It was the morning of Thanksgiving Day, and the sort of a day which usually has the effect of making one glad to live; when sunshine and frost happily unite and blend their force, strength and vigor to produce the perfection of early winter.

But Elizabeth Cochrane was not exactly in harmony with the nature nor the perfection of this Thanksgiving Day, for her sweet, serious face was clouded, and there was a suspicion of dimness in her blue eyes as she overheard little Dorothy confidentially declare to her doll that "sister is cross; cross as 'most anythin'."

Sister did not mean to be cross, however; yet she was in a retrospective mood this morning, and instead of "counting blessings," as befitted the day, I am afraid she was busily enumerating her grievances. And her thoughts had traveled back to her college days, which had been so brief, when she was so happy in all the associations connected with her school life.

The cause of her disappointment is an old story: Elizabeth's father had met with business reverses, and her frail mother was no longer able to bear the strain of the varied household duties nor give the necessary care required by the younger children. So with the termination of Elizabeth's sophomore year her college days came to an end, at least for a few years. And her dreams and hopes for the future had been so bright and alluring.

While she dearly loved the home folks, and performed her duties cheerfully and uncomplainingly, yet to-day she had allowed her mind to wander away to the scenes of those short, happy years at college. And in fancy she saw the girls walking briskly arm in arm across the campus, and could hear their merry chatter and gay laughter. She saw them on Sunday evenings around the open fireplace in Bradley Hall, and while watching the great logs blaze and sputter they softly sang in the dim light. Later, on graduation day, she saw them in their caps and gowns claim the reward of their four years' work, and she—Elizabeth Cochrane—could not be of their number.

Life of late had seemed very commonplace and unpresentful to Elizabeth, and in this mood she almost questioned if after all she had very much for which to be thankful.

There was Mary B., for instance—there were so many Marys among Elizabeth's friends that Mary Burtis's name had been shortened to Mary B., and Mary Grant was known as Mary G., and so on down the alphabet wherever there chanced to be a Mary.

"Mary B. has everything, absolutely everything that can possibly make a girl happy," Elizabeth thought; "she certainly can celebrate Thanksgiving Day properly."

And yet Elizabeth did not know about Mary's wayward brother, whose wrongdoing was breaking the hearts of his family.

But the postman's whistle brought Elizabeth to her feet, and she smiled as she recognized the handwriting of her roommate in the days which now seemed so far away. And she was a Mary too.—Mary L.

Elizabeth opened the letter eagerly, for she loved her friend, and she liked to keep in touch with college life.

"I am sending you a story to read, Elizabeth," wrote Mary L., "written by Margaret Barbour, an alumna of our own dear college, which fact adds greatly to its interest to you and me. I am sending it to you because I think it is so beautiful, and I know that you will get a new inspiration for your work in the beauty and sweetness of this little story. And I am sure, dear Elizabeth, you will glean a thought or two, as I did, to help you along in this practical old world of ours."

Elizabeth read the story with interest. It was short, but most tender and sweet in the telling:

In accordance with the will of an eccentric relative, a very beautiful and valuable picture had been left to a young woman with the proviso that when she met anyone to whom it would bring greater pleasure and happiness she must then part with it. The young woman, Lois by name, thought that the picture would always be hers, for surely nobody could ever appreciate its wonderful beauty as she did.

But one day, after the picture had been in her possession a long time, a friend came to her in great need and distress, and Lois could not help her. That night in a dream an angel appeared to Lois, bearing aloft a shield on which was engraved in shining letters, "Happy are they who make happiness for others." The shield and the words thereon faded away, but the angel remained, and gradually in place of the shield Lois recognized with joy her own beautiful picture. The subject and the marvellous coloring seemed to appeal to her as never before, and she wondered why the real charm and beauty of it had been hidden from her so long. Then across the middle of the picture appeared again the shining words: "Happy are they who make happiness for others."

The next day, and for many succeeding days, Lois' dream seemed constantly recurring to her mind; and the needy condition of her friend disturbed her, also. Still the two seemed not to be associated together, until one evening the thought came, "Why, the value of my picture, my beautiful picture, would relieve my friend of all her trouble and anxiety."

And by the sale of the picture Lois fulfilled the condition imposed upon her when it became hers. It cost her a long and bitter struggle, for nobody knew how much it meant to her to part with it. But she learned the beauty of loving sacrifice.

Elizabeth Cochrane read the story through, and then sat back in her chair and thought it over. After a time she picked up the letter and the story, which had slipped to the floor, and again read them both; and as she did so a new light came into her face, and new resolves took form in her heart.

So Elizabeth spent a happy Thanksgiving Day after all, for she had begun to learn one of life's greatest lessons, that it is by making happiness for others we obtain content.—Epworth Herald.

Our Budget

the Disciples of Christ to-day. Joseph A. Serena was elected president; Thomas Wood, of Tully, vice-president; and C. R. Stauffer, secretary and treasurer. Among the other pastors participating will be those at Pompey, South Butler, Throopville, Brewerton and Richland.

—F. F. Ray, of Downs, Kan., after preaching one Lord's day for the South Omaha church, was extended a unanimous call to enter upon the pastorate there, January 1. Our brethren have a fine lot and stone to erect a $10,000 building. The church at Downs will want a minister to succeed Brother Ray.

—A. W. Kokendoffer visited Poplar Bluff on his way from the Christian Endeavor convention, recently, and reports the work on the new Christian church there progressing rapidly. The tile roof is on and lends a most pleasing appearance. The building will cost about $18,000, and will be much superior to anything we have in Southeast Missouri. E. F. Fenstermacher is the minister.

—The men of the church are most cordially invited to attend the Foreign Missionary Rallies. The King's business needs the aid of the King's men. Women attend as a matter of course, and are welcome. But the men are needed also. Most men can attend if they will. They will attend if they think the Rally worth while. Men attend political meetings of their party. They can attend a Missionary Rally. They are urged to be present and to assist.

—J. Crockett Mullins has closed his work with the church at McAlester, Okla., and is to give his full time to evangelizing. He had seventy-three additions to the membership at McAlester during the past year, besides which he held a short meeting at Porum, organizing a church with twenty-five members. His congregation contributed $450 to missions. Those desiring his services for evangelistic work may address him either at Mutual or Hartshorne.

—F. F. Walters has entered upon his second year's work with the Central Church, Springfield, M.., and never in its history, according to one of its officers, was the church so prosperous, the work so united and the spirit so good. With 500 added, all debts paid, the building repaired at large expense, the outlook certainly is bright. Brother Walters has been asked to remain indefinitely, his salary increased $300, and he and his wife presented with special tokens of appreciation.

—Several times in the past we have had inquires from brethern who have come in contact with our Dunkard brethren, as to whether Mr. Campbell did not, at one time, advocate, or at least claim apostlic authority for, trine immersion, and we have as often explained that such was not the case. There was a typographical error in one of the editions of his debate with Mr. Rice, we believe, which contained the word "trine" before "immersion". But this mistake was afterwards corrected and explained by Mr. Campbell himself.

—J. C. Howell will close his work at Weston, Mo., January 1, after which time he can be had either for pastoral or evengelistic work. Brother Howell has been twenty-five years in the ministry, and during his present pastorate has received 203 new members, held seven protracted meetings, completed a new parsonage and rebuilt the church, while nearly $12,000 was the amount of money raised by his congregation. His successor will find things in good condition, but no one need apply who will not move to Weston.

—It is a small band of workers we have at Wynne, Ark. There are only seven of them, but six of the members at Paragould will increase the number on Thanksgiving day. A lot has been purchased at a cost of $1,000, and the brethren and sisters are striving to make it possible to build in the spring. They are to give a public dinner on Thanksgiving day, and will be glad to receive the price—thirty-five cents—from any one who feels enough interest in the work but is not able to attend. Mr. Osborne or L. D. Rolfe may be addressed.

—The Foreign Society is holding Missionary Rallies in different parts of the country. Stephen J. Corey and F. E. Hagin and J. C. Archer are in the South. A. McLean and C. S. Weaver and Dr. R. J. Dye are in the North. A Rally is a national convention in miniature. Those who attend all day get more information and more inspiration out of a Rally than out of a convention. The maps, charts and literature are worth going a long way to see. The exhibit is one of the most instructive features of the service.

—Why is it that dates are made for state and other meetings that conflict with the date of the national convention? A minister who may wish to attend his own state's convention, as well as our national convention, can not get across half of our big country in one or two days' time. If there be any real reason for this conflict of dates we do not know it. We had to call attention to similar conflicts in important meetings at the time of our national congress. While no one has a higher regard for the work of state conventions and many other of our meetings, we think it is a serious mistake that any dates shall be selected that would conflict with the largest possible attendance at meetings which may be called national.

—F. E. Meigs, who had expected to visit St. Louis before his return to China, writes us that on account of the urgency of the work in China in connection with the Union Christian College of which he is the president, he has decided to return to China at once, and will sail from San Francisco, on December 10. He says: "I have been exceedingly fortunate in securing J. P. Lichtenberger, pastor of Lenox Avenue Union Church, New York City, to take up the work of raising funds for the Kuling School. The work is well begun and with Brother Lichtenberger's special adaptability in such a work, and the sympathy and co-operation of the brethern, I am sure success will yet crown the effort to establish, on a permanent basis, a school in China for the children of foreign missionaries." Brother Lichtenberger's address is 2372 Seventh Avenue, New York City.
